The Blackstone Guano Company commenced the manufacture of their celebrated brands of Fertilizers in 1884.

Since that time the demand for them has steadily increased every year, and we believe that the reason for this increased demand for the goods is due to the fact that all of these Brands have every year exceeded their guaranteed analysis in commercial value. For instance, the guaranteed analysis on—

Blackstone Standard	is	$15.20,	but it actually runs	$16.54
Alliance	"	15.20,	" " "	17.71
Hard Cash	"	16.70,	" " "	18.96
Bellefonte	"	21.20,	" " "	23.59

This shows that the average excess on the above Brands is $2.12½ per ton, which is not only greater than any other factory gives you, but is more than we have ever given before.

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

The editor has been so pressed by routine duties that he has had no time up to the present to discuss any of the doings or undoings of the General Conference. But in passing around the last two or three weeks he has found that many brethren are not informed as to what took place in regard to a number of matters, and so as opportunity presents itself he will set forth a number of things as they appeared to him. Of course some persons who were there did not see things as he saw them, but he must tell them as he understood them, and if any other ~~other~~ did not understand them the same way, it will not be strange if there should be discussion. Well, if there should be discussion it would not be sinful. Discussion is not heathenish, undemocratic or unchristian. It is not American, Methodist or Christian. The right to discuss is American, Methodist and Christian. Discussion, in itself, has no quality. It is either bad or good. The spirit and manner of discussion may be bad or good, Christian or unchristian, but much care must be exercised at this point in passing judgment. Persons are sometimes accused by careless and indiscriminating thinkers of having a bad spirit because the facts stated are distasteful, and of necessity greatly affect our opinion of persons involved in the transactions narrated. But this is true of all history, whether of a nation, a Church, or an individual. The story of men, "Let us have peace," "Let discussion cease," has little effect when the persons so clamoring have just delivered themselves of harsh and censorious judgments of the character and motives of others and when the strength of the men crying peace lies in the ignorance of the facts by the great body of Church or State. This editor, therefore, shall not hesitate to state facts, and to discuss them. He desires to do so in a Christian spirit. If any man accuses him of a bad spirit because the facts are so distasteful to him that his judgment is warped by his feelings, it will not affect the spirit of the writer; it will not make his spirit bad because some brother says it is bad; it will simply show the brother's inability to separate feelings from facts. The above general statement is made in reference to the various articles which may appear in this and future issues.

There have been two great issues before the Virginia Conference for the last four years. One of these is a time limit to the continuous service of a man in the Presiding Eldership. The Conference has said in the plainest terms that it does not want the same men to assist in the making of the appointments longer than eight years successively. If this means anything at all, it means that the Conference has come to this conclusion from experience. It has had men in the eldership longer than eight years, some as long as fifteen and twenty years, and the results have not been satisfactory to the great majority of the Conference. By the press, by discussion on the Conference floor, by vote, this opinion has been expressed. But the Bishops have paid little attention to the wishes of the Conference, and men still remain in the eldership after the great majority of the Conference have said openly that they do not want them to aid any longer in the making of the appointments. Why they remain there is not the question. Many reasons could be advanced, but the great question is one of fact. The Bishops know the wishes of the Conference, and the elders know the wishes of the Conference, but those wishes do not prevail. Now these are simple facts. Everybody knows them who knows the Conference history. The statement of these facts shows no spirit, good or bad.

The memorial from the Virginia Conference on this subject was referred to the Committee on Itinerancy. The Virginia representative on that committee was Bro. James C. Reed. He reported that the committee was virtually unanimous in the view that no man should be appointed to the eldership longer than eight years, and that the majority of the committee thought that four years was long enough. The objection was raised in the committee that there was no need for such legislation; that the discussion four years ago had done its work, and the Bishops had not reappointed the old elders. This was the general statement in the committee. The attitude of the committee as a whole was almost unanimously in favor of the principle of the memorial of our Conference, but a majority of the committee thought that four years successively was long enough, and brought in a report limiting the time of service to four years successively, except for weighty reasons. The balance of the committee agreed at one time to bring in a report for eight years successively, but finally decided that no law was necessary, but the Bishops could follow out the sentiment of the Church. The minority, therefore, brought in a report non-concurring with the memorial, meaning that no action should be taken in the matter. This view of the minority prevailed by a vote of two to one. But this vote did not mean, as some have thought, that the General Conference favored the appointment of men to the eldership more than eight years successively. Very many of the leading men thought that four years should be the limit, most of the Conference thought that eight years was long enough, but the great majority of the Conference did not see any necessity for any legislation, as they said the Bishops had settled the matter without legislation. Men who voted to make no change in the law expressed astonishment and decided disapproval when told that in our Conference men were reappointed twelve, sixteen and twenty years, but said they did not think a law should be made for a few Conferences; that the Conference itself should take it in hand and express itself in such a way that no preacher would be willing to receive the appointment unless compelled to do so by the Bishop.

The above are facts as far as I was able to gather them. They may not be all of the facts. Some other man may be able to add to them. But they tell what I understood to be the meaning of the action of the General Conference. After a careful study of the situation, I am convinced that the sentiment of the Conference was overwhelmingly against the idea of continuous service in the eldership year after year, as it has existed with us, and it is doubtful whether any other Conference has any such experience to relate as we have. By this action is meant that each Annual Conference and the Bishop presiding must settle this question. If the Annual Conference does not want life timers in the eldership it should let both the Bishops and the incumbents know it, and if neither the Bishop nor the incumbents realize that the Conference is in earnest, then steps should be taken that would demonstrate beyond question that the ministry and laity of the Conference feel that some consideration should be given to their views on the question of what men shall assist in making appointments, which are of such vital importance to the welfare of both ministry and laity.

The discussion of the question came

CAPTAIN RICHARD IRBY.

The death of Captain Richard Irby came as a surprise to most of our people. The suddenness of it was a shock to all. He had gone in and out among us so long that we expected him to cease his work gradually. Indeed, at the last meeting of the Randolph-Macon Board, on June 18th, he seemed to be as well as usual, and spoke with force and vigor on the various questions before the Board. He made several speeches on various phases of the question of reducing the tuition fees, and supported with heartiness the proposition to give free tuition as soon as the endowment of the college had been increased by $300,000. Still, he felt that the time was short, and so requested the Board to arrange to give his work to a younger man.

The tribute given below from the Times is so full that little more is necessary to be said about his life. He was a true man in all the relations of life—in the college as a student, in the home, in the army, in the college as an officer, and in the Church as a earnest Christian worker for the Master's kingdom. In every place he had the respect and confidence of his fellow-men. He was a favorite son of the Southside, and the people of his native county felt great pride in his career. He was buried in the cemetery at Blackstone on Saturday afternoon. In accordance with his wishes, nothing but the beautiful ritual of the Church was used. His pastor, Rev. J. S. Hunter, conducted the services, assisted by Revs. T. P. Epes, of the Presbyterian Church, and George F. Green and James Cannon, Jr. The report from the Times follows:

Richard Irby, youngest son of Edmund and Frances Irby, of Nottoway, was born at Poplar Hill, the second home of the family, in Nottoway, September 28, 1825.

His father, a farmer of large means, died in the prime of life, leaving a widow and six children, all under age but one. Fortunately, the oldest was eminently fitted to fill the headship in business matters, while the mother did all a mother could do in moulding the minds and characters of her children. After all the debts were paid, the family had a competency which was sufficient to give the minor children good educational advantages.

At the tender age of fourteen, the subject of this sketch entered Randolph-Macon College, and was a student at that institution for five years, where he was graduated with the degree of A. B., along with the late Bishop.

Our civil war, beginning in 1860, cost us $2,500,000 a day for five years. It cost us in actual direct outlay $3,400,000,000, and counting destruction to property north and south $10,000,000,000 would hardly cover the cost, a sum representing nearly one fourth the entire valuation of the United States in 1860. Single battles in that war cost in lives up into the thousands: Bull Run, 5,000; Shiloh, 21,000; Gettysburg, 55,000, on both sides; Vicksburg, 31,000; the Wilderness, 38,000; Stone's Run, 37,000. The entire number of northern soldiers killed was not far from 350,000. If every man killed in the civil war had had a private funeral, the hearse would have made a solid line from New York to San Francisco. Add to these killed all the losses incidental in the families that were bereaved and beggared and you have only one of the awful chapters which war has always written in the history of a sinful world. In the last century it is estimated that Christian nations have destroyed $20,000,000,000 worth of property and killed 5,000,000 men. Put these men in single file and they would make a procession that would stretch clear across the United States from Portland, Me., to Los Angeles, Cal., and it would take them two months to march past a given point, marching day and night without rest. [These figures have been compiled by Hon. Frank A. Vanderlip, assistant secretary of the United States treasury, and George B. Waldron.]

"And yet these statistics of war do not begin to tell the story of the brutal education of men made in God's image. The sorrow and the anguish and the havoc wrought by all the long list of succeeding events that follow every war are simply appalling. This resort to brute force inevitably leads to horrors that are indescribable in their effect upon body and soul. Read the detailed accounts of some of the battles recently fought in the Philippines and South Africa, and we are sickened by the mere reading.

"But some one may say: 'Some wars are surely justifiable. Those wars that were waged for human freedom, like our own for independence, and, again, in order to defend the Union—these wars must have been necessary and right.'

"But even if we grant that certain wars like these have better reason for being waged than other wars, war itself as a method of settling disputes is never the Christian way of doing it. In other words, in any war that the world ever saw, one nation or another, one side or another, was to blame for resorting to war. It is easy to see that a nation or a person unjustly assailing another is more to blame than the one assaulted and under certain well known and undisputed conditions a nation or an individual might be justified in protecting self against assault, even as we would be justified in resisting the murderous attack of an insane man or a mad dog if we or our dear ones were in danger from their attacks.

"But it is doubtful if the Christian nations have ever done all in their power to avoid war, even war of the kind that might be called a war of self defense. The more Christian the nations become the less and less even outward excuse for war can be found. England was too far advanced along the line of Christian knowledge and training to provoke the war with her colonies. It was an inexcusable war from her standpoint. England today has no righteous excuse worth naming for carrying on the war in South Africa. It is a monstrous proposition to advance that in this age of the world, with all England's Christian knowledge and training by the Prince of Peace, there was a necessity to precipitate war in order to settle the comparatively unimportant differences that existed between her and the Dutch republics. Granting that the injustice complained of was all it has been claimed, still it could not by any possibility justify war in the sight of God or men. Can we imagine Christ exhorting his disciples to wage war for such a cause? It is easier for us to imagine him saying again as he said when on earth, 'Turn the other cheek.' It would seem that Christ's teaching meant anything, even loss of life, rather than a resort to force, to brute violence, in order to gain our ends.

"War has changed the history of the world more than all its inventions or its arts. It has kept the world back in barbarism and educated it in cruelty. It has wiped out whole peoples living in a chosen life of peace. It has carried wrong and sin and shame and loss into countless homes and hearts. It is a thing abhorred of God and directly contrary to the teachings of his Son, the Prince of Peace. To speak and sing and act in its behalf is to keep alive a spirit that ought to be no more a part of the civilized life of humanity. God speed the day when the battleship shall rust at the wharf, and the big guns shall be silent so long that the birds shall build their nests in them; when the vast armies that stand as a drain to a country's real need shall be sent home to till the fields and fill the shops of useful industry; when the fabulous sums now spent by the world to equip and maintain its navies and armies shall be used in producing food and clothing and the things that humanity needs for its comfort and progress; when the whole earth shall be filled not with the 'glory of war,' for the 'glory of war' is the glory of the lowest pit, but with the glory of the Lord, who came into this world to teach men that they were brethren and ought to live together in love."

There was a good deal of discussion over this talk of the president's, and the college was divided in its sentiments. But there was a growing number of students who began to look at the subject as the president did. Among those was Edward. There was something in his heart and mind that responded with real feeling to the president's presentation.

Willis had begun to fall back into his old ways again. There was no excuse for him. But Edward bore with everything up to a certain point with almost Christian patience. Willis had not begun his former card playing in the room, but Edward soon learned that he was meeting almost every night either with one of the boys in the upper hall or at the old society rooms down town. He did not seem to be actually drunk when he came in very late from these occasions, but Edward knew he had been drinking, and the first time he noticed it he spoke to him about it.

"You remember, Willis, what you agreed to do if I came back? You promised to let the stuff alone."

"Well, haven't I?" asked Willis, with some indignation.

"No, you know you've been drinking lately."

"Nothing but a little beer," replied Willis doggedly.

"You've been drinking," repeated Edward slowly. "And you know one condition of my coming back was that you let every kind of drink alone."

Willis went over to the window and began to whistle. Edward boiled up suddenly, as he did once in a great while.

"If you break your word with me again, you know what I shall do," he exclaimed, and his usually quiet, almost stolid, face fairly blazed with passion.

"All right," said Willis briefly, not turning around. Then after a moment of silence he faced Edward with a queer look.

I may not stay in college another year. I've got a plan for the future that may mean leaving here for good. So I won't bother you very much longer."

And then, to his great surprise, Willis sat down near his table and said:

"Ned, old boy, I have made a big fool of myself, but I'm going to turn over a new leaf, and I don't want you to go back on me. You won't, will you?"

"You've turned over so many new leaves that I don't have much faith in you."

"I don't blame you, Ned. But honest ginger, I mean it this time. Want to see what I can do? Just watch me for the rest of the term."

Edward made no answer, and Willis opened his books and began to study.

It was after this scene that Edward received a great surprise in the shape of a remarkable letter from Mrs. Preston.

Willis had been even better than his word. He had cut entirely loose from his fast friends, had stopped going out nights, and to the real astonishment of Edward he had applied himself with zeal to his studies. Not a man in all Hope could have excelled Willis at that time for real, downright, hard, faithful study. He was agreeable, too, so much so that Edward began to have a pleasure in anticipating the intervals between study and recreation, periods when he could talk with Willis and especially hear him describe events in his short army experience. Willis was a good talker, and when he chose to do so he knew how to make himself very agreeable. The girls, with most of whom Willis was a great favorite, always spoke of his manners as fascinating, and he seemed to be especially gifted in this direction during that short time immediately following his last talk with Edward and his promise of reformation.

Edward opened Mrs. Preston's letter to him, expecting a line or two of thanks for his continued influence over Willis. He had received a long and very gratefully worded letter at the time he went back to room with Willis and one or two short letters since that time.

But he had read only a short distance when he was startled by some news that upset him completely:

I feel that it is only right to tell you something of Willis' future plans, even if he has not confided everything to you. And I am quite sure he will forgive me if I speak a word in his behalf.

It may be no secret to you that Willis has always thought a great deal of your sister Freddie. Before he sailed for the Philippines he confessed to me that he loved her and hoped some day to marry her. When he was at home, after the loss of his arm, I found this feeling had undergone no change, unless to become even more emphatic. You know he carried that little volume of poems with him through all the fighting around Manila. There is no question that his feeling for your sister is more than a fancy. It is a real, deep, honorable feeling that I am sure has helped to keep him from much that is evil.

Now what I am about to say may take you by surprise; but for the sake of Willis I pray that you will not dismiss it as unworthy of your thought.

Willis is determined to leave college this summer and enter a business to which his uncle in New York has invited him. It is really a very good position for a young man, with an assured salary and a prospect of promotion. Willis is competent to do the work required. My brother wants him to become a member of the firm eventually.

This is what I hesitate to tell you, but it is what I want you to consider calmly. Willis wants your sister to leave college, to marry him and go to New York to live. Foolish as this sounds at first, as I have already told him, there is something to be said for it. In the first place, Willis is older than the average college student, and so is your sister. The loss of the college course is a serious thing to consider, but other young people have occasionally done this, and they have had happy, useful homes. Of course there is the matter of your sister's feeling. I know nothing about her thought of Willis. Probably you do. My only thought of the matter is that if she does care enough for my son to become his wife and leave her college course you will not dissuade her from it. Somehow I feel as if Willis' future depended on the wife he has. If he should be disappointed here, there is no telling—

There was a step outside, the door opened, and Willis entered.

"Hello, old man! What are you reading?" he asked as he noted Edward

"Hello, old man, what are you reading?" standing by the window with the letter in his hand.

"A letter from your mother. Want to hear it?" asked Edward grimly.

"Yes, go ahead," replied Willis, carelessly sitting down at his own table and putting his feet up on it, as his custom was.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

THE PRESIDING ELDERSHIP.

up in the evening, and no report was given in the Daily Advocate. The speech of Bro. Reed was reproduced by him and published in the Danville Methodist, and is copied from that paper. The discussion was continued in the morning, and Bro. Lipscomb made a speech, which is also given below:

SPEECH OF REV. JAMES C. REED.

I am a presiding elder and the son of a presiding elder. My father was a presiding elder for twenty years, but not continuously, and died believing that a limit should be put upon this office.

I have had some experience in this office and desire to present my reasons for favoring the limiting of the term of a presiding elder. These reasons are:

I. That continuance in the office of presiding elders does not give ability and increased fitness for that office, but tends, more and more, to disqualify and unfit for the proper performance of the duties of that office. If one has not the qualification and fitness when appointed, he will never get it by continuance in office. You have known examples where each year gave evidence of increased unfitness.

(1) The claim is often put forth that it takes a man four years "to get the hang of things" in the presiding eldership before he can do his best work. There is no foundation for such a claim. The facts do not bear out the statement. Presiding elders do their best work, make their best appointments, the first term. Any man who has been a member of a Conference from ten to twenty years and is yet so ignorant of the work and the men that it will take him four years to get the hang of things in the presiding eldership office is not fitted for the itinerant ministry.

(2) The same rule does not apply when dealing with men in the itinerant ministry as in dealing with merchandise. Continuance in the same business may and will give facility in merchandise, but not in the office of presiding elder. The reasons are plain; they grow out of the very human nature with which God has endowed every man.

(3) Presiding elders are men of like infirmities with other men. They deal with men of like infirmities. In dealing with men—with the preachers on their districts—they are compelled to form judgments, and have preferences and prejudices growing out of the judgments formed. These necessarily influence them. I am not charging them with wrong in forming these judgments and being influenced by them. This is human. It cannot be otherwise. Each year these judgments, preferences and prejudices for or against men, either correct or not, grow. They become stronger and stronger. They influence the best of men.

The presiding elders have necessarily been brought under obligation to the preachers. Some men are more congenial than others. Some are more hospitable and ready to accommodate than others. Some are so situated as to be able to render greater kindness and service than others. As is natural, strong friendships are formed, and every man desires to do all he can for his friends. And thus the longer a man remains in the office the more his hands are tied by the obligations under which he has been brought. He must be more or less than a man not to feel and be influenced by these things. His predilections and desire to help certain men will be great. Change from one district to another does not mend matters. The appointments of the same men are to be dealt with all the time. The same problems, preferences and prejudices will arise. What is the result? The longer a man stays in the office the stronger will be the desire and inclination to take care of certain men—to look after his special friends. This is natural; it cannot be helped.

But what becomes of the great and only question which should be asked by Bishops, presiding elders and preachers, What is best for the Church? Not where I would like to go, but where I ought to go. To please a man by his appointment, when he is not suited to the place, is to damage both the man and the Church. When you do the best thing for the Church, you always do the best thing for the man.

And so I think that it is clear that continuance in the office of presiding elder does not give increased fitness and qualification, but tends more and more to disqualify and unfit him for the difficult, delicate and responsible duties of that office. It cannot be otherwise. It would be to reverse the very nature which God has given us.

II. The continuance of the same men in this office is a reflection upon the ability and fitness of other members of the Conference to fill this office. It implies distrust of the other members of the Conference. It is to say, and to keep on saying, that there are only 9, 10, 12 or 20 members of the Conference, as the case may be, who have any fitness and can be trusted in this office. It discounts the qualification of others to fill this office. Such a state of affairs is a reproach and stigma on any Conference. It is branding them as incapable of doing this work. Such a stigma and reproach is galling. It creates widespread dissatisfaction. This dissatisfaction is not the result of the disappointment of a few men who may be ambitious to fill this office, but grows out of the fact that it manifests distrust of the others, and proclaims them unfit for this office. If there ever was a day when but few men were capable of performing the duties of this office that day has passed.

III. The continuance of the same men in this office becomes a reflection upon, a reproach to, the men themselves who continue in the office. How often, as an Annual Conference session is approaching, or when the preachers have come together, do you hear questions like this: "Do you think Bro. So and So will be continued in the presiding eldership? His term is out this year." And the answer comes: "Oh, yes, of course; what would you do with him if you take him out? He is not fit for anything else." And I hold that a man who has remained in the office of presiding elder until he is unfit for anything else is not fit for that office. He has lost his grip and power. Now any law that allows a man in the itinerant ministry to remain in an office until he becomes in the eyes of the preachers and the Bishops and laymen unfit for other work should be changed for the men's sake who are in the office. It will be a kindness to them; it will increase their usefulness. Have not Bishops when urged by preachers and laymen to put new men in the presiding eldership said frankly, "I can use the men you want put in most anywhere, but what am I to do with these men if I take them out of the presiding eldership?" The implication is clear that the Bishop did not know what to do with these perpetual elders.

The reason of the Bishop's trouble and perplexity is plain. These brethren have been honored and useful men. The Bishop does not like to offend them by sending them to a circuit; they are not in demand on the stations, and so "men may come and men may go, but these stay in forever." So I say that continuance in this office becomes a reflection and a reproach upon the men themselves. It brands them as inefficient anywhere else. Therefore for these men's sake there should be a limit put upon the office.

NOTE.—Just at this point the time limit, fifteen minutes, was reached, and the speech came to a close. But had I been permitted to go on I would have said:

IV. The continuance of the same men in this office prevents our Bishops from doing their best work for the Church in the appointment of preachers. It gives the Bishop a one-sided and unfair, and often unjust, view of the Conference and the preachers over whom he presides. The Bishop looks to the presiding elders for light, and depends largely upon them for guidance. He does the best he can with the light he has, and the presiding elders give advice and light according to their judgment. I do not charge them with wilful wrong-doing. They try hard to do for the best, but their sight is not the clearest and the best. They have looked at matters so long from one standpoint that the judgments, preferences and prejudices formed through long years of continuance in this office have grown stronger and stronger, until they are unable to get and give the clearest and best view of the whole situation. This is natural; they cannot help it. But it is so, and the Bishop has to be guided by these men under these conditions.

It is true the Bishop may invite the preachers to confer with him and give him all needed information; he may be very patient and spend much time in doing this, or he may be very impatient and say in act, if not in word, "Say what you have to say quickly and be gone." But, after all, he generally does just what the elders tell him to do. No man stands a chance against them.

Now, the consequence of this state of affairs is that mistakes are made by the Bishop which ought not to be made, but which will ever be made under like conditions. To illustrate: A Bishop comes to a Conference to preside. Questions have arisen in that Conference with regard to certain measures and men; questions of Church government have been discussed and are under discussion still. Some men hastily take one side; other men as hastily take the other side. The Conference is, in a sense, divided—divided their opinions and views of the matter under discussion—divided, let us say on this very question under discussion. Some men are so constituted that if others do not think as they think they believe them to be wrong, and all are inclined to lean with more favor upon those who think as they do.

Now let all the presiding elders of Conference be of one way of thinking on the questions upon which the Conference itself is divided in its opinions and views, and what kind of view will the Bishop get of the matter who do not think as the presiding elders think? If they should attribute those who differ from them a self-purpose to push them out that themselves may get in—saying, as once heard it said, "The outs are trying to get in and the ins are trying to keep in"—instead of giving those who differ from them credit for sincerity and honesty in seeking the best interest of the Church, would it be possible under such circumstances for the Bishop to get the best view, the best and broadest view?

Will not the Bishop be liable to lean upon some men "as Israelites leaned in whom there is no guile," as the verse "angels of light," and others as firebrands, disturbers of the peace of Zion who ought to be put down, squelched, transferred and scattered, it may be, to the four corners of the earth for the peace of the Church? When the men, instead of being firebrands and disturbers of the peace, are as "cool cucumbers" and as "harmless doves," though they may not always "as wise as serpents," and "seek for the good of the Church, as they see as honestly as the others. Is it possible for the Bishop under these circumstances, I repeat, to get the correct view—the best and broadest view—the best appointments?

I do not charge wrong intent, wilful misrepresentation, but I do say that it is in accordance with the natural trend of affairs for the Bishop to get a more favorable view of men who agree with the presiding elders than those who do not agree. The shorter the term the clearer the view. Our Bishops have the right to the clearest and most unbiased view of the men and work, but continuance of the same men in the office of presiding elder prevents him from getting it. And will always be so as long as the present custom is followed.

V. But, it may be asked, are not preachers appointed to the same kind of work continuously—to circuits and stations? Do not editors, college presidents and professors, book agents, etc., continue year after year in the same office? Yes; but the cases are parallel. None of these deal with appointment of preachers. None of these handle men as presiding elders handle them, where their highest and dearest interests are involved. Does not the Bishop continue in office and does he not have this interest in his hands continuously? Yea, verily. But this, like the other, is not a pa-case, and the argument does not hold. The Bishop does not preside over one Conference continuously 4, 2, 16, 20 years, in succession, and have the appointments of the same preachers in his hands every year. If this were so the argument would hold, and would hold with a vengeance, for it could prove the same thing with regard to Bishops that it does with regard to presiding elders, for Bishops are men of like passions and infirmities with other men. Therefore the Bishops rarely ever preside over an Annual Conference more than two years in succession.

VI. This is a constitutional trouble, and needs a constitutional remedy. The continuous presiding eldership is an anomaly in the itinerancy. The preachers itinerate, the Bishops itinerate, but the presiding eldership, as administered amongst us, has become a settled pastorate. The itinerant blood clogged just at this point. It has formed an abscess and become a running sore. This obstruction to the freest and freest flow of the itinerant blood must be removed if you desire health in our ecclesiastical body.

SPEECH OF REV. R. F. LIPSCOMB.

I do not wish to detain the Conference with any extended remarks, but as one of the authors of that memorial sent up from the Virginia Conference on this subject, I feel I ought to say a few words. I wish it understood that no attack upon the presiding elders is rather made, we think, to increase the efficiency of the office. We believe that men who change from the pastorate to the presiding eldership, and then back to the pastorate, are more efficient men than they would be presiding elders remaining in the office indefinitely. This is in some sections of our Church by no means a theory, but an urgent condition. Such things happen as that. There are a certain set of men who get into the presiding eldership and stay there indefinitely ten, fifteen or twenty years, or even longer, and by reason of that fact become, as many of us think, in a measure disqualified for the discharge of the duties of that office. We think this action now contemplated is for the relief of the Bishops. A Bishop comes to a certain Conference and finds a certain set of men who are presiding elders, and who have been such for fifteen or twenty years, and it requires a good deal of moral courage on the part of the Bishops to put those men out. Bishops are men, as the rest of us. They need all the support they can get, and I think this action, if taken, so far from hampering the Bishops, will free their hands and let them follow their best judgment. If there be a special reason, the Bishop may continue them. Further, we think that his present arrangement, in its practical operation, is unjust to the rank and file of the Conference. The presiding elders stay in so long they get a certain set of men, who are their protégés, as it were, men who follow them around from district to district, wherever they go. Without any intentional injustice, these elders get to look upon a certain set of men as the men to put out, and the men who are not in favor of these presiding elders are placed at a great disadvantage. We think, therefore, both to free the hands of the Bishops and improve the quality of the presiding elders themselves, and also to protect the rights of the rank and file of the Conference, this change ought to be made. There may be brethren here who think four years is too short; they would like to have an absolute limit of eight years. If that be true, I say to them to vote down this minority report, and then, when you get the majority report, which is a limitation of four years with a proviso, then, if you want eight years, you can introduce that as an amendment to the majority report.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Religion is a personal matter. It is right and our bounden duty to be concerned about the state of the Church and of the country. Personal religion requires this of us; but we should not suffer our concern for the public welfare to sour our temper and eat out all our individual piety. "Every man must give an account of himself unto God." "Every tub stands on its own bottom." "Every man should paddle his own canoe."

These maxims are in special demand in the Southern Methodist Church just at this time. The Church did not, could not, save me; it cannot destroy me. Paul complimented the Philippians upon the independence and individual steadfastness in the absence of the spiritual father: "Wherefore, my beloved brethren, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in you to will and to do of His good pleasure." These people, thrown upon their own resources by the enforced absence of the great founder of their church, had not slackened in the divine service, but had increased in fidelity and diligence.

The priestly idea is a bad one. Ministers of the Gospel are not priests. They have influence for good and for evil; but the souls of men are not in their hands. The intercession of priests is not absolutely essential to the salvation of the people. Every man has a right in appropria persona to come boldly to a throne of grace, seeking the supply of his needs. His preacher may be good, and the preacher may be bad; conversely, the preacher may be bad, and yet the member be good all the same.

Southern Methodists are engaged in building a large and handsome church in Morristown. They have torn down their old barns and are building greater. Bro. J. A. Baylor, the pastor, is taking a lively interest in the new building. He is a young man, but is taking rank. He is a philosopher of wonderful mental resources; he seems to be at home on any subject which he tackles.

The Rev. John H. Parrott, now on the circuit, has been much wrought up over the Publishing House affair, and has spoken with great boldness. I have been looking to see him lose his scalp; for, while the other side are silent, they are terribly fierce. I have feared that Parrott would leave us, but I think that he clearly sees that there is no place for him to go to. He is like the countryman who went to the animal show; approaching the lion's cage, and the lion growling, he backed on the elephant; turning, he exclaimed: "What, an animal creature with two tails!" With all her faults—yea, with all her sins—the M. E. Church, South, is about as good as any of the Churches.

The Rev. John H. Parrott is a true man. Honesty was born and bred in him. He is an incisive thinker, and he is at home among words—indeed, he is a kind of automobile dictionary. He has been too funny for Bishop timber, and has, therefore, escaped the great calamity of the Bishopric, after which many have honed, and not in vain.

Since I wrote you we have had some fattening showers, reviving the hopes of the farmers and gardeners. We are eating roasting ears and tomatoes out of our own patch.

Tennessee is a considerable tobacco country. The receipts for tobacco in Clarksville for November and December, 1901, and February and March, 1902, were 6,264 hogsheads. That embraces only the tobacco raised in that immediate section.

Just think of the chicken industry of the United States! The chicken crop of North Carolina brings more money than the cotton crop. The hen laid eggs enough last year in the United States to more than pay off the receipts of the postal revenue, or to have paid the entire expenses of the War Department. If you should drop on to the United States navy all the eggs she laid in the country in 1901, it would sink the entire navy, with many eggs to spare. There are hens and roosters enough in the United States to set one every four feet along every railroad track in the United States. There are 284,000,000 chickens in the United States, and 191,000 miles of railroad. In 1901 our chickens laid ten billions of eggs—that is, three and three-fourths chickens and 142 eggs to every man, woman and child in the nation. All the eggs laid in the country last year would weigh 655,000 tons, or about four times the tonnage of the United States navy. If all the eggs now in the United States were one egg, it would be 150 miles long and as large otherwise in proportion. If all the hens were one hen, she would make a nice thanksgiving dish weighing one million tons. For some of these figures I am indebted to that excellent agricultural paper, "The Tennessee Farmer."

What a great little man that man J. Pierpont Morgan is! Years ago he conceived the idea that to resuscitate the bankrupt railways of the country, the true policy was to squeeze some of the water out of the stock; he squeezed and out went the water and up went the stock. That was wise—that was splendid financeering. Now, in order to enrich that great steel corporation, he deluges the stock with aqua pura. Where is the consistency? You have heard of the white man who to the Indian blew hot and cold; this man blows dry and wet. Do you charge Morgan with inconsistency? Don't do it. He's not guilty of it. He is consistent with himself. All men are consistent with themselves. They can't be otherwise. Squeezing out water at one time and pouring in water at another, may seem to be inconsistent—but only seems. Referred to the motive of each policy the two things are absolutely consistent. The squeezing and pouring both had the same object in view—to enrich J. Pierpont Morgan. They say that Roosevelt is now a lion in Morgan's way. So be it. May God grant it may be so, even if Morgan should for revenge decapitate the President—that is to say, prevent his renomination. R. N. PRICE.

CHAUTAUQUA LETTER.

Chautauqua, N. Y., June, 1902.

If prospective visitors to Chautauqua could now witness the beauties of this famous region, probably many assembly vacation plans would be enlarged in future to include the delightful months of May and June. The bright sunshine, cloudless skies, shady groves, pure atmosphere, singing birds, green foliage, and the blue, dancing waves of the lake combine in this high altitude to produce that gentle exhilaration wherein one is necessarily unreasonably happy. The violets and anemones are strewn from Palestine Park to the college, and from the college to the ravine; long-stalked, purple blossoms nod pleasantly as you pass, and everywhere is the yellow gleam of the dandelion. The birds give grand concerts regularly every morning in the wooded amphitheatres. They are all present and audible, from the shrill twitter of the sparrow to that unknown, mysterious soloist whose note is like the tuning of a great harp. To hear them at their best one must sit on Mt. Hermon at dusk, when they gather among the tall trees on the point. One is inclined to call it a vast improvement on the "Siegfried" forest music.

All day long, from dawn to dusk, the sound of the saw and hammer is heard in the wooded assembly town, fashioning order and symmetry from confusion. Along the lake front Aladdin's palace (on a smaller scale) has been reproduced in more than one place, while further away from the water's edge numerous dwellings, some modest, many more pretentious, are lending an added beauty to the groves. Twenty-one new cottages is the unprecedented record of Chautauqua for the new season, while additions and improvements on every hand are under way. Work is being rapidly pushed on the new Girls' Club building (costing upward of $5,000), as well as on the new Gymnasium building, the art studio in the grove, and new piano and violin practice cottages.

The Hall of the Christ is now finished up to the roof, and will soon be under cover. Uncompleted as it is, a sort of sanctity broods over it, and seems to claim it for its own. One most impressive feature is the great arch, which rises in a majestic curve over the spot where the image of the Christ is to stand. Environed by scenes of peace and contentment, it will

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON III, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 20.

Text of the Lesson, Ex. xx, 12-17.
Memory Verses, 12-17—Golden Text,
Matt. xix, 19—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. W. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

12. Honor thy father and thy mother that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

The Ten Commandments, or ten words, as they are sometimes called, are summed up by our Lord in Mark xii, 29-31, in these words: "Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord, and thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength. This is the first commandment, and the second is like-namely this, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. There is none other commandment greater than these." He thus quoted from Deut. vi, 4, 5, and Lev. xix, 18, for He honored the whole of the law, the prophets and the psalms (Luke xxiv, 27, 44), never in any way discounting the least portion. How very unlike Him in this respect are some wise people of our day who profess to be His followers! See in connection with this fifth commandment Prov. i, 8, and note that in Eph. vi, 2, it is called the first commandment with promise. The promise had doubtless a special reference to Israel.

13. Thou shalt not kill.

In our Lord's commentary on this in Matt. v, 21, 22, He teaches that anger lies at the root of murder, and in I John iii, 15, it is written, "Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer," referring back to the story of Cain and Abel. In the same connection it is written that Cain was of the wicked one, and in John viii, 44, our Lord said that he was a murderer from the beginning, a liar and the father of it. Not only are we forbidden to hate any one, but we are forbidden to speak evil of any one (Jas. iv, 11; Eph. iv, 31; I Pet. ii, 1). In Zech. vii, 10; viii, 17, we are forbidden even to imagine evil in our hearts against a brother or a neighbor.

14. Thou shalt not commit adultery.

That this sin may be committed by a look as well as by an act our Lord taught in Matt. v, 27-32, where He also gives fuller instruction concerning it. That love will conquer it is seen in Rom. xlii, 10—"Love worketh no ill to his neighbor, therefore love is the fulfilling of the law." God counted Israel guilty of this sin when they worshiped idols, the works of men's hands (Jer. iii, 9), and by the Spirit through James He tells us that if we are in friendship with the world we are in His sight guilty of this sin (Jas. iv, 4). It seems to some moral people impossible that anything so vile as this sin could ever touch or come near them, but let them see it as God does and honestly ask as in His sight, Am I in any way conformed to this present evil world, am I in love with the world which is lying in the wicked one? (Rom. xii, 1, 2; I John ii, 15-17; v, 19, R. V.).

15. Thou shalt not steal.

Many who would scorn to take what does not belong to them, as between man and man, might have to plead guilty when searched by the question, "Will a man rob God?" Yet God had to say to Israel, "Ye have robbed Me in tithes and offerings" (Mal. iii, 8). Inasmuch as our relation to God is the first question and the matter of the utmost importance, let the believer ask himself, Am I robbing God of any portion of my being or my time or my money? He claims our body as His property (Rom. xii, 1, 2; I Cor. vi, 19, 20), and at least a seventh of our time and a tenth of our income.

16. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.

There are tongues that devise mischief, that love evil more than good and lying rather than righteousness, but such do not belong in the holy city (Ps. iii, 2, 3; Rev. xxi, 15). "He that worketh deceit shall not dwell within My house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in My sight" (Ps. ci, 7). False witnesses were among the grievous things which our Lord suffered for our sakes, even as it is written, "False witnesses are risen up against Me and such as breathe out cruelty," and again, "False witnesses did rise up; they laid to My charge things that I knew not" (Ps. xxvii, 12; xxxv, 11).

17. Thou shalt not covet.

We might infer from Rom. vii, 7, in connection with Phil. iii, 6, that Paul fancied that he had kept the law pretty thoroughly except on this one point, but he learned, as James also did, that to keep the whole law and offend in only one point makes one guilty of all, and in our flesh dwelleth no good thing (Jas. ii, 10; Rom. vii, 18). "Guilty" is the word for every one (Rom. iii, 19, 20). Some one has well said: "To do what the law requires I must have life, and to be what the law requires I must have righteousness, but by nature I have neither and am therefore cursed. When I receive Christ, He becomes my life and righteousness and will fulfill the law in me." The people found that they could not keep this holy and perfect law, for in a few days they found themselves calling on Aaron to make them an idol and dancing around a golden calf. Then Moses before their eyes broke the two tables which God had given him, thus powerfully testifying to what they were actually doing. Then the Lord told His servant Moses to make two tables like the first and bring them up to Him in the mount, and He would write the same words on them, but Moses was also commanded to make an ark and put the tables of stone in it and cover them up and let them be there (Deut. ix and x).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 20, "Evangelizing the World in This Generation"—Isa. lxi, 1-4; John xvii, 6-8, 18-20.
Read Matt. vii.

What are the views of the leaders of the church upon the possibility of evangelizing the world in this generation? It depends largely upon their point of view.

Some think the gospel is to be preached among all nations not with the expectation that any great numbers will be converted, but that it shall be a witness against them. This is in the spirit of denunciation and with the idea of their destruction rather than their salvation.

Others are sanguine that all that is needed is sufficient numbers of missionaries and money, and the great bulk of heathenism can be reached and converted to Jesus Christ.

Still others see the gospel penetrating slowly but surely the mass of the heathen peoples, winning some converts, gradually breaking down prejudices and opposition and little by little lifting those it touches into new life of spirit and into a different grade of social civilization. The advances of Japan since Commodore Perry entered Yokohama harbor in 1854 point eloquently to the power of the gospel to renovate an antique and effete civilization if the people have the virility for recovery and renovation. The case of Hawaii shows by sad contrast the impossibility of rescuing a race when it has once lost its vitality by vice, even though multitudes of its members may be individually Christianized. The romance of the lifting of Uganda shows how an intelligent and strong nation of barbarians can be evangelized and turned into new courses in a brief period if only the heroic endurance of witnesses for the truth can be secured at the first. No age has shown more steadfast adhesion to Jesus Christ under fiercest and deadliest persecutions than has the last half of the past century. No land has seen martyr blood more freely shed than this region of central Africa, which but a few years since was unheard of by the Christian church. Stanley found it. The chief asked for teachers of the Bible. They went. The people listened, believed and turned to God in great numbers. Opposers entered and poisoned the minds of some. Persecutions arose, and hundreds were slain, preferring death to forsaking their Saviour. Again the tide turned. This time it sets with a strong flood toward liberty of worship and purity of faith, and Uganda is enrolled among the lands which are Christianized.

The story of Fiji and Tonga and the other south sea islands ought not to be forgotten. But a brief time ago they were cannibal islands. Now there is no place on earth more peaceable and morally elevated and religious.

How India is awakening! Long years have been spent in preparatory work. This needs to be constantly kept in mind in calculating results. Now the harvest is more abundant than the workers can properly care for. Thousands are asking for baptism whom we have no teachers for and so dare not receive as yet.

The great need is an awakening of the church in the home field to supply more abundantly the means for schools, hospitals and preaching places and support for the needed workers.

Dig Your Well Deeper.

A dry time has always been improved more or less to dig wells deeper. There is no better time to do this than in the time of drought. We know of many old wells that have been made better than new by being dug deeper in the time of drought. When the next time of drought comes, they can be relied on as never before. It is a very dry time just now in the religious world, and it is a good time for us all to dig our wells deeper. Do not be satisfied, no matter what your experience has been, but dig deeper. The love of many is waxing cold. There never, perhaps, was a time when it required more alertness to keep from spiritual drowsiness and famine than now, and there is no better way to keep awake and refreshed with that living water that Jesus promised than to dig your well deeper, and then "with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation." Let us all resolve to go deeper! The drier it gets around you the deeper you need to dig.—Christian Witness.

Life an Easy Lesson.

These hurrying days, these busy times of ours, are wasted when they take our hearts away from patient gentleness and give us fame for love and gold for kisses. Some day when our hungry souls will seek for bread our selfish god will give us a stone. Life is not a deep, profound, perplexing problem. It is a simple, easy lesson, such as any child may read. You can not find its solution in the ponderous tomes of the old fathers, the philosophers, the theorists. It is not on your bookshelves, but in the warmest corner of the most unlettered heart it glows! Letters that the blindest may read, sweet, plain, simple, easy, loving lesson. And when you have learned I brother of mine, the world will be better and happier.—R. J. Burdette.

A Worthless Life.

Hers was merely one of a million lives in which man can find no fault and God no fruit.—"The Velvet Glove," by Henry Seton Merriman.

Little Things.

If you would advance in true holiness, you must aim steadily at perfection in little things.—Abbe Guilloire.

In His Own Power.

Circumstances are beyond the control of man, but his conduct is in his own power.—Disraeli.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teaching of All Denominations.

Apart from Christ we can do nothing.—Rev. Dr. Cadman, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Tempted Because Underpaid.

Many a man has yielded to temptation because he was underpaid.—Rev. A. C. Bane, Methodist, San Francisco.

Our Attitude Toward Life.

It is certain that the good of life here and now depends upon our attitude toward it.—Rev. Dr. David Utter, Unitarian, Denver.

A Beautiful Word.

Religion is obedience. It is a beautiful and precious word and means all that says.—Rev. Alonzo Monk, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Regeneration Necessary.

Regeneration is necessary if we are to escape the corruption and pollution that are in the world.—Rev. Martin E. Bird, Congregationalist, St. Louis.

Patriotism a Moral Force.

Patriotism should be a moral force teaching us never to act so our country may be ashamed of us.—Rev. Dr. Forrest E. Dager, Episcopalian, Philadelphia.

Magnetism of the Cross.

The magnetism of the cross is stronger today than ever before. Christ of the cross draws us because of our need.—Rev. Dr. H. G. Henderson, Methodist, St. Louis.

Principle, Not Sentiment.

Religion is a principle and not a sentiment. It is something to take possession of the man and actuate his whole life.—Rev. Dr. Broughton, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

The One Safe Course.

A man only involves himself more and more in evil when he starts out on a wrong course. There is but one safe course. It is that of the strictest honesty.—Rev. J. L. Davis, Congregationalist, Akron, O.

Pitted Against Each Other.

Good and evil are pitted against each other. The fight has really just begun and the struggle will be a long one. But it is in the nature of things that the moral idea will prevail.—Dr. Felix Adler, Ethical Culture, New York.

The Best Society.

Society should be regarded as an implement for strengthening and spreading religion, philanthropy, learning and good morals. This is indeed the true society. It is the best society.—Rev. Dr. Henry C. McCook, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Religion Is Life.

Religion is not a thing the world can to without. Some good people seem to consider it a sort of veneer, very nice, but not necessary; admirable in the wardrobe, but entirely unnecessary. This is all wrong. Religion is bread; it is life, for it is the staff of life.—Rev. Frank G. Tyrrell, Christian, St. Louis.

Drawing and Holding Men.

The greatest genius that ever lived would fail to hold men to the church by schemes and inventions, but the great heart of God, beating in a congregation of saved men and women and in a pulpit on fire with the enthusiasm of the passion for men, will draw them and hold them.—Rev. Dr. John E. White, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

New Basis of Reform.

The belief of our age is in the solidarity of our race and its power to become the exhibit of the life of God. In this we find a new basis for reform, for it convicts of sin all of those who are in any way failing honorably and justly to use their powers to benefit the social body of which they are a part.—Rev. William M. Backus, Chicago.

The Chief Concern.

In the days to come our children and grandchildren will not ask what confessions of faith their fathers wrote or what were the forms under which they worshiped and did their work, but they will be most concerned with the kind of spiritual life that was developed under our beliefs and practices.—Rev. Dr. Edward B. Pollard, Baptist, Washington.

Not an Unnatural Life.

A Christian life is not an unnatural life. It is life as God wants it to be. It is life from God, in God and for God. It is the fulfillment of what eternal love has decreed for us. Sin has dwarfed this life and shamed it and sent evil spirits to crawl across it and the forked hoofs of devils to sink down through it.—Rev. Dr. W. J. McKittrick, Presbyterian, St. Louis.

Responsive Sympathy.

The most sensitive soul ever in the world was the Christ. The more like him we become the more burdens we bear. The more tightly the strings of an instrument are drawn the more vibrant it is to the touch of the musician. The tender the soul in its devotion to the Lord the easier the burdens reach us, the more ready our responsive sympathy.—Rev. Alonzo Monk, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Duty and Pleasure.

A true Christian, finding his way to glory through the sad and hard as well as the joyous experiences of life, always under the conviction that God and the angels will come with assistance at his call, presents an ideal of work well done, of sorrows bravely borne and of a heart at peace because duty and pleasure are two words for the same thing.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

The Mission of Art.

With the most ardent devotee of fashion I plead for the beautiful. Art is the hope of the toiling multitude, as it is the joy of the cultivated. It is the highway that leads to God. But art is not fashion, and art rests on simplicity and never violates the principle of fitness. Every bonnet as well as every cathedral must have a background of morality by which its artistic quality must be tested.—Rev. Jenkin Lloyd Jones, Episcopalian, Chicago.

Regeneration is a new heart towards God.

It will never do to eat the fruit we know to be forbidden and then ask to be delivered from its ill effects.

The Union Central LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

H. H. SEAY.

I don't believe there is any better insurance on the market than the UNION CENTRAL. I carry $10,000 with them.

CAPTAIN RICHARD IRBY.

op McTeire, of Tennessee; John Howard, John Lyon, William Campbell, of Virginia, most of whom are now dead.

Leaving college, he followed the taste and example of his forefathers by becoming a tiller of the soil on the plantation of his mother in partnership with one of his brothers. Up to the war, no man of the family was known to desert the farm.

As a farmer, he was eminently successful. In 1853, with neighbors, he organized the Farmers' Club of Nottoway, one of the most useful and active farmers' associations ever formed in the State, of which he was the first president. The same year young Irby was elected a member of the Executive Committee of the State Agricultural Society. The draft of the premium list of the first State Agricultural Society Fair was made by him. He was connected officially with this society for over twenty years.

Early in his active life, Mr. Irby added to his farming business that of the manufacture of farm implements, which was very successful up to and during the war.

A GALLANT SOLDIER.

The war coming on, his business was given up at once and he left for service without a day's notice, not having had time to bid his loved ones goodbye. Of his war history, one of the lieutenants of the company he commanded wrote as follows:

"He entered the service as first lieutenant in the Nottoway Grays, a company raised at Blackstone (then Blacks and Whites), Company G, Eighteenth Virginia Regiment. On account of the sickness and delicate health of Captain Reps. Connally, who was also a brave and efficient officer, and resigned before twelve months had expired, Lieutenant Irby frequently commanded the company. He was a strict officer, and believed in every man doing his duty, yet he was kind and considerate of his men's interests. I am sure he had the confidence and affection of every member of his company, and no officer in the Eighteenth Virginia Regiment was more highly esteemed and respected. When in November, 1861, he resigned to take his seat in the Legislature of Virginia, to which he had been elected without an effort, almost universal regret was expressed throughout the regiment. All felt they were parting with a good soldier, a faithful friend, a true Christian, and a competent spiritual adviser. Consequently, when the question of re-enlisting began to be talked about, all the members of his old company said, 'Dick Irby must be our captain.' Accordingly, he was elected without opposition in April, 1862, and served with distinguished efficiency and bravery until disabled by wounds.

WOUNDED IN BATTLE.

"We who are living well remember how faithful he was to duty, how calmly he stood at the First Manassas, and how bravely he led at Williamsburg, Seven Pines, and Second Manassas. At the last-named battle he was severely wounded in the neck and shoulder while gallantly leading the charge, which disabled him for a long time, and finally occasioned his transfer to the commissary department June, 1863, where he rendered most valuable service in getting supplies for the army.

"He was a good organizer, and officers and men relied upon his judgment. He was tender and careful in looking after the temporal and spiritual welfare of his men.

PRAYED FOR HIS MEN.

"His company passed through the severe pitched battles with only one man slightly wounded. So that it began to be said by the members of some of the other companies, which had lost heavily, 'that the prayers of Captain Irby had saved his company.' This at least illustrates their confidence in him. He did pray for his men. They were treated as his family. Every evening, when practicable, divine worship was held, led by himself or some one appointed for the purpose. And he is still looking after the remnants. They hold a warm place in his affections.

"No one but himself can tell how much time, labor and money he has spent in getting up the records of the reunions, writing the sketches, and other things, besides looking after and providing for the sick and disabled ones, and the widows and orphans of those who are dead.

LOVED AND HONORED.

"I wish to say, further, we all still love and honor him. Virginia, his native State, and Nottoway, his native county and residence for many years may well feel proud of such a citizen and such a soldier. Since the war he has proven himself just as diligent and faithful and reliable wherever he has labored. He has served his Church in its representative councils in various ways. While he is a genuine Methodist, yet he is full of the catholicity of the Gospel, and numbers his friends in all communions.

"In the educational work of the Church and State he has rendered signal service. He resides at Ashland, Va., and is secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College. He is a senior member of the board of trustees, and I know I voice the unanimous sentiment of that board when I say his services to the college have been most invaluable. He well deserves the sobriquet, which he has won and which he is known, 'Old Reliable.' Long may his useful life be spared, and at his sunset, when it comes, may it be glorious."

THE WAR OVER.

The war over, Captain Irby returned to farm and foundry, and endeavored to retrieve losses and carry on business as before. This, however, was a hill work. He was elected president of the Petersburg Iron Works in 1864 and in 1868 he moved to Richmond to engage in the stove manufacturing business with Asa Snyder. This offered a large field for business, but the bright prospects for success were dashed by the panic of 1873 and succeeding years.

His interests were sold in 1878, and for several years thereafter Captain Irby was agent for the Bureau of Immigration of Virginia. In 1884 he was elected secretary of the Virginia Bi-

Society, which position he held until 1887, when he resigned to accept the office of secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, which position he recently resigned. In 1895 the Captain was elected a member of the Town Council of Ashland, in which body he served with ability and distinction.

DEVOTION TO THE COLLEGE.

In 1855 he started the first subscription for the endowment of the college, and in 1868 he took the first steps in the movement that led to its removal from Boydton to Ashland. At the time of his death he was the oldest living member of the Board of Trustees, having served for forty-eight years. He filled every office of the board except that of president.

In 1898, at the request of the Board of Trustees, he published a "History of Randolph-Macon College," a book which has been highly commended and is his longest literary production.

Captain Irby continued to serve the college with great fidelity and success till his death.

"No man ever had better friends than I," Captain Irby once remarked in speaking of his past life. He did not add the reason why this was so; but it was because he was himself warm in his attachments and slow to see frailty in those he loved.

Captain Irby loved knowledge for its own sake; he loved honor for the blessings a consciousness of it gives; and his religion was of that liberal kind that made him a friend of man and servant of God. If the world had more like him, then more flowers would be scattered "on the arid sands of human experience."

FELT THE END COMING.

Captain Irby has for some time had premonitions of his coming end, though his manner has been just as cheery and his smile as joyous as that of a child.

He told the members of the Randolph-Macon Board that he had many things he wanted to get into perfect shape so that his successor would have no trouble, and that he thought it better to make way for a younger man, so that he could render him assistance while able to do so.

Sunday, June the 29th, he fainted while attending services at the chapel on the college grounds, and was taken home in an unconscious condition. He rallied for a time, but gradually grew weaker to the end.

His case was diagnosed as enlargement of the liver, and the disease affected his heart action seriously, the fainting spell in church being but the beginning of the end.

A happy occasion, well remembered, was the golden wedding of Captain and Mrs. Irby at their home in Ashland, which anniversary was celebrated the evening of October 1, 1896, on which occasion the nine living children were present, as well as many friends.

Most of the children were at his bedside when the summons came.

Faith is a hand whereby the soul lays actual hold on the unseen realities, and so learns to sit loosely and to detach itself from that which only belongs to time.

Communications.

HOUSEHOLD RELIGION.

ABRAHAM AND CORNELIUS

While all the words of God are worthy of study, some of them mark epochs, noted occasions in the history of His dealings with His Church and with the world, and are especially worthy of consideration. He hath determined to choose for Himself a peculiar people to say to them, "You only have I known of all the nations of the earth." He communicates to them a large knowledge, the bounds of their habitation are appointed by Him a land that is the glory of all lands; His Davids, His Solomons, His Isaacs are to be of this chosen people. When His Son comes in the flesh, He is to be one of them, and through them all nations become acquainted with Him.

No warrior, no wealthy sheik or chief doth He choose; He chooses not him who can bring armies into the field; not him who wears a crown, not Him whose flocks graze on hundreds of hills. He looks into His household. Now deports He himself under the curtains of His tent; what is His bearing, His walk, and conversation in His home? Here is the result: "For I know him that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do judgment and justice; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which He hath spoken of him."

Nothing can speak more strongly than these words, for the importance our God attaches to family religion. The Father of the faithful, "the friend of God," the Founder of the Jewish Church and nation, laid its foundation broad and deep and strong on religion in his home—family religion, family prayer, or its equivalent—the altar on which sacrificial offerings were continually made.

Look under the curtains of the Jewish tent, look into the rooms of the Gentile centurion, representing as they do the Jewish and the Gentile nations, and God approves both. He is the God of Abraham and the God of those who have Abraham's faith. He is the God of Cornelius, the Gentile, who has by faith accepted Christ, and with Him accepted Christian customs, among them family religion. Both observed family religion, family prayer. We are doubly bound to follow their example—take Christ into our homes.

We honor with our whole hearts the Sunday schools and those who teach in them and those who are taught in them, but the household priest, he who is the teacher of his own family, from whose lips the children hear the Word read, and with whom they kneel in prayer to "Heaven's Eternal King," hath a place of honor and responsibility an angel could not take.

Epworth Leagues, Young People's Societies, we bid them "God-speed," but 'tis to the children listening reverently to the Word reverently read by a father and kneeling in prayer with him that we look with tenderest love, with a hope lively and strong.

Hannah gave Samuel to the Lord before she sent him to Eli that he might minister in the temple. Six years of

John Newton's life were with a praying, godly mother; grown to manhood, he was known for all manner of ungodliness, drunkenness, profanity; but the mother's example and impressions of her prayers and teachings saved the man—the man who in the criminal going to the gallows saw himself and exclaimed: "But for the grace of God, there goes John Newton."

In our District Conference, lately held in Clarksville, which was so much enjoyed and remembered with so much pleasure, I would have been glad to hear some utterances from our lay brethren, remembering the earnest and impressive remarks by a lay brother from Blackstone at our District Conference last year.

THOMAS L. RODES DEAD.

Mr. Thomas L. Rodes died at his home, Fair View, Albemarle county, Va., Wednesday. Mr. Rodes was for a long time in the soap and candle business with Mr. P. J. Crew, in Richmond, and retired from business about ten years ago. He was a man of fine ability, and by his energy and devotion to his work, amassed quite a large amount of property.

His first wife was a daughter of Mr. R. J. Christian, of Richmond. Mr. Rodes was a Christian man, widely known for his honesty and charity. He leaves a widow, a large family of children, and a wide circle of friends who mourn their loss.—Dispatch.

BROAD STREET SUFFERS.

The steeple of the Broad Street Methodist church was struck a half hour before the evening service began. Firemen from the engine-house near by immediately looked after it, but found no blaze. A plank is ripped off near the base of the steeple, and one of the windows knocked out. There will be no other damage.

When the church was struck its pastor, the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp, was taking supper at Ford's Hotel, a square below. He had no idea that it was his own church that had suffered, but when the crash came, thought, like many others in the dining-room, that the hotel itself had been struck. Electric lights sputtered curiously, wires bobbed around, and everybody thought the place was afire. Many left the building a good deal faster than they had entered it.—Dispatch.

Professor R. E. Blackwell, president of Randolph-Macon College, was in the city yesterday, and was present at the meeting of the Methodist ministers. He made an interesting talk on college affairs, and declared the outlook for raising $300,000 for free tuition to be most encouraging.

At the conclusion of the address the ministers unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, 1, That we, as a preachers' meeting, have heard with pleasure Professor R. E. Blackwell, president of Randolph-Macon College, especially in regard to the good outlook and buoyant spirit among our people in regard to the raising of the $300,000 for free tuition at Randolph-Macon College.

2. That we pledge ourselves individually and as a preachers' organization to do whatever we can to aid Professor Blackwell in this great movement.

Talmage Sermon

WASHINGTON. —From the letter to the Hebrews Dr. Talmage takes a text and illustrates how all offenders may be emancipated; text, Hebrews viii. 12, "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

The national flower of the Egyptians is the heliotrope, of the Assyrians is the water lily, of the Hindoos is the marigold, of the Chinese is the chrysanthemum. We have no national flower, but there is hardly any flower more suggestive to many of us than the forgetmenot. We all like to be remembered, and one of our misfortunes is that there are so many things we can not remember. Mnemonics, or the art of assisting memory, is an important art. It was first suggested by Simonides of Ceos 500 years before Christ. Persons who had but little power to recall events or put facts and names and dates in proper processions have through this art had their memory re-enforced to an almost incredible extent. A good memory is an invaluable possession. By all means cultivate it. I had an aged friend who, detained all night at a miserable depot in waiting for a rail train fast in the snowbanks, entertained a group of some ten or fifteen clergymen, likewise detained on their way home from a meeting of presbytery, by first with a piece of chalk drawing out on the black and sooty walls of the depot the characters of Walter Scott's "Marmion" and then reciting from memory the whole of that poem of some eighty pages in fine print. My old friend, through great age, lost his memory, and when I asked him if this story of the railroad depot was true he said, "I do not remember now, but it was just like me. 'Let me see,' said he to me. 'Have I ever seen you before?' 'Yes,' I said; 'you were my guest last night, and I was with you an hour ago.' What an awful contrast in that man between the greatest memory I ever knew and no memory at all!

The Art of Forgetting.

But right along with this art of recollection, which I cannot too highly eulogize, is one quite as important, and yet I never heard it applauded. I mean the art of forgetting. There is a splendid faculty in that direction that we all need to cultivate. We might through that process be ten times happier and more useful than we now are. We have been told that forgetfulness is a weakness and ought to be avoided by all possible means. So far from a weakness, my text ascribes it to God. It is the very top of omnipotence that God is able to obliterate a part of his own memory. If we repent of sin and rightly seek the divine forgiveness, the record of the misbehavior is not only crossed off the books, but God actually lets it pass out of memory. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more." To remember no more is to forget, and you cannot make anything else out of it. God's power of forgetting is so great that if two men appeal to him and the one man after a time an right, gets the sins of his heart pardoned and the other man, after a life of abomination, gets pardoned God remembers no more against one than against the other. The entire past of both the moralist, with his imperfections, and the profligate, with his debaucheries, is as much obliterated in the one case as in the other. Forgotten forever and forever. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

This sublime attribute of forgetfulness on the part of God you and I need, in our finite way, to imitate. You will do well to cast out of your recollection all wrongs done you. During the course of one's life he is sure to be misrepresented, to be lied about, to be injured. There are those who keep these things fresh by frequent rehearsal. If things have appeared in print, they keep them in their scrapbook, for they cut these precious paragraphs out of newspapers or books and at leisure times look them over, or they have them tied up in bundles or thrust in pigeonholes, and they frequently regale themselves and their friends by an inspection of these flings, these sarcasms, these falsehoods, these cruelties. I have known gentlemen who carried them in their pocketbooks, so that they could easily get at these irritations, and they put their right hand in the inside of their coat pocket over their heart and say: "Look here! Let me show you something." Scientists catch wasps and hornets and poisonous insects and transfix them in curiosity bureaus for study, and that is well, but these of whom I speak catch the wasps and the hornets and poisonous insects and play with them and put them on themselves and on their friends and see how far the noxious things can jump and show how deep they can sting. Have no such scrapbook. Keep nothing in your possession that is disagreeable. Tear up the falsehoods and the slanders and the hypercriticisms.

How to Be Happy.

Imitate the Lord in my text and forget, actually forget, sublimely forget. There is no happiness for you in any other plan or procedure. You see all around you in the church and out of the church dispositions acerb, malign, cynical, pessimistic. Do you know how these men and women got that disposition? It was by the embalmment of things pantherine and viperous. They have spent much of their time in calling the roll of all the rats that have nibbled at their reputation. Their soul is a cage of vultures. Everything in them is sour or embittered. The milk of human kindness has been curdled. They do not believe in anybody or anything. If they see two people whispering, they think it is about themselves. If they see two people laughing, they think it is about themselves. Where there is one sweet pipkin in their orchard there are fifty crabapples. They have never been able to forget. They do not want to forget. They never will forget. Their wretchedness is supreme, for no one can be happy if he carries perpetually in mind the mean things that have been done him. On the other hand, you can find here and there a man or woman (for there are not many of them) whose disposition is genial and summery. Why? Have they always been treated well? Oh, no. Hard things have been said against them. They have been charged with officiousness, and their generousities have been set down to a desire for display, and they have many a time been the subject of tittle tattle, and they have had enough small assaults like gnats and enough great attacks like lions to have made them perpetually miserable if they would have consented to be miserable. But they have had enough divine philosophy to cast off the annoyances, and they have kept themselves in the sunlight of God's favor and have realized that these oppositions and hindrances are a part of a mighty discipline by which they are to be prepared for usefulness and heaven. The secret of it all is they have, by the help of the Eternal God, learned how to forget.

Cancelling Your Debts.

Another practical thought: When our faults are repented of let them go out of mind. If God forgets them, we have a right to forget them. Having once repented of our infidelities and misdeeds, there is no need of our repenting of them again. Suppose I owe you a large sum of money, and you are persuaded I am incapacitated to pay and you give me acquittal from that obligation. You say: "I cancel that debt. All is right now. Start again." And the next day I come in and say: "You know about that big debt I owe you. I have come in to get you to let me off. I feel so bad about it I cannot rest. Do let me off." You reply with a little impatience: "I did let you off. Don't bother yourself and bother me with any more of that discussion." The following day I come in and say: "My dear sir, about that debt—I can never get over the fact that I owe you that money. It is something that weighs on my mind like a millstone. Do forgive me that debt." This time you clear lose your patience and say: "You are a nuisance. What do you mean by this reiteration of that affair? I am almost sorry I forgave you that debt. Do you doubt my veracity or do you not understand the plain language in which I told you that debt was canceled?" Well, my friends, there are many Christians guilty of worse folly than that. While it is right that they repent of new sins and of recent sins, what is the use of bothering yourself and insulting God by asking him to forgive sins that long ago were forgiven? God has forgotten them. Why do you not forget them? No; you drag the load on with you, and 365 times a year, if you pray every day, you ask God to recall occurrences which he has not only forgiven, but forgotten.

Quit this folly. I do not ask you less to realize the turpitude of sin, but I ask you to a higher faith in the promise of God and the full deliverance of his mercy. He does not give a receipt for part payment or so much received on account, but receipt in full, God having for Christ's sake decreed "your sins and your iniquities will I remember no more." As far as possible let the disagreeables of life drop. We have enough things in the present, and there will be enough in the future, to disturb us without running a special train into the great Goneyby to fetch us as special freight things left behind. Years ago, when there was a great railroad strike, I remember seeing all along the route from Omaha to Chicago and from Chicago to New York hundreds and thousands of freight cars switched on the sidetracks, those cars loaded with all kinds of perishable material, decaying and wasting. After the strike was over did the railroad companies bring all that perished material down to the markets? No; they threw it off where it was destroyed and loaded up with something else. Let the long train of your thoughts throw off the worse than useless freight of a corrupt and destroyed past and load up with gratitude and faith and holy determination. We do not please God by the cultivation of the miserable. He would rather see us happy than to see us depressed. You would rather see your children laugh than to see them cry, and your Heavenly Father has no fondness for hysterics.

Allow Others to Forget.

Not only forget your pardoned transgressions, but allow others to forget them. The chief stock on hand of some people is to recount in prayer meetings and pulpits what big scandals they once were. They not only will not forget their forgiven delicts but they seem to be determined that the church and the world shall not forget them. If you want to declare that you have been the chief of sinners, extol the grace that could save such a wretch as you were, do so, but do not go into particulars. Do not tell how many times you got drunk or to what bad places you went or how many friends you had in the prison van before you were converted. Lump it, brother, give it to us in bulk. If you have scars got in honorable warfare, show them, but if you have scars got in ignominious warfare do not display them. I know you will quote the Bible reference to the horrible pit from which you were dug. Yes, be thankful for that rescue, but do not make displays of the mud of that horrible pit or splash it over other people. Sometimes I have felt in Christian meetings discomfited and unfit for Christian service because I had done none of those things which seemed to be, in the estimation of many, necessary for Christian usefulness, for I never swore a word or ever got drunk or went to compromising places or was guilty of assault and battery or ever uttered a slanderous word or ever did any one a hurt, although I knew my heart was sinful enough, and I said to myself, "There is no use of my trying to do any good for I never went through those depraved experiences." But afterward I saw consolation in the thought that no one gained any ordination by the laying on of the hands of dissoluteness and infamy.

And though an ordinary moral life, ending in a Christian life, may not be as dramatic a story to tell about, let us be grateful to God rather than worry about it if we have never plunged into outward abominations. It may be appropriate in a meeting of reformed drunkards or reformed debauchees to quote for those not reformed how desperate and nasty you once were, but do not drive a scavenger's cart into assemblages of people the most of whom have always been decent and respectable. But I have been sometimes in great evangelical meetings where people went into particulars about the sins that they once committed, so much so that I felt like putting my hand on my pocketbook or calling for the police lest these reformed men might fall from grace and go at their old business of theft or drunkenness or cutthroatery. If your sins have been forgiven and your life purified, forget the waywardness of the past, and allow others to forget it.

A Sin Forgetting God.

But what I most want in the light of this text to impress is that we have a sin forgetting God. Suppose that on the last day—called the last day because the sun will never again rise upon our earth, the earth itself being flung into fiery demolition—supposing that on that last day a group of infernal spirits should somehow get near enough the gate of heaven and challenge our entrance and say: "How canst thou, the just Lord, let those souls into the realm of supernal gladness? Why, they said a great many things they never ought to have said, and they did a great many things they ought never to have done. Sinners are they—sinners all."

And suppose God should deign to answer. He might say: "Yes, but did not be a true Chautauqua building suggestive of a warm human affection, as even in its incompleteness it stands out against the purple-green recesses of the grove with a deep and quiet dignity which at once inspires reverence.

CHAUTAUQUA LETTER.

The steamers plying the lake entered upon their regular summer schedule June 1st, and are already unloading gay crowds of pleasure-seekers. Inquiries as to the summer's programme, schools, and accommodations are pouring into the general offices, now permanently centered here, and the prospects for the "New Chautauqua Institution" are for the largest attendance in its history.

THE AMERICAN WORKER AT PLAY IN THE AUGUST WORLD'S WORK.

The World's Work will give much of its August number to "The American Worker at Play"—that is, the enormous business of summer pleasure-seeking. The great summer movement of population to the mountains and to the seashore is a thing of very great social significance; there has never been such a movement by any other people. It means prosperity; it means a growing love of country life; it means the development of a wonderful transportation business; it means a social mobility such as no other people ever showed. It is instinct from its beginning to its end with American spirit, for the people play with the same vigorous energy, the same sustained effort as they throw into the strenuous work of the world. And it is picturesque with all the beauty and health of the unconfined American outdoors.

This August number will carry with it the bracing breath of the sea, the echo of the wind in the woodland, the scent of the balsam, the swish of the paddle, the singing of the fishing-reel, and a vital moving picture of the American people in the midst of it all.

There will be more than eighty pictures, making a sweep of the entire country from the St. Lawrence to the Southern mountains, from the West coast to the East.

The text will include among many subjects the following: "The Great Summer Movement and Its Meaning," "The New England Mountains and Seashore," "Northern New York and the St. Lawrence," "The Great Lakes," "Southern California and the Puget Sound Country," "The Atlantic Seaboard," "The Rocky Mountains"—all holding together and presenting in unity and at a single view the extraordinary social character that the summer habit reveals among a democratic people.

Among the subjects that will be presented in detail in these articles are: "How the State of New Hampshire Has Made the Summer Resorts and the Summer Boarder Business a Sort of State Industry," "The Building of the Handsomest Country Towns in the World—Such as Windsor, Vermont," "The Great Transportation Problems Involved in Summer Moving," "How Easily a Town-man May Find Game Near His Doors," "What the Tenement

People Do in Hot Weather," "House-Boats, Steam Yachts, Canoes, and Other Ways of Recreation on the Water."

These and many other related subjects will receive the sort of treatment in text and illustration that won for the Pan-American issue of the World's Work last August such wide praise.

THE NORTHFIELD CONFERENCE. Dear Friends and Fellow-Workers:

To maintain the catholic spirit of Christian teaching it is essential that equal emphasis be placed upon co-ordinate truths. Heresy has often originated by giving undue prominence to one truth to the neglect of others and ultimate denial of equally essential doctrines. Thus faith and works must never be divorced, and the emphasis of the subjective life of the soul must find expression in the objective experiences of daily life.

Northfield teachers have in recent years placed special emphasis upon the privileges of a life fully yielded to God, and hundreds have been blessed thereby and testified to new joys. We rejoice in this manifestation of God's love and power in the lives of His children. But many, who have now experienced a fuller blessing of God in their own lives, need other teaching in God's Word, with a view to efficiency in Christian service. It is not enough to have a subjective experience; there must be objective results. Christianity is more than a soul's experience; it is also a life of service.

While we would in no way lessen the emphasis which has heretofore been placed upon the spiritual life of the individual, we believe that there should be also more direct and consecutive Bible teaching as a training for actual service. With this end in view, courses in Bible study upon the minor prophets, conducted by Rev. G. Campbell Morgan; institutes for the study of methods of work by specialists, and lectures upon other subjects of interest to the Christian workers have been arranged.

In sending this invitation to the Christian public to attend the twentieth General Conference for Christian Workers to be held at Northfield August 1st to 17th, it is with earnest prayer that all who attend may receive that help which they most deeply need.

But neither speakers, however spiritual, nor methods, however good, constitute the source of blessings: it is only as God graciously bestows His presence and power that these become effective. Let our prayer, therefore, be unto Him in the words of the Psalmist: "Teach me to do Thy will; for Thou art my God: Thy Spirit is good; lead me into the land of uprightness."

Yours in the Master's service,

W. R. MOODY.

East Northfield, Mass., June 20, 1902.

Among the speakers expected may be named: Rev. F. B. Meyer, London, England; Rev. J. Whitcomb Brounger, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Rev. H. C. Mabie, D. D., Boston, Mass.; Rev. C. I. Schofield, D. D., East Northfield, Mass.; Rev. W. Ross, England; Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D., Boston, Mass.; Rev. L. G. Broughton, Atlanta, Ga.; Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, East Northfield, Mass.; Rev. H. W. Pope, New Haven, Conn.; Rev. Henry G. Weston, D. D., Chester, Pa.; Mr. Henry Varley, London, England; Rev. Stephen Band, Liverpool, England. The music will be under the direction of Messrs. D. B. Towner and George C. Stebbins.

Beginning August 1st, and continuing through the Conference, Rev. G. Campbell Morgan will conduct a Bible class in "The Minor Prophets."

Rev. F. B. Meyer and others will deliver a series of post-Conference lectures from August 19th to September 7th.

"HOME NURSING."

We have before us a copy of a new publication, entitled "Home Nursing." The object of the book is to give practical instructions how to take care of the sick by the inexperienced. In training schools for nurses, instructions are, of course, given in all matters of this kind, but let any woman ask herself, "Could I give a bath to a person in bed without wetting the clothing, or change the undersheet while the bed was occupied?" and she will smile at the seeming impossibility; yet when she is shown, she will wonder why she did not discover the right way herself.

In this little book practical instructions are given for the performance of all necessary offices pertaining to the sick. The knowledge of any of them is not taken for granted, and the writer has tried to do it in such a plain, simple manner that no one need mistake the easiest way.

A sample copy of this valuable book can be had upon application to the publishers, Davis & Lawrence Co., 64 Grand street, New York city, enclosing to them 5 cents in stamps or coin to pay the expense of mailing and stating the name of this paper.

Come take that task of yours which you have been hesitating before, and shrinking and walking around, and on this very day lift it up and do it.—Phillips Brooks.

THE DISEASE OF MONEY-GETTING.

BY REBECCA HARDING DAVIS.

We were delayed one day last summer at the toll-gate on a lonely road in the Virginia mountains. The son of the gatekeeper at the moment came hurrying across the field.

"I've got the job, father!" he shouted, waving his hat. "Sixteen dollars a month!"

The old man stared at him open-mouthed, forgetting to give us a change. "Sixteen dollars a month! Why, you kin git married now, Bob right away and set up housekeepin'. You kin lead a man's life now, sah!"

We laughed as we drove away at the mountaineer's ideas of the things necessary to a man's life. He must be long, we said, to a generation of two centuries ago.

Some one then told a story of a man he knew in Denver or St. Paul or some other crowded, driving western city. He had been all of his life a bookkeeper on a small salary. When he was a young man and the city a village he had bought for a few dollars a huge square of ground on the principal street, and had built a snug little house on it and planted a garden for his young wife. Now that they were gray old folks of seventy, they still lived in the house, hedged in by cabbages and roses, the mossy old well in one corner of the garden, the beehive in another.

The lot was now surrounded by huge business houses, and was of enormous value.

One firm after another offered the old man sums for it which would make him rich for life.

"You can give up work if you sell," they said, "and take your place among the millionaires of the State. You can build yourself a palace out in the country, and have nothing to do but turn over your money and make more and more millions."

"My wife and me," he said, "wouldn't be comfortable in a palace. We are comfortable in this house. It's home. I don't want to rake in millions. We have enough. I'm able for my work—it doesn't hurt me. We have no children to leave a fortune to. Money in bank wouldn't give my wife as much comfort as her posies and bees do. No, I won't sell."

He is still living in the mean little house, and picks strawberries for his old wife's breakfast from ground that is worth a thousand dollars a foot.

We laughed again, and some one else recalled the story of another madman, who was as ignorant of the value of money.

"My guide," he said, "when I was fishing in Florida last spring, showed me one day a tract of land on the river bank. 'That's my ground,' he said. 'I've got fifty acres there. I have cleared three acres an' put it into lettuce fer the Northern market. It brings me in a hundred dollars a year.'

"Why not clear the whole of it," I asked, 'and put it into lettuce? Then you would have thousands of dollars a year instead of one hundred.'

"He stared at me. 'A hundred's enough fer me with what I make fishin'. Why should I slave fer money I don't need?'

"But you do need it," I urged, and told him of some of the luxuries he could buy with more money. Besides, I argued, he should have money laid by in bank. He did not answer for a while, and then said:

"No, I'm in the right of it. Ther's only me an' my boy. Bob's hed good schoolin', an' is makin' his own way in Jacksonville. Ef he wants more money he kin come an' plant more lettuces. I've a snug cabin yonder, an' what, with fish and game an' a pig, I've enough to eat. I like to look into politics a bit, an' I'm fond o' readin'. The hundred dollars pays for my newspapers an' books. Ef I worked more land I'd hev money in bank, as you say, but I'd hev no time for politics nor readin'. No. Ther's other things than money. Enough of it's enough."

"He was a good guide," continued the fisherman, "but a queer fellow. He never planted more lettuce. I often wonder whether he was quite mad in that matter or eminently sane."

When I read in the Independent the other day the discussion upon the Concentration of Wealth, it brought to my memory these ignorant feeble folk who, because they valued money only for what it would buy, we ridiculed as mad. They seemed more feeble and more mad in the light of these discussions of the power of wealth.

I wonder, by the way, if the younger generation of Americans are conscious of how rapidly wealth is becoming the one object that dominates our horizon? The greed for money has been developed among us since the civil war with the force and swiftness of an epidemic. Before that war there were very few large fortunes in this country. The man who accumulated two hundred thousand dollars was looked upon with awe as a Cæsar. We had no huge, splendid cities then, hotbeds of luxury. The Western, even the Middle, States were sparsely settled; the majority of our people lived in villages or little towns, where the conditions of life were simple and inexpensive. The great man of the town probably lived in a pillared wooden mansion on an income of two or three thousand per annum. He had a Brussels carpet on his parlor and a pair of Vito Viti's alabaster vases on the mantel shelf. His wife owned a single velvet gown, which gave her royal state for life. The yearly incomes of the less lucky men of the village—clerks, cashiers, storekeepers, lawyers or doctors—usually ranged from four hundred to a thousand dollars. Living, on the other hand, was cheap. Butter and beef ten cents a pound, a cow in the "lot," pigs in the sty, and a garden full of vegetables and fruit supplied food. In the clothes press were a Sunday broadcloth suit and a silk gown; they would last for many years. There were no operas, no pictures, no costly journeys to absorb money. The man who had been in Europe was regarded with wonder; men talked to him with bated breath. These men and women knew nothing of art nor the stage nor the countless luxuries which are necessities to their grandchildren. Yet they were of honorable birth, gentle-mannered, God-fearing, and, as a rule, with as sound a literary education and taste as the majority of their grandsons. Human nature was, of course, the same then as now. But as there were fewer uses for money, it rated lower among the good things of life than it does with us. In the code of our church-going, Bible-loving ancestors there was something vulgar, even wicked, in the greed for riches. Every community had, of course, its misers and shrewd money-grabbers. But their aims were regarded as plebeian, their place in society was below the salt. Little thought was given to ancestry. Education was held to be the chief good and object of ambition. "Professional men" were indisputably the upper class. Every ambitious mechanic or poor farmer struggled hard to push at least one of his boys through college, and to make of him a lawyer, doctor, or minister.

Then came the civil war. When it was over some of the successful army contractors first taught us how fast and how high an ignorant, uneducated man could climb in the community upon a heap of dollars. Then followed the oil speculation, the development of the railway systems; after that came the formation of the great trusts. The American has now grown used to look upon gigantic accumulations of wealth, and it may well be that his eyesight is a little impaired by their perpetual glitter. Dwellers under the lustre of Mt. Blanc, it is said, see other things but dully, and no longer can measure distances justly.

More can be bought with money now in the United States, perhaps, than anywhere else. Luxury, political power, a certain social position—all have their price. Haman occasionally may be vexed, as of old, by some scholarly Mordecai sitting at the gate, who watches his noisy pomp with a quiet, amused smile. And yet the poor gentleman Mordecai has common sense. He knows that with a little heavier account in bank he could send his consumptive boy to Florida or the Adirondacks, and that without it he must die. Mordecai is not a slave to Mammon, but he is human, and he too, joins the multitude in the frantic struggle of money-getting.

Who can live outside of it?

Life rises before the young American now as the enchanted palace did before Jack in the old fairy story. Behind its closed doors wait wonders of which his grandfather knew nothing, the triumphs of art and science, the joys of travel, of power, of society, of luxury. But the doors open, he thinks, only to golden keys. How, without a great fortune, can he sail his yacht to unknown climes, or build a castle like Biltmore, or buy Titians, or endow colleges, or, most coveted joy of all, enter the Smart Set of his native city? The huge accumulations of wealth in the last two or three years by a few individuals and by the trusts seem to have maddened the brain of the nation just as a noxious disease infects a body.

The majority of the writers in your symposium the other day based their remarks upon the acknowledged fact that the ruling power in this country now was not the love of liberty or patriotism or God, but—the dollar.

Our recent writers on sociology recognize the recent change in the values which we set upon the things of life.

There are certain facts about the RANDOLPH-MACON ACADEMY that we wish every reader of the RECORDER to know. In this space we can mention only a few.

If any one of these facts interests you, let the Principal know, and he will write you personally full information or will visit you at your home. Here are the facts:

1. Over one hundred degrees have been conferred in the past five years on students trained at our Academy.
2. Our work has been endorsed by over twenty colleges and universities.
3. Special features peculiar to our Academy, in methods of Discipline and Instruction, have secured for us most gratifying results.

E. SUMTER SMITH, Principal,
BEDFORD CITY, VA.

Our old idea of a higher class to be imitated, men and women of honest parentage, of gentle breeding and high purposes, is, we now hear, stale and fantastic. Our House of Lords, we are told, "is already incorporated. They are the plutocrats of New York. They soon will give us a syndicated presidency."

The faith of the old-time American in the republic as the one land on earth where all men are free—where government exists only by the consent of the governed—is jeered at and thrust aside. "Neither the Constitution nor the old prejudices in favor of liberty, nor the dead hand of Washington," we are told, "shall be allowed to interfere with the gigantic business interests of the country."

Under this ruling even the meaning of words has changed lately for Americans. The successful man is merely the rich man. The national progress of which we boast so loudly just now does not mean advance in science, in art, or learning, or in the nobility or distinction of individual life, but simply commercial progress. The popular policy of Imperialism is, stripped of verbiage, merely the seizing of territory and subjugation of foreign peoples with whom we have no quarrel, by force, in order to increase the national wealth.

To put money into the treasury we admitted slavery into the States again without a protest. Professedly a Christian people, we looked on in silence while our army was sent to conquer an intelligent race, capable of self-government, who were struggling for their freedom. When our soldiers revived some of the most brutal tortures of the Middle Ages to subdue them, we were silent, and when General Smith ordered the extermination of women and all children over ten years of age we forgave him. Why? Because torture and wholesale murder were "necessities of war," and this war is going to put money into our pockets.

Our doings in the Philippines have been recited with many lofty phrases. But there, in homely English, is the meaning of them.

To measure how deeply this cancer of avarice has eaten into the national character, look for a moment at the list of pensioners. Not at the honest men who were disabled in the service of their country, and who deserve her grateful and tender care while they live, but at the huge body of willing paupers who once rendered her a short service, for which they were amply paid at the time, and who, though able and strong, have fed upon her ever since. Not one man among them, apparently, has found sufficient reward in the proud consciousness that he served his country in her hour of peril. He chooses rather to take pay and more pay in dollars and cents from her every month while he lives.

Jesus Christ held an ideal man before the world, pure, bold, unselfish, giving his life to serve God and to help his brother. That man has drawn humanity upward for nineteen centuries.

But now we have a new model. "Get money," shouts the modern teacher to our boys. "Why should you starve? Treat yourselves to the best of life as did the young Roman in the days of Augustus. Get money—Rem facias—it is the only good!"

But in our universal, wild rush to the feet of the golden calf, can we not go back for a moment to facts, to plain common sense? The ruler of Wall street—what are the realities of life to him? His millions, his aching jaw, his drunken son—the woman whom he loved, who is dead? Do the millions actually buy him rest, comfort, happiness? Do they give him any hold upon the world into which he soon must go, and go without a dollar?

There were men richer than he in the old Roman days, who often sat, smiling, to watch the superb lions in the arena below while the followers of a miserable Galilean Jew were fed to them.

They are gone and Rome is gone. But the Galilean still lives.

In the fury of our haste to be rich I often think of those ignorant folk of whom I told you who valued money only for the rest and content it could buy, and knew when they had enough of it.

Are they mad, or more sane than any of us?—The Independent.

When God leads us we go under His sheltering care, but when without His guidance we go into places of danger, we take our life in our own hands. If we venture into places of temptation when duty does not lead us there, we put ourselves outside the divine protection.—J. R. Miller.

my only Son die for their ransom? Did he not pay the price? Not one drop of blood was retained in his arteries; not one nerve of his that was not wrung in the torture. He took in his own body and soul all the suffering that those sinners deserve. They pleaded that sacrifice; they took the full pardon that I promised to all who, through my Son, earnestly applied for it, and it passed out of my mind that they were offenders. I forgot all about it. Yes, I forgot all about it. "Their sins and their iniquities do I remember no more." A sin forgetting God! That is clear beyond and far above a sin pardoning God. How often we hear it said, "I can forgive, but I cannot forget." That is equal to saying, "I verbally admit it is all right, but I will keep the old grudge good." There is something in the demeanor that seems to say: "I would not do you harm. Indeed I wish you well, but that unfortunate affair can never pass out of my mind." There may no hard words pass between them, but until death breaks in the same coolness remains. But God lets our pardoned offenses go into oblivion. He never throws them up to us again. He feels as kindly toward us as though we had been spotless and positively angelic all along.

Many years ago a family consisting of the husband and wife and little girl of two years lived far out in a cabin on a western prairie. The husband took a few cattle to market. Before he started his little child asked him to buy for her a doll, and he promised. He could after the sale of the cattle purchase household necessities and certainly would not forget the doll he had promised. In the village to which he went he sold the cattle and obtained the groceries for his household and the doll for his little darling. He started home along the dismal road at nightfall. As he went along on horseback a thunderstorm broke, and in the most lonely part of the road and in the heaviest part of the storm he heard a child's cry. Robbers had been known to do some bad work along that road, and it was known that this herdsman had money with him, the price of the cattle sold. The herdsman first thought it was a stratagem to have him halt and be despoiled of his treasures, but the child's cry became more keen and rending, and so he dismounted and felt around in the darkness and all in vain until he thought of a hollow that he remembered near the road where the child might be, and for that he started and, sure enough, found a little one fagged out and drenched of the storm and almost dead. He wrapped it up as well as he could and mounted his horse and resumed his journey home. Coming in sight of his cabin, he saw it all lighted up and supposed his wife had kindled all these lights so as to guide her husband through the darkness. But no. The house was full of excitement, and the neighbors were gathered and stood around the wife of the house, who was insensible as from some great calamity. On inquiry the returned husband found that the little child of that cabin was gone. She had wandered out to meet her father and get the present he had promised, and the child was lost. Then the father unrolled from the blanket the child he had found in the fields and lo! it was his own child and the lost one of the prairie home, and the cabin quaked with the shout over the lost one found! How suggestive of the fact that once we were lost in the open fields or among the mountain crags, God's wandering children, and he found us, dying in the tempest and wrapped us in the mantle of his love and fetched us home, gladness and congratulation bidding us welcome. The fact is that the world does not know God or they would all flock to him.

A Story of Garibaldi.

There are certain names so magnetic that their pronunciation thrills all who hear them. Such is the name of the Italian soldier and liberator, Garibaldi. Marching with his troops, he met a shepherd who was in great distress because he had lost a lamb. Garibaldi said to his troops, "Let us help this poor shepherd find his lamb." And so, with lanterns and torches, they explored the mountains, but did not find the lamb, and after an unsuccessful search late at night they went to their encampment. The next morning Garibaldi was found asleep far on into the day, and they awakened him for some purpose and found that he had not given up the search when the soldiers did, but had kept on still further into the night and had found it, and he pulled down the blankets from his couch, and there lay the lamb, which Garibaldi ordered immediately taken to its owner. So the commander of all the hosts of heaven turned aside from his glorious and victorious march through the centuries of heaven and said, "I will go and recover that lost world and that race of whom Adam was the progenitor, and let all who will accompany me." And through the night they came, but I do not see that the angelic escort came any farther than the clouds, but their most illustrious leader came all the way down, and by the time his errand is done our little world, our wandering and lost world, our world fleecy with the light, will be found in the bosom of the Great Shepherd, and then all heaven will take up the cantata and sing, "The lost sheep found!"

Come Into Mercy and Pardon.

So I set open the wide gate of my text, inviting you all to come into the mercy and pardon of God—yea, still further, into the ruins of the place where once was kept the knowledge of your iniquities. The place has been torn down and the records destroyed, and you will find the ruins more dilapidated and broken and prostrate than the ruins of Melrose or Kenilworth, for from these last ruins you can pick up some fragment of a sculptured stone or you can see the curve of some broken arch, but after your repentance and your forgiveness you cannot find in all the memory of God a fragment of your pardoned sins so large as a needle's point. "Their sins and their iniquities will I remember no more."

Six different kinds of sounds were heard on that night which was interjected into the daylight of Christ's assassination. The neighing of the war-horses—for some of the soldiers were in the saddle—was one sound, the bang of the hammers was a second sound, the jeer of malignants was a third sound, the weeping of friends and followers was a fourth sound, the splash of blood on the rocks was a fifth sound, and the groan of the expiring Lord was a sixth sound. And they all commingled into one sadness. Over a place in Russia where wolves were pursuing a load of travelers and to save them a servant sprang from the sled into the mouths of the wild beasts and was devoured and thereby the other lives were saved are inscribed the words, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friend." Many a surgeon in our own time has in tracheotomy with his own lips drawn from the windpipe of a diphtheritic patient that which cured the patient and slew the surgeon, and all have honored the self sacrifice.

Since that time the demand for them has steadily increased every year, and we believe that the reason for this increased demand for the goods is due to the fact that all of these Brands have every year exceeded their guaranteed analysis in commercial value. For instance, the guaranteed analysis on—

Alliance	" 15.20,	" " " 17.71

This shows that the average excess on the above Brands is $2.12½ per ton, which is not only greater than any other factory gives you, but is more than we have ever given before.

Editorial.

The greater part of the appreciative sketch of Captain Irby, copied from the Times last week, was written by his devoted friend, Bro. Richard Ferguson. He told the editor this week with great emotion that he had lost the best friend he ever had, outside of his immediate family.

"RED" JOURNALISM.

The Richmond Times has some good qualities, and it is a source of regret to the friends of good morals in Virginia to see it following in the track of the "yellow" journals of the North. It had an editorial a few days ago rejoicing in the fact that it had bought a new color press and had again set the lead in Virginia journalism. It is a lead which it is devoutly to be desired that no other paper will follow. It is incomprehensible to the editor of this paper how the men who are at the head of the Times can look with any satisfaction upon the paper which they is sued last Sunday morning. A newspaper issued on Sunday is bad enough, but to put such a newspaper as last Sunday's Times in the hands of people, young and old, on Sunday morning certainly does not help any man to be better. It does not promote reverence or regard for the Sabbath. Such a paper might be expected from some people, but the citizens of Virginia have a right to expect better things from the Christian gentleman at the head of the Times than to scatter broadcast throughout the Commonwealth of Virginia such stuff as they sent out last Sunday (July 6th), and then boast of it as a great achievement. The Southside Sentinel, of Middlesex, rightly says, "The sooner the Times abandons its color printing the better."

THE LOCAL PREACHER.

The discussion in reference to the local ministry was quite interesting. The report of the committee favored the placing of the local preacher entirely under the care of the District Conference. It also recommended that when a local preacher is under report of immorality the report may be investigated and tried where the offence was alleged to have been committed, and by the authorities having jurisdiction there.

Both of these changes are in some sense in the nature of an experiment, but the first item has probably more to commend it. It has been clearly manifest for many years that there were many of the local ministry who were not doing any real work. They assist occasionally at sacramental services, and marry couples in the neighborhood, but are not in any sense under the control of the presiding elder or of the preacher in charge. They might as well be simply church members as to be licensed ministers. It was very properly held that men who did not place enough value upon the license to be willing to place themselves under the care of the District Conference, and to take time to attend the Conference whenever circumstances would permit, were not likely to be of any service to the Church, and that the law would have the very salutary effect of weeding out the indifferent and incompetent men, and thus the dignity and honor of the local ministry would be increased. Dr. Tigert, in his speech, which is given below, called attention to a fact, which was of much interest to the editor on his trip to England last year. There the local ministry has great influence, and is very effective. Indeed, the work could not be carried on there at the various points without the aid of the local preachers. The plan of the circuit is made out at the beginning of the year, and the local preachers are assigned regular appointments, following after the travelling preachers, all of the appointments getting service from the regular travelling preacher, and most of them from the local preacher also. It is doubtful whether we will ever again get much work from the local ministry, as the tendency among us is very strong to divide up the circuits and make it possible for the regular pastor to be at every church every Sunday, or at least every other Sunday. It is not certain that our plan of sub-division is the best plan. The editor believes that the plan of a circuit with a preacher in charge and junior preacher cannot be improved upon, and that in our cities especially the way to care for the outlying districts is to join two or three or even four preachers in one charge, with a great central church or three or four weaker churches with it. But the trend of the work is in the other direction in most places, and there is a great desire for independence. Wherever that is the case the local preacher is not likely to flourish, and it is probable that he will be a rapidly decreasing factor in our work. This is of interest as meeting the position of several speakers that the change in the law had already caused a decrease of 169 in the number of the local ministry. The law has no doubt cut off some inefficient men, but the tendency of the times cut off more.

As to the second point, that of the place of trial of a local preacher, the chief objection to the change is that it does not follow our usage. The travelling ministry are not tried except by their own Conferences, the members are not tried except by the churches to which they belong, and it opens the way to petty persecution and the wreaking of spite and prejudice against a man. There is not sufficient reason for the change. It is true that sometimes a man might be guilty of immorality and he might not be brought to trial and condemned because of the difficulty of getting witnesses to attend at a distance. But these cases are few, and it does not seem reasonable to make a general change in our law for these few.

The most interesting part of the defect is given from the Daily Advocate, preceded by the report of the committee, which was adopted:

COMMITTEE ON ITINERANCY.

(Report No. 8.)

Memorials concerning local preachers, from Fort Worth District, Northwest Texas Conference; from St. Louis Conference, Mexican Central Mission Conference, North Missouri Conference, from District Conference of Lafayette District, North Alabama Conference, from Alabama Conference, and from the South Carolina Conference, have been considered by a sub-committee. The Committee on Itinerancy makes the following recommendation:

Strike out of paragraph 81, page 39, "local preachers and".

Strike out paragraph 82, page 57.

Strike out of question 21, paragraph 86, page 43, "local preachers and"; also, strike out "the exhorters" and insert "their," so that the question will read: "21. Have the exhorters passed an examination of character, and have their licenses been renewed?"

At end of paragraph 74, page 37, add, "The District Conference shall take cognizance of all the local preachers within the district, and shall inquire annually into the gifts, labors and usefulness of each by name.

In paragraph 168, answer 1, page 75, strike out "Fourth Quarterly" and insert "annually to the District," so that this part of the paragraph shall read: "And they shall report annually in writing to the District Conference the extent and result of their labors."

Amend paragraph 170, answer 3, page 75, so as to read: "When any travelling preacher is located, he shall be amenable to the District Conference of the district within the bounds of which he last travelled until he presents his certificate of location to some Quarterly Conference."

Amend paragraph 280, answer —, so as to read: "To the District Conference of the district within which he resides; but when a local preacher is under report of immorality, said report may be investigated and the case tried where the offence is alleged to have been committed, and by the authorities having jurisdiction there."

Amend paragraph 281, answer 1, page 117, by striking out "preacher in charge" and inserting "Presiding Elder." Also, strike out the phrase "before the Quarterly Conference" and insert, at end of the paragraph, "They shall notify the Presiding Elder of their finding, and he shall notify the accused."

Amend paragraph 284, by striking out "preacher in charge" and inserting "Presiding Elder."

Amend paragraph 285 by inserting at the beginning these words, "When notified that a trial is found necessary, the Presiding Elder shall call a Committee of Trial, composed of not less than seven nor more than thirteen official members of our Church. The accused shall have the same right of challenge as has a travelling preacher. Strike out "President of the Quarterly Conference" and insert "Presiding Elder." Strike out "present" and insert "of the committee." Strike out all after and including "Quarterly Conference" and insert "committee shall be final, save as to the right of appeal."

Amend paragraph 287, question 5, by striking out "Quarterly" and inserting "District."

Make same change twice in paragraph 288.

After paragraph 75 add another paragraph, to read as follows:

"The District Conference shall elect annually, on nomination of the Presiding Elder, a Licensing Committee of six, or four, of which the Presiding Elder shall be a member and chairman. They shall serve until the ensuing Annual Conference, and in case of absolute necessity shall have the power, by unanimous vote, on thorough examination on the prescribed course of study, to license proper and duly recommended preachers to preach. In cases where

CHAPTER XII.

Edward began the reading of Mrs. Preston's letter in a low voice, but with a good deal of excitement. He was deeply roused by what she had written and tremendously angry with Willis, although if he had been asked to tell exactly why, he might not have been able to tell very clearly.

He read the letter entirely through without once looking up, and Willis listened in silence without changing his position. When Edward finished and looked over at him, he was evidently angrier than ever, for he suddenly walked over to Willis and exclaimed harshly:

"What business have you to be thinking of such a thing as this?"

Willis took his feet down from the table and looked at Edward quietly. His answer partly calmed Edward, who never remained angry or excited very long at a time.

"I have no business to be thinking of it if I have no business to care for a girl whom I have always honored in my thought."

"You have not honored her in your thought. If you had, you would have stopped drinking and going with the fast crowd all this time."

Willis turned pale, and for a moment Edward thought he was going to strike him with his clenched fist. Then he turned his face away and remarked in a low voice:

"That's true enough. At the same time, I've said the same thing to myself. I know this is true also. If I have ever had a good thought for the last two years, it is due to her. That much, at least, is to be said of my feeling for her."

"At the same time, this is impossible," continued Edward, striking the letter with his hand.

"I don't know whether it is or not. It depends altogether on your sister to say."

"I shall have something to say about it," retorted Edward, his passion rising again.

"You will not have anything to say if she actually cares enough to go with me."

"She doesn't care for you, and never will!" said Edward almost savagely.

"You don't know," replied Willis quietly.

Edward was silent a moment. He did not know anything about Freeda's feelings in the matter. Since his own unexpected feeling for Miss Seton he had come to learn that in cases of love people could not always determine with mathematical certainty just what a person might do under certain conditions. On the point of Freeda's probable action he was really in doubt. Only it seemed like a monstrous proposition for Willis to entertain or for Freeda to consider for a moment.

"There is one way you can find out," Edward ventured to say.

"Yes, and I intend to find out pretty soon too."

"I can't wish you success," replied Edward, as he walked back to his own table. As he sat down he added in a milder tone:

"Willis, of course I don't need to say that I believe it would be a calamity for my sister to marry you. She has been brought up in an entirely different world. She is poor; you are rich. She is a church member; you are not. She has a perfect horror, as I have, for all the vices that are familiar to you. You could not make her happy."

"I could, if she loved me as I love her."

"It's impossible. You are too far apart even to sympathize with each other. Besides, she never will care for you as long as you continue to drink and gamble."

"But I've quit all that. Haven't I shown you that I can master myself? Haven't I lived all straight enough lately? And all for her sake too?"

Edward did not reply. He had little faith in the spasms of Willis' reform.

"Can't I live down the past all right? Is your sister never going to marry any one but an out and out saint? There are mighty few of 'em among the men."

"I don't think it does any good to talk about it. I have my opinion, and it won't change. One thing I'm very confident of, and that is that Freeda will never care anything for you. She is here in college to get an education. She is not old enough to get married. She is the last person in the world to think of such a thing. It is all as absurd as it can be."

"It is not absurd at all. Good God, Ned, don't you see how I am situated? I don't care for the old college. All the time I've been here I've been tempted by the fast set to do the things I've been doing. I'm no scholar. I hate books, except novels. When I think of what it's all for, I don't care a rap for the education. But I like business, and I know as well as anything that I can succeed with the opening my uncle has made for me. Now, if I can settle down in a home of my own I shall be in a fair way to make a man of myself. No other girl ever appealed to me like your sister. I feel as if I could promise her anything and keep it, too, even as I haven't kept my promise to my own mother. Does that mean nothing to you? It means everything to me."

There was quite a silence in the room. Then Edward spoke very slowly:

"Then you want my sister to sacrifice herself to save you. Is that it?"

"I don't ask her to sacrifice anything if she does not care for me," replied Willis proudly.

Edward did not reply to this, and after awhile Willis said: "I'm going to write to your mother and ask her if I may speak to Freeda. If she gives her consent, I suppose it's all right."

"I shall never give mine."

"But she is of age. She can decide for herself."

"I mean that it will never be with my approval that you ask Freeda to marry you. I haven't any fears about the answer she will give you."

Nevertheless, he did have some fears, and Willis seemed to know that fact.

"It all rests with her, then. Will you promise me one thing, Ned? Will you promise not to say anything to her before I get word from your mother? After all, isn't a man to be allowed to choose for himself when he loves a person?"

Edward hesitated. He did not know just what his mother would say. But what Willis said had a good deal of weight after all.

"Yes, I'll promise that," he said at last reluctantly.

"All right. Thank you," replied Willis, and then, as by agreement, the conversation stopped.

A week later Willis showed Edward a letter from Mrs. Blake.

Edward read it through in some surprise. It was in answer to Willis' letter, in which he had evidently gone into a full account of the matter. He had put his case as strongly as possible, and Mrs. Blake had evidently sympathized with him to a degree. His proposal concerning Freeda had come as a great surprise, but she was willing that Freeda should decide her future. She had always given her great freedom and did not wish to coerce her feeling. At the same time she ventured to express her strong regret that Mr. Preston was not a Christian by profession and more than hinted her doubts concerning Freeda's acceptance of such a future on account of her religious home training, etc. The letter closed with a reluctant assent to Willis' appeal to be allowed to speak to Freeda.

"It's all right so far as your mother is concerned," said Willis, with some satisfaction, as Edward handed back the letter.

Edward did not answer.

"There's one more thing I want to ask of you, Ned, and that is that you let me speak to Freeda before you say anything to her against me. Will you?"

"I won't say anything to her. Let her settle it," replied Edward shortly.

This was about two weeks before commencement. Three days after, as Edward was going over to the library to get a book, he met Freeda coming from the hall. Her face bore marks of weeping, and Edward knew at once what the reason was.

He went up to her and faced her with sympathy.

"Come, Freeda, take a walk with me out on the lower campus and tell me what you can. I know about it."

Freeda silently assented, and they went down to a seat under an old elm and sat down there after walking slowly around the wide path that encircled the campus.

"And I couldn't give him any other answer, Ned, could I?" asked Freeda as she continued her account of the unexpected interview she had had with Willis.

"No, I don't see how you could," replied Edward gravely. "And yet you say, dear, that you had begun to like him very much?"

"Like" isn't the word to use, Ned. I'm afraid I think a great deal too much of him for my own happiness now. And yet I felt as sure all the time he was asking me to marry him and looking so handsome and so brave—here Freeda choked a little and Edward waited in sympathetic silence for her to recover—"so brave, Ned, that I had hard work to say no. And yet I knew it was for the best. I told him plainly that I feared for my future with him on account of his drinking especially. And he promised everything about giving it up for my sake. But I have no faith in his promises. Isn't it strange, Ned, even though

I believe I have somehow come to—actually think more of him than of any one, I still know, somehow, that after awhile he would begin to drink again, and our home would be ruined? It's an awful thing, the drink habit, isn't it, Ned?"

"It certainly is, dear. And you don't believe you could keep him from it?" he asked, finding his sympathy for his sister softening his feeling toward Willis.

"No, I've no faith in that, Ned," replied Freeda sadly. "I don't believe in marrying a young man to reform him. A man has no right to ask a girl to do that. He ought to come to her as pure and free from vices as he expects her to be. Men are not expected to marry bad women to reform them. What right have they to expect a girl to do that for them?"

"You will not regret your decision, dear," at last Edward said. "I am very glad of it. I feel as you do about it. You would never be happy."

"No, I don't regret it," answered Freeda, pushing her foot nervously over the cinders at the foot of the seat. And then, to Edward's surprise and distress, she clasped her hands in her lap, while the tears ran over her face as she said, "But I am very unhappy now, Ned, for I think I loved him very much."

That evening Willis did not come in until quite late, and Edward waited

"You will not regret your decision, dear," for him. The minute he saw Willis' face he knew that he had taken his answer in a hard way.

"Of course you know all about it," he said, with a short laugh. "She's too good for me. I made her confess that she cared for me though. You said she didn't."

Edward came very near getting angry again. Nothing but his sense of Willis' keep disappointment kept him from it.

"I'm going home this week," Willis continued shortly. "I'll skip examinations anyway."

Edward tried to persuade him to stay and finish out the work of the year.

"What's the use? I'm going to New York this summer anyhow. Your sister will have a good deal to answer for if I go to the bad when I get to the city."

At that Edward boiled over with righteous wrath.

THE LOCAL PREACHER.

It is clearly impossible for the applicant to reach the District Conference, the Presiding Elder may examine him and report to the Conference."

DISCUSSION.

R. H. Mahon: We have two reports here. I favor the adoption of the minority report, which is simply to transfer back to the Quarterly Conference all power to license persons to preach, and to renew their license, and to recommend persons to the Annual Conference for admission for ordination. Now this power to grant license to preach by District Conferences has not worked very well. It has proved to be somewhat of a hardship to some of our local preachers. Our Bishops, who have general supervision of the whole work and have looked after it during the past quadrennium—in fact, during the past eight years, have taken pains in their quadrennial address to suggest this very action to us. They understand it very well, and know it better than some of us, and because of this it would be well for the General Conference to take this action.

J. J. Tigert: Mr. President and Brethren—It is with diffidence that I present my opinion upon a subject like this, wherein I have had very little experience, and particularly when I find my opinions differ from those of experienced presiding elders like Dr. Mahon, yet I have given, I think, very careful attention to this question of the relation of local preachers to the Quarterly and District Conferences. When I went abroad last summer as one of your representatives at the Ecumenical Conference, there was nothing in European Methodism that struck me with greater force than the wide difference between the status of the local preacher in English and American Methodism. As Dr. Mahon has indicated, we have for eight years, since the General Conference at Memphis, been in this condition. We have part of the supervision of the local preacher in the Quarterly Conference and part in the District Conference, so that this member of our ministry has had two different courts to which he might appear and to which he might be answerable. Now the question is as to whether we shall take a step further and put everything in the District Conference, or, as I see it, whether we shall take a step backward, and put everything in the Quarterly Conference? I believe that we shall do the local preacher a very useful service, and greatly dignify and enlarge the functions of the District Conference, if we put everything surrounding local preachers under the jurisdiction of the District Conferences; and I will tell you why. One argument against this is that we have had a decrease of the number of local preachers since the law has been in operation. Now, I regard that as one of the great merits of the law, and I mean no disrespect to my local brethren. Hear me; I do not mean that I do not desire an increase in the rank of our local preachers. On the contrary, the measure that I advocate will in the long run secure that increase, and at the same time secure the efficacy of the local ministry. And whatever you may think about it, it seems to me the facts are something like this: Just as occasionally we have a travelling preacher who is indifferent to attendance on the Annual Conference and does not watch his duties and his interests there, so we have a class of local preachers who do not sufficiently interest themselves in Church matters to note the time when their District Conference meets; and when ever a man carelessly allows his District Conference to go by and does not take interest enough to be present and look after the renewal of the license, I say it is a blessing to the man and a blessing to the Church that his license lapses. Therefore, this law, though not designed to do so, is performing a useful service in eliminating from the local ranks a good many brethren (not a large number proportionately to the whole) who are really inefficient. They wake up at the close of the year and find out that they are no longer ministers, and then they begin to raise a row about this law. I think the law has very quietly and very effectively done a most useful service to the Church. Now, as to the District Conferences. I say that the difficulty about that tribunal is that it has lacked definite and official ecclesiastical jurisdiction. I believe we have taken a step in the right direction, and we can by persisting in this movement build up the District Conference as the court of the local preacher in our ecclesiastical economy. I believe that just in proportion as the local preacher is placed at the disposal of the District Conference, there will be accomplished a useful work for the District, for the local preacher and for the Church at large. Now, hear me on another point in that connection. The usefulness of the local preacher in British Methodism largely rises out of the fact that he is used to fill the vacant appointments on the circuits. Now, we frequently have no local preachers who put themselves at the disposal of the District Conference. I came near introducing a measure at this General Conference that we should formulate all the business of the District Conference in a series of questions and answers, and that after we had formulated the present business of the District Conference in a series of questions and answers like those asked in the Annual and Quarterly Conferences, I wanted to add this additional question: "What local preachers in the District put themselves at the disposal of the presiding elder for appointment within the limits of the District?" While that is an ideal that may lie far ahead, upon careful consideration my conclusion was that the time had not yet come to introduce the question in the District Conference. Nevertheless, I believe that if this General Conference will vest all the jurisdiction over the local preacher absolutely and exclusively in the District Conference, that by the next General Conference we may introduce that question after we shall have weeded out these comparatively indifferent local preachers and secured a body in the local ministry who would come to the District Conferences and fill appointments. I believe the Lord knew what He was about when He appointed one day in seven for worship and not one day in thirty. In many of our circuits we get appointments only once a month. I say do not take a step backward. Put the whole jurisdiction in the District Conference. Give it definite business to do. Make the local preacher absolutely responsible to it, weed out the inefficient men, and give us a body of men who at least can be depended upon to take the vacant pulpits in the circuit appointments, and you will build up the District Conferences into a real useful function in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

J. R. Scroggs: In 1894 at the General Conference in Memphis I voted in favor of the present law on two principles: One was to decrease the number or quantity, and to increase the quality. My experience since then is that we are reducing the quantity, but we are not improving the quality, and for that reason I want to see the whole thing go back to the Quarterly Conferences.

J. H. McGehee: I have not crossed the water, sir. I am not prepared to report on English Methodism. I have been in the field where Dr. Tigert has not been, as he very properly says. I have seen the working of this. We have made a great mistake in carrying this authority to our District Conferences; the sooner we get back the better for the Church. The present law is expensive. Local preachers, like itinerants, have not heavy purses. Let us have it nearer to them. In the next place, the present law places the examination of character in one tribunal, and the renewal of the license in another, so that men are licensed to preach without their character having been passed upon. That is objection number two. The minority report obviates all that and puts it in the right place in the Quarterly Conference. In the third place, as Dr. Scroggs justly stated, we have decreased the number of local preachers. I do not believe that it is the best thing to do. No, sir, it is not the best. If we can multiply them and they are suitable men, their work is needed all over the circuit. The Church is suffering at that point. We must do nothing to discourage this strong arm of the circuit. In the next place the old law as it now stands has not improved the quality at all. We have been in the field; we know what we are talking about on this subject. I see nothing good that has been accomplished by the old law.

T. L. Mellen: I want to say that out of the depths of my own experience, which, however, is not as extensive as Bro. McGehee's, that I cordially favor the majority report. When we come to talk about the law that has been in existence for the past eight years we can hardly consider it to have been a fair test of that law in so short a time, and yet my observation is that it has wrought a good deal of good, and by the adoption of the majority report it will work a good deal more good. When I went upon the district that I am now serving I found almost an army of local preachers. They had a license, but it seemed to me the only object in obtaining a license was to put "Rev." before their names and have folks call them "Parson." They were doing solutely nothing. Some had been licensed for years and had never made an effort to preach. They have got thinned out in that district now, those that are there are doing something and co-operating with the preachers. What we want is to put the whole thing back into the District Conference. This going back to the Quarterly Conference, as Dr. Tigert has said, is a step backward, and it is a real step for us to go back there. Now as the law laying a burden upon the young man who wants to go to the District Conference. Why, there is not a District Conference that is held so far away that a young man can't go on horseback. He may not be able to pay his own fare, but if it is a case of merit there will always be found somebody ready to help him meet the expense of travel. And the reason we don't go ninety-nine times out of a hundred is because of sheer laziness; that laziness will grow on them until they get the license. Let us stand by the majority report and vote down the minority.

J. W. Boswell: Mr. President, in Dr. Tigert's observation of the working of the local preachers in England is taken as an argument, certainly an argument is in favor of the minority report, because while he said little about the quality of the preachers in England, he did say something about the number. We naturally inferred that our English Methodists, without the great number of preachers that they now have, would not be as successful in their work as they are. The time has not come in the history of our Church when we can dispense with this arm of the service and the way we are going now it will not be very long until we will not be short of men fit for the ministry but short of men in the local ranks. I followed a man on a local circuit and found that in eighteen months he had decreased his congregation one-third. He announced to his congregation on Sunday to Sunday that the back of his Church was open, and he was like for all to go that way, and he said the sooner they go the better. I believe Mellen's policy is to be pursued, he has pursued it in the Mississippi Conference, it will not be very long we will have no local preachers. The number of our local preachers decreased last year 169, and yet the general minutes of our Church show that our Bishops were obliged to fall back on the local ranks and supplied vacant ministers to the number of 400.

M. J. Cofer: I suppose this has been thought about a good deal, and I am ready to vote. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The Bishop: Dr. Black, as chairman, has a right to speak.

W. C. Black: I wish, as chairman of this committee, to ask Dr. Alderson to take my place.

T. L. Mellen: If Dr. Alderson is advocating the majority report, I believe he will tell us distinctly the difference between the majority report and the law as it now stands.

E. W. Alderson: Mr. President, true, as these brethren say, to a the Quarterly Conference will be to go back to the position of the Church of a hundred years ago. We are just a hundred years in advance of what the Church was one hundred years ago. That law was fitted to the condition of the Church then, and it is not now. The brethren say that 400 men did supply work during the past year, but there were six thousand or more local preachers out of which that supply could be drawn, so I don't think there is any danger in that direction. I make a bold challenge on this floor that no local preacher who is doing efficient service to the Church has ever been taken off by virtue of this transfer of license to the District Conference. Now, the brethren contend that we are taking a step backward. We should not do that; but we should remedy the defects in the law as it stands. These defects, I think, are thoroughly and fully remedied in this bill. The purpose of this bill is not to decrease the number of local preachers, but, as a matter of fact, we all know that as the Church more thoroughly covers the territory the need of local preachers does diminish to some extent. The contention that applicants for admission on trial in the travelling connection will be decreased by this law is an absurdity on its face. Tell me a man who has not got snap enough to come to the District Conference can stand the examination. If you put the license back in the Quarterly Conference, his father and his uncle, and his cousin, and his neighbor and acquaintances and friends can vote him a license on his moral character, irrespective of his educational or other qualifications. Let me take time to call your attention to the changes that this law proposes. It proposes to obviate the difficulties and imperfections in the double jurisdiction over the local ministry. In the first place, under the old, a local preacher, if charged with immorality, is tried before his Quarterly Conference. There are his relatives; there are his neighbors; there are his friends; there are his bitter enemies in the jury that tries him. He will have to wait three months for trial. He has not the right of challenge of the men who are to pass upon his case. We do not propose to try local preachers at the District Conference. That would not be practicable; but we propose, in all cases, to try a local preacher before a committee of not less than seven nor more than thirteen members of the Church, with absolutely the same right of challenge that a travelling preacher has. An investigating committee is appointed. It goes to a committee of three to investigate the case. If a trial is necessary they report to the presiding elder, and he summons a trial committee. Of course local preachers are in that trial committee. The local preacher has, for the first time in his history, the right of challenge, and challenge for cause. He is tried, not before his neighbor, his relatives, his friends or his enemies, but before thirteen brethren selected throughout the district, or without the bounds of the district, if necessary, as an impartial jury to pass upon his case.

Now one or two other points. In the case of a large and sparsely settled district, and especially in our mission fields, there is a provision that in cases of imperative necessity of this sort the presiding elder himself may make the examination and report to the District Conference. Now it seems to me that in this arrangement we have obviated the evils of the law as it now stands; we have given a unified jurisdiction. We are not taking a step backwards, but if the law as we put it into operation to-day does not prove a success, then the men who have advocated a transfer of the jurisdiction over the local ministry to the District Conference can't complain if their brethren come forward and demand a change; but I do persist that we should not take a backward step when it has not been proven on this Conference floor that one solitary efficient man has been lost to the local ranks. On the other hand, it is palpably certain that the general condition of the local ministry has been developed and uplifted. We ought not to take that backward step until we have given the law a fair chance. I hope you will pass the majority report, and then, after a few years, if it does not work well, I, for one, will not contend for a continuation of any law that does not work well for the Church.

The vote was taken upon the adoption of the minority report, and the same was not adopted—ayes, 66; noes, 107.

The majority report was then adopted—ayes, 130; noes, 53.

IT HAD TO BE DONE.

The following story is told by Mr. James Barnes in an article on "A Hundred Years at West Point" in The Outlook as an illustration of the West Point idea of obedience and discipline.

During the war a young officer once reported to a volunteer brigade commander that he had orders from division headquarters to take a battery that held the top of a sweeping slope on the front of the Confederate line, the shells from which were playing havoc with the Union infantry that were deploying through a wooded ravine.

"What!" exclaimed the volunteer brigadier; "are you going to try to take those guns with cavalry? Impossible! You can't do it."

"Oh, yes, I can, sir," was the reply; "I've got the orders in my pocket."

This West Pointer did not doubt in the least what he was going to do, nor his capacity, and, strange to say, he did it, for, advancing at a charge suddenly from the wood across the open ground, he took the battery in the flank before they could change effectually the position of the guns, and he brought them back with him.

Don't look for flaws as you go through life;

And even when you find them,

It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind,

And look for the virtue behind them.

For the cloudiest night has a hint of light.

Repentance is a new mind about God.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

On the dividing line between Knox and Union counties, East Tennessee, recently died an aged negro, Ferry Chesney. While the American people were celebrating the one hundred and twenty-sixth anniversary of the Declaration of Independence the death angel visited the cabin of this aged negro. He was as old as the nation, having been born between the years 1770 and 1780. The first sixty or more years of his life was spent with his original master, Jonathan Jackson, at Clarks-ville, on the Roanoke and Dan rivers, in Virginia. He was brought to East Tennessee about the year 1838, and three years later was sold by Corbin Jackson, administrator of his father's estate, to John Chesney, one of the oldest settlers on Bull Run creek. He remained the trusty faithful slave of Mr. Chesney till the emancipation proclamation freed him, as far as it could do so. He then built a cabin of the most primitive style five miles southeast of Maynardsville, where he led a hermit's life, and where, unattended in his dying hour by a human being, he ended his long life of about 125 years. He was a remarkable man. His portrait shows that he had a fine head and face, indicative of honesty and determination—the head and face of a man that might well have been the head of a tribe or nation. Scarcely less remarkable than his great age was his retentive memory. His sight and hearing became somewhat defective in his extreme age, but his mental facilities were the wonder of all who knew him. He had always been a keen observer of passing events, and his mind was stored with an inexhaustible supply of interesting incidents and reminiscences of by-gone days. No inquest was held over his remains, and he was buried in the old Chesney grave-yard, near his beloved master.

See what a man "Our Bob" is! Next season he is to deliver "The Fiddle and the Bow" one hundred times for $25,000—a pretty good salary for a Carter county mountain boy! How this tinsel talent sells! And yet how little would be paid for the deepest and newest philosophy! All go into ecstasies over a flower garden; few would take a second look at a corn-field, unless it was theirs.

The Summer School in Knoxville still goes on. One of the professors of the University is Thomas W. Jordan, I. L. D., professor of Latin. He was born and reared by Methodist parents in Newbern, Va., educated at E. & H. College and at the University of Virginia. He is son-in-law to that grand old man, Prof. Edmund Longley. Jordan is taking rank, and is a real stand-by in religion in the University. I send you the following extract from his recent address before the Summer School:

"That's the old American idea. Make a man a man and let him be."

"All very well, but first make him a man. That is not done by releasing him from every other obligation to earth and heaven and saying: 'Now go it. Cash is the goal. Every fellow for himself, and devil take the hindmost,'

It ends in every fellow for himself and devil take us all. For 'I do know,' with old Thomas Carlyle, 'that cash payment is not the sole relation of human beings. Cash never yet paid one man fully his deserts to another, nor could it, nor can it, now or henceforth, to the end of the world. In brief, we shall have to dismiss this cash gospel rigorously to its own place. We shall have to know that there is some infinitely deeper gospel subsidiary, explanatory and daily and hourly corrective of the cash one, or else that the cash one and all others are fast travelling.'

"This doctrine of economics, harsh enough in itself, has been further hardened by the tone—I do not say the purpose—of much of our teaching in the field of biology. Its vocabulary is loaded down with expressions like 'the struggle for existence,' 'the rivalry of life,' 'the survival of the fittest'—meaning the strongest, etc. Now all this carrying over of the habits of the lower animals and basing on them a theory of life for men tends not only to take the divine element out of it, but the human. Mr. Huxley may well pray for his 'kindly comet' when he and his are never done telling us that Nature (with a big N) only wants a fair field and a free fight for her darling the strongest. The beatitudes of such a gospel are:

"Blessed are the strong who run over and trample under foot the weak."

"Blessed is the man who gets all he can and keeps all he gets."

"Blessed is the wise virgin who in emergency can fill his own lamp by emptying his neighbor's."

"Blessed are the priest and the Levite who can walk the highways of life in supreme unconcern for the disappointed and defeated who have fallen by the wayside."

"Animalism, hunger, vanity and selfishness in general may be trusted to look out for themselves. The work of encouraging them is entirely superfluous. It has ended in making us act like so many cattle on a crowded car in which one horns and pushes the one in front to make room for himself, and he another, and he another, and when all are horned and pushed and the weak are down and being trampled to death beneath the hoofs of the stronger or more fortunate, we call our bovine philosophy the survival of the fittest. Its whole tendency is to silence the voices of gentleness, meekness, mercy, brotherly kindness, patience, charity. Its ear is dull to such strains as these. 'We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please ourselves.' 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.' 'We are members one of another; and whether one member suffer all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored all the members rejoice with it.' 'He that would be greatest among you let him be the servant of all.' 'Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ.'

"The very comprehensiveness of most of our schemes for reform is their condemnation. Each evening the tired little children in Peter the Hermit's crusade were wont to ask, 'Is this Jerusalem?' 'No, poor children,' as

LESSON IV, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 27.

Text of the Lesson. Ex. xxxiv, 1-35.
Memory Verses. 30-32—Golden Text,
Ex. xx, 3—Commentary Prepared by
Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1. Up, make us gods, which shall go before us.

The topic of our lesson is "Worshiping the Golden Calf," and, although the whole chapter is assigned as a study, lack of space will necessitate limiting our comments to the verses to be printed as the lesson, 1-6, 30-35. Some one has said that whenever we turn away from leaning exclusively upon God either for salvation or for the necessities of the daily path we are virtually saying, "Up, make us gods." This is equal to a rejection of God. These people had not seen Moses nor heard from God for several weeks, and, forgetting their promise to obey, they fail to trust.

2, 3. And Aaron said unto them, Break off the golden earrings . . . and bring them unto me.

When Moses went up into the mount to be alone with God, he said to the elders, "Aaron and Hur are with you," and he referred the people to them as counselors in his absence. Aaron was Moses' mouth or spokesman, and Moses was to him instead of God (Ex. iv, 16; vii, 1); but, Moses being absent, he, like a false prophet, speaks out of his own heart this evil advice (Jer. xxiii, 16). He has no word of warning or help for them as from God.

4. These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt. What a lie, what blasphemy, what dishonor to the living God! Has Aaron lost his reason? He certainly has lost faith in God. See in II Thess. ii, 10, 11, the awful consequences of turning away from the truth. Instead of receiving from their hands the gold to make an idol, they should have received from his mouth the living words of the living God. Through him who should have led them to the God of glory they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox (Ps. cvi, 20).

5. And when Aaron saw it he built an altar before it.

See this sin repeated in the case of Jeroboam and the very words of Aaron used (I Kings xii, 28, 33). This is all the work of the devil from beginning to end, and so is everything like it in the churches and among the people of God today. God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth (John iv, 24).

6. The people sat down to eat and to drink and rose up to play.

See I Cor. x, 7, and it would be well to read the whole chapter. Is it not on the same line of things when in houses built for the worship of God people bearing the name of Christ meet to eat and drink and be entertained or amused? In the next two verses the Lord, while speaking to Moses, calls the people Moses' people which he brought out of Egypt and says, "They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them." They were not acting like the people of God; they were not in His way. See Ps. cxix, 1; John xiv, 6; Josh. i, 7. The Lord suggests that He destroy the whole nation and make of Moses a new nation. Moses intercedes for the people as the Lord's people and is heard. He comes down from the mount, breaks the tables, burns the calf, grinds it to powder, scatters it upon the water and makes the people drink it.

30. I will go up unto the Lord. Peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin.

Thus he puts himself between the sinners and God as a mediator, confessing their sin and seeking atonement, which implies judgment upon sin. See what is written of Phinehas making an atonement in Num. xxv, 10-13. Remember Lev. xvii, 11, and that it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul and see Him, the prophet like unto Moses (Deut. xviii, 18), who, taking the sinner's place and allowing all sin to be laid upon Him, did by bearing our sins in His own body on the tree make atonement sufficient for the sins of the whole world.

31. Oh, this people have sinned a great sin!

All sin is great, and even the thought of foolishness is sin (Prov. xxiv, 9), but some sins are more heinous than others. The Lord Jesus Himself spoke of a sin that hath never forgiveness at the same time that He spoke of the forgiveness of all manner of sins except this particular sin (Mark iii, 28-30). The sin that overtops all others is the rejection of Christ, the Son of God. This is the sin that causes souls to perish (John iii, 18).

32. And if not, blot me, I pray Thee, out of Thy book which Thou hast written.

He is willing to suffer in their stead, if necessary, in order to save them. The same spirit is seen in Paul on behalf of the same people Israel (Rom. ix, 3). The reality is seen in Jesus Christ, who was actually made a curse for them and for us.

33. Whosoever hath sinned against Me him will I blot out of My book.

In Rev. xx, 12, and Mal. iii, 16, we read of several books, but what book is referred to in our lesson perhaps we may not know in this our time of partial knowledge (I Cor. xiii, 9, 12).

34, 35. Behold, Mine angel shall go before thee.

See chapters xxxiii, 2, 15, and xxxiii, 20; Isa. lxi, 9, and thank God for Matt. xxviii, 20; Isa. xli, 10, 13; Deut. xxxi, 8, etc. He is the God of all grace, and He will not forsake His people for His great name's sake. So that we may plead, "Though our iniquities testify against us, do Thou it for Thy name's sake" (I Sam. xii, 22; Jer. xiv, 7).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning July 27, "The Programme of Christianity"—Text, Matt. iv, 23; x, 7, 8.

We are followers of Christ. Our work has been clearly marked out for us. If the spirit of the Master dwells in and rules us, we shall ever find in Him our pattern and shall seek to form our lives on the model of His. He "went about all Galilee teaching in the synagogues and preaching the gospel of the kingdom and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." What wonder that multitudes followed Him from near and far and that they brought their sick from great distance to be cured!

The apostles did similarly when sent out through the land to prepare the way for Him. Even the seventy disciples who went by twos through the villages on evangelizing tours found themselves able to effect marvelous cures and even to cast out evil spirits. In the times after Pentecost some at least of the apostles were able to perform wonderful deeds of healing.

The mission of the church of Jesus Christ is something more than to preach that men are sinners and can be saved through repentance from sin and faith in God through Jesus Christ. She is to teach sound doctrine and maintain the customs and ordinances of divine worship, but she is to do more than this. The church has a duty to the bodies as well as the minds and souls of men. Miraculous powers of healing may not be long continued, but the curative work is to go steadily forward. Men had come to regard the sick with aversion and to think disease a sign of God's displeasure with the one afflicted. "Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" was a question perfectly natural in that time, but shows the current opinion that sickness was a punishment for sins. Jesus taught men to look upon suffering from a different viewpoint. He showed sympathy for those in pain and by relieving the afflicted gave a new conception of God in His relation to men. God is merciful and pitiful as well as just.

Medical science and all the arts of sanitation, nursing and merciful helpfulness of these recent times are directly in accord with the work of Jesus and His commission to His followers. The great development of hospital science, asylums of many kinds for the unfortunate, deaconess work and missions for reform of the fallen are modern adaptations of the mercy and help work which the church has carried on in some form and degree from the first when Peter and Paul were the foremost leaders.

The second department of the League is a most important one and should be so conducted as to interest and train the young people in regard for and visitation of the sick and relief of the poor under the guidance of the pastor and with proper safeguards and precautions. Shakespeare beautifully describes this virtue when he says:

"The quality of mercy is not strained."

The Joyful Spirit.

The child of God should always cultivate the spirit of joy. If one is a real Christian, he is entitled to a joyful life, for God, who made all, is his friend, and He has shown His friendly care not only in His kind providence, but in His infinite grace. Believer, you did not choose God first and persuade Him to come to your help, but He chose you just of His own accord and came down to deliver you. It is He that does the persuading to get you into His kingdom. Do you not have abundant reason to rejoice that you have such a Friend? Not only that, but you are of the rich ones among men—rich in grace and in being heirs with Christ. You are sure of having all that is good for you, if not all you want.—Christian Instructor.

Doing God's Will.

The soul needs lungs and atmosphere in order to live. Prayer is the lungs of the soul, and God is its atmosphere. To neglect prayer is to stop breathing life from God. Prayerless lives are strangled lives. Suffocation is as effective as starvation and more speedy. The soul must exercise in order to grow. Stagnation is as dangerous to growth as starvation or suffocation. The Lord has purposed that our spiritual life should grow strong by exercise. Doing God's will is as essential to growth as feeding on God's word or seeking God's face in prayer.—Christian Intelligencer.

Profanity.

Profaneness is an unmanly and silly vice. It certainly is not a grace in conversation, and it adds no strength to it.

That is ingrained with oath and the blasphemy that bolsters up an opinion does not make it any more correct. Nay, the use of loose expletives argues a limited range of ideas and a consciousness of being on the wrong side. And if we can find no other phrases through which to vent our choking passion we had better repress that passion.—Dr. Chapin.

Abiding Love.

Under heavens clouded
With their gathered rain
Or in times of anguish
When my heart's in pain,
I will trust my Father,
Who is me above,
And accept His dealings
As His thoughts of love.

For my Lord's affection
Is not only shown
In the radiant sunbeams
From the heavens thrown,
But in shadows likewise
And in tears that flow,
As a flashing angel,
Blessings to bestow.

—Philadelphia Ledger.

MAKING CRIMINALS

THE JUVENILE COURT BEARS WITNESS TO RUM'S AWFUL WORK.

Youthful Prisoners Too Often Driven to Crime by the Drunkenness of Their Parents—Cases Cited From Docket of a Chicago Judge.

Judge Tuthill's juvenile court is one of Chicago's most typical and useful institutions. On Monday and Friday of each week a motley crowd of men, women and children—Poles, Bohemians, Germans, Irish, negroes, Americans and what not—through the courtroom, summoned before his honor in the interest of the youthful flotsam and jetsam of the city. This court differs from all others in that it was created for the express purpose of being useful to orphaned and delinquent children, and right royally is it fulfilling its mission. Many a boy gets his first taste of order, justice and kindness when he doffs his ragged cap, smooths down his unkempt hair and faces judge and jury.

The ceaseless procession of sad eyed, pinched faced, forlorn little ones that files through the juvenile court has of late aroused a great deal of popular sympathy. Judge Tuthill himself taking the lead in trying to solve the problem, "What can be done for these children?" As a partial answer to this question a home for delinquent boys has now been assured, the wealthy Commercial club of Chicago being among those actively interested in the matter. But not only has this now famous juvenile court served to voice the bitter cry of despoiled childhood, but it also affords an answer to the vital questions: "What is the primary cause of these domestic tragedies? What violent tempest has rent and scattered these households, the poor fragments of which we here behold?" The cause, says a writer in the Union Signal, must be commensurate with the awful effect.

All who know the facts agree that the serpent that has driven these people out of their domestic paradise (such as it was) is the demon of strong drink. Of eight cases recently tried in succession involving the fate of a number of children six were directly traced to drunkenness. Said a Polish boy, aged eleven: "I stole money and set a house on fire. My father? He is a saloon keeper." Another lad, several years older, with coat buttoned to the throat and collar up, said: "My mother is sick. We have no home. My father was once a saloon keeper." (The face of the boy's father, when he appeared was peculiarly expressive of violence of temper and morbid despair. He had deserted his wife. The testimony in the third case brought out the sad fact that both parents were hopeless sots, usually too stupidly drunk to have noticed that their children were begging on the streets. They had lost nine of their children, and no wonder. In the fourth case the father, who had lost his wife, instead of caring for his motherless children spent his leisure time in the saloon, so that when the probation officer called at the wretched tenement she found the two little girls infested with vermin and nearly starving. They often lived on a dry crust.

But enough. It is only too evident that as alcohol destroys the tissues of the body so also it dissolves the most sacred ties of the family, robbing the inmates of self respect, honor, love and decency.

This is about the course things usually take: The father comes home drunk and penniless and if he does not find things to his liking proceeds to demolish what few articles of furniture and convenience are left in the dingy rooms. It may and doubtless often does happen that the wife is not a good housekeeper, but what can she do with nothing in the house—no dishes, no wholesome food, no fuel, no credit at the store? The next step downward is that she, too, doesn't care. She becomes desperate and perhaps even indifferent to the fate of her children. In this mood she sends a child for a can of beer, hoping to drown her troubles. It is not long before she gropes her way to the "ladies' entrance" of the saloon, and then farewell to marital vows and honor and tenderness. The once fair bride sinks to the level of the moral outcast. The divorce court soon has a fresh applicant, unless even this tribute to an ordered life is omitted before final separation. And the children? God pity them! The downcast look and the quivering lips tell plainer than words of the sad havoc made of their tender hearts.

By all means build homes for the homeless, but better still send missionaries into the slums bearing in their hands the gospel of economy, cleanliness, temperance and salvation.

Fighting Ireland's Greatest Curse.

At the recent annual meeting of the Irish Association For the Prevention of Intemperance in Dublin important measures were discussed looking to legislation as a means of curtailing the continual issuance of new licenses, which are Ireland's greatest curse. In Ireland every license creates a vested interest which the public must redeem, so every additional license increases the tax on the public purse. The association is nonsectarian, and clergymen of every denomination took part in the proceedings.

A Utopia in Ohio.

The little hamlet of Mound City, O., is described as a modern "Utopia of righteousness." Seventy-five houses make up the village, and there is no saloon in the place. The hamlet possesses a mayor, but he has a pleasant occupation. With the saloon eliminated many otherwise vexing problems flower into beauty. We have never yet heard of a genuinely saloonless town that did not assume Utopian characteristics.

We must not hope to be reapers,
And gather the ripe gold ears.
Until we have first been sowers,
And watered the furrows with tears.

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

Up to this time the committee has found it possible to pay for the work on the building as it proceeds. The main building is nearly complete and will cost about $22,000.—Dispatch.

The corner-stone of the new Wesley Methodist Episcopal church, on Halifax street, was laid this afternoon with impressive Masonic ceremonies, conducted by Powhatan Starke Lodge. A very large assemblage was present to witness the ceremonies. The address of the occasion was delivered by Rev. John Hannon, D. D., of Richmond. The entire programme was carried out in a faultless manner.

The new church is to be of brick, of handsome design, will cost about $10,000, and will seat between 600 and 700 people. It has now an active working membership of 300, with a rapidly growing congregation.—Dispatch.

Bishop A. Coke Smith dedicated the new $13,000 Methodist church here yesterday in the presence of six hundred people. The day was very hot, which doubtless kept more from being present. The Bishop preached an elegant sermon, full of apt illustration and plain, impressive facts, from the text, "What shall I render unto the Lord for all His benefits toward me," etc., from the 116th Psalm. A collection of $1,800 was taken up on the church debt. Other ministers present were Elder Underwood and Rev. M. H. Tuttle, Rev. Mr. Willis and Rev. E. M. Jordan, of the Virginia Conference, who preached an excellent sermon at the night service. The townspeople had an abundant repast of good things of the fat of the land prepared for the guests of the occasion.—Landmark.

NEW METHODIST CHURCH.

The movement set on foot some time ago by the Centenary Methodist church looking to the selling of the church building, situated on the corner of Boush and Queen streets, and building another church by the same congregation in Ghent, has, after mature deliberation, been abandoned and Centenary church will continue where it is. The abandonment of the project has resulted in the determination to erect a new church of that denomination in another section of Ghent, the site selected by Centenary church having been surrendered to its original owners after finding it impossible to dispose of the lot on which the present edifice stands to an advantage.

A new movement is now on foot in which members of the four churches Epworth, Centenary, Queen Street, and LeKies Memorial are interested. This movement was started several months ago by representative laymen of the churches already named. A site has been purchased and paid for on the corner of Stockley Garden and Raleigh avenue, 100x120 feet. The new church will cost between $30,000 and $40,000.

At a future meeting, to be held shortly, trustees will be selected to hold the property for the church, and a building and other committees will be appointed. It is the desire of the inaugurators of this new enterprise to begin the work of construction at as early a day as possible.—Virginian-Pilot.

INTERESTING SESSION.

The president, Rev. W. R. Proctor presided at the Methodist preachers meeting yesterday morning, and prayer was made by Rev. Graham H. Lambeth.

The most interesting feature of the meeting was the visit and address of Professor R. E. Blackwell, president of Randolph-Macon college. Mr. Blackwell made a highly interesting and instructive talk. He reviewed the work of Randolph-Macon College under its present system of education and introduced evidence from the ablest educational critics to show that the system of training the young of this day in the higher branches of education in this institution was the marvel of the age. He said that during his college days as a student only about three graduates were turned out each year, whereas now there are twenty. Professor Blackwell enumerated the various branches of learning at Randolph-Macon and declared that the standard was as high as any college in America and superior to some. He urged the co-operation of the ministry in getting the $200,000 for Randolph-Macon, and said that he felt sure that when the Methodists of Virginia knew what the college was doing they would readily respond to the call for the $200,000 asked for by the board of directors and trustees.

THE COLLEGE WORK ENDORSED.

At the close of Professor Blackwell's remarks the following, offered by Rev. H. Bennett, was adopted:

"Resolved, That we have received with pleasure the visit of President E. Blackwell, of Randolph-Macon College, to our city and to our ministers' meeting, and we rejoice to hear of the new and bright prospects for Randolph-Macon College, which plans will continue our college in the front rank of the institutions of our country. Resolved, That we pledge to President Blackwell and to the college our best services to aid in the increase of the college patronage and raising of the $200,000 asked from Virginia Methodism in order to secure the $100,000 offered by Colonel John P. Branch, of Richmond."

After the adoption of the resolutions Rev. W. Asbury Christian, Rev. R. H. Bennett, Rev. E. T. Dadmun and Rev. C. L. Bane said that the address of Professor Blackwell was really an inspiration, in that it had thrown a volume of new light on their minds as to the splendid work their college was doing, and they urged him to come before their congregations and give them the benefit of this valuable information.

CRYING SUNDAY PAPERS.

Rev. R. H. Bennett spoke of the great nuisance of crying the newspapers on the streets on Sundays, and especially the hours of the opening and closing of services at the churches, deploring that it was a violation of the sanctity of the day, and offered the following, which was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the crying of newspapers on the streets on Sundays is a nuisance and the Sabbath broken and religious services thus disturbed, therefore,

"Resolved, That we respectfully call the attention of our new mayor and executive officers to this matter, and request that steps be taken to correct this evil.

"R. H. BENNETT,
"C. L. BANE."

CALL OF CHURCHES.

The call of the churches was taken up, and the following reports were heard:

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth, who has just returned from his vacation in Lynchburg, preached morning and night Sunday for his people at LeKies Memorial church.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun reported an increase in the attendance of the Sunday afternoon service at Centenary church. He raised at the morning service $75 as the amount promised for the new church to be erected in Park place, and provided for the remaining debt on Centenary church, the amount raised being $1,500.

Rev. W. T. Green preached at Central church Sunday morning and night, and at Cottage Place in the afternoon.

At Port Norfolk Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had a fairly good day, preaching both morning and night. Held an Epworth League meeting in the afternoon.

Rev. Mr. Dryer was present, spoke and organized a missionary Bible study class and provided for a library.

Rev. C. W. Cain preached at Trinity church, Newport News, Sunday morning and night to fine congregations. He reported the pastor, Rev. George W. Wray, very sick at the hospital with typhoid fever.

At Epworth church President R. E. Blackwell, of Randolph-Macon College, delivered a fine address Sunday morning on "Christian Education" before a large and cultivated audience. At night the pastor, Rev. R. H. Bennett, preached on the subject, "Can a Man Be a Christian on Five Dollars a Week?"

Rev. C. L. Bane conducted the usual services at Cumberland Street church Sunday morning and night, preaching to large congregations.

At Huntersville Rev. E. K. Odell had an unusually good day. The congregation was especially large at the morning service. The Sunday school was well attended and a live Epworth League meeting was held in the afternoon.

Rev. Mr. Snyder preached at Wright Memorial Sunday morning, and the pastor, Rev. George H. McFaden, occupied the pulpit at night. He received one new member by certificate.

Rev. George Wesley Jones had his usual services at Trinity and preached to good congregations.

Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett preached at 11 A. M. at the Christian Memorial Temple; addressed a missionary meeting in the afternoon and preached again at night. He had a pleasant day.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian, of Memorial church, Berkley, held fine services Sunday and received three new members by certificate.

Rev. J. K. Jolliff reported a gratifying increase in the congregations at Queen Street and earnest interest manifested in the services. He had a good Sunday school.

Rev. J. B. Merritt preached to a very large congregation at Monumental church Sunday morning and conducted the usual service at the Seaman's Bethel in the evening.

Rev. D. J. Traynham preached at Deep Creek at 11 A. M., at Indiana at 1:30 P. M., Olive Branch 3:30 P. M. and at Monumental church, Portsmouth, at night.

Rev. Ernest Stevens reported a very gratifying increase in the attendance on the services at Owens Memorial.

Rev. C. H. McGhee, of Lambert's Point, had a fine Sunday school, with the addition of several new scholars. He preached to a large congregation at 11 A. M., received four new members by certificate and two on profession of faith. Rev. A. J. Parker, of the North Carolina Conference, preached at night.

The services at McKendree church Sunday were largely attended. The pastor, Rev. W. R. Proctor, preached morning and night and received two new members by certificate.

Rev. R. H. Bennett called the attention to a school that has been established in Norfolk for the purpose of giving a thorough training in the best way of doing things at home in laundry and kitchen work under the Boston Cooking Course of Instruction. This school is to train young white women for this special field of operations.

ITEMS OMITTED LAST WEEK.

The Rev. George Wesley Jones requested the Norfolk preachers to raise the amounts assessed against their churches for the purchase of a lot in Park Place, on which a church will be built in the near future, and to let him have the money as soon as possible.

The Rev. E. T. Dryer, a ministerial student from Randolph-Macon College, and who is in this section in the interest of the missionary movement under the auspices of the Board of Managers, made a short statement concerning his work.

The Rev. S. J. Battin, pastor of Sledd Memorial, Danville, was present, and stated that the churches there are doing well now. The Danville District Conference was one of the most delightful he had ever attended.

The Rev. Asbury Christian offered the following resolutions on the death of Captain Richard Irby, late secretary-treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, which, after being feelingly spoken to, was adopted by a standing vote:

Whereas, we have heard with deep sorrow of the death of Captain Richard Irby; and

Whereas, we realize the great loss which the church has sustained in his death; therefore,

Resolved, 1. That we bear testimony to his unrelenting fidelity to every trust committed to him, to his intelligent noble Christian character, and to his great devotion to his church and her institutions.

2. That we deem his example worthy of emulation as a layman and workman that needed not to be ashamed.

3. That as a further mark of our great esteem of Captain Irby, we send a copy of these resolutions to his family and request the secular papers to publish them.

E. H. RAWLINGS.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, July 3, 1902.

On Sunday, June 29th, the House of Representatives held its first legislative Sunday session since 1811. That is to say, it was the first Sunday session at which the House was convened with its full organization, and in such order as to make it possible to transact legislative business. No legislation was enacted, however, as, after the reading of the journal of the previous day, the time was devoted to the eulogies of the late Amos J. Cummings and Peter J. Otey, the former of New York, and the latter of Virginia. Although both of the deceased were Democrats, in such high esteem were they held by their confreres that an almost full attendance was present throughout the session, and from the solemn prayer offered by Chaplain Couden to the benediction pronounced by the same reverend gentleman the session gave one the impression that a grand religious service was being conducted. The Marine Band, which was stationed in the Speaker's lobby, rendered "Near-er, My God, to Thee" as the members were taking their seats, and then Chaplain Couden offered a touching prayer, in which he referred to the loss which the House and the nation had sustained in the death of the two distinguished members who had been taken away.

Representative Cannon, of Illinois, pronounced the chief eulogy on Mr. Cummings, and his words were a manly tribute to a brave, conscientious, God-fearing man. Briefly sketching Mr. Cummings' life, Mr. Cannon said that he was the son of a devout minister, and had proved a son of whom his father might well be proud. Concluding, he quoted the tribute paid to his late colleague by Col. John A. Joyce, who wrote of him:

"Happy, cheerful, loyal man,
Built upon the God-like plan;
Always doing something good
For his human brotherhood."

Eulogies were pronounced upon the late Major Otey by Representatives Jones, of Virginia; Graff, of Illinois; De Armond, of Missouri, and many others. Mr. Rhea, of Virginia, said of Major Otey: "In his death he exemplified the life described by the Psalmist as one 'that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteously, and speaketh the truth in his heart.'" When the eulogies were concluded the House adjourned out of respect for the dead.

With his usual enthusiasm for religious affairs, the President has expressed great interest in the proposition of Bishop Fallows, of Chicago, to hold during the Olympian games to be held in that city in 1904 a congress of religions. Mr. Roosevelt had already assured the promoters of the games that he would endeavor to be present during their continuance, at least a part of the time, and when informed of the proposition of the Bishop, that a parliament of religions, similar to that held during the World's Fair, be held there at the same time, he stated that, should the plans fructify, nothing but ill-health would prevent his attendance. The proposition of the Bishop, in so far as developed, I am advised, anticipates that merely the six Sundays during the progress of the games shall be devoted to the parliament, and it would, of course, be impossible for the President to remain there so long a time, but he will endeavor to be present at one session, and at perhaps more.

It will be with regret that the temperance people of the country learn that, not only has no action been taken on the immigration bill by the Senate during this session, but that the Senate Committee on Irrigation has eliminated from the bill the provision that there shall be no liquor sold in the Capitol. The ground on which this provision was eliminated was a purely technical one, it being claimed that the amendment was not germane to the subject matter of the bill, a statement which is only partially true. Unfortunately, however, it was generally understood at the Capitol, at the time that the House accepted the amendment, that the Senate would reject it. No reasonable person can deny that the maintenance in the national Capitol

Talmage's Sermon.

WASHINGTON. In this discourse Dr. Talmage advocates the idea that the Christian religion is as good for this world as the next and will help us to do anything that ought to be done at all; 1 Timothy iv, 8, "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come."

There is a gloomy and passive way of waiting for events to come upon us, and there is a heroic way of going out to meet them, strong in God and fearing nothing. When the body of Catiline was found on the battlefield, it was found far in advance of all his troops and among the enemy, and the best way is not for us to lie down and let the events of life trample over us, but to go forth in a Christian spirit determined to conquer. You are expecting prosperity, and I am determined, so far as I have anything to do with it, that you shall not be disappointed, and, therefore, I propose, as God may help me, to project upon your attention a new element of success. You have in the business firm frugality, patience, industry, perseverance, economy—a very strong business firm—but there needs to be one member added, mightier than them all, and not a silent partner either, the one introduced by my text, "Godliness, which is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is as well as of that which is to come."

I suppose you are all willing to admit that godliness is important in its eternal relations, but perhaps some of you say, "All I want is an opportunity to say a prayer before I die, and all will be well." There are a great many people who suppose that if they can finally get safely out of this world into a better world they will have exhausted the entire advantage of our holy religion. They talk as though religion were a mere nod of recognition which we are to give to the Lord Jesus on our way up to a heavenly mansion; as though it were an admission ticket, of no use except to give in at the door of heaven. And there are thousands of people who have great admiration for a religion of the shroud and a religion of the coffin and a religion of the hearse and a religion of the cemetery who have no appreciation of a religion for the bank, for the farm, for the factory, for the warehouse, for the jeweler's shop, for the office. Now, while I would not throw any slur on a post-mortem religion, I want today to eulogize an antemortem religion. A religion that is of no use to you while you live will be of no use to you when you die. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is as well as of that which is to come." And I have always noticed that when grace is very low in a man's heart he talks a great deal in prayer meetings about deaths and about coffins and about graves and about churchyards. I have noticed that the healthy Christian, the man who is living near to God and is on the straight road to heaven, is full of jubilant satisfaction and talks about the duties of this life, understanding well that if God helps him to live right he will help him to die right.

What Godliness Is Good For.

Now, in the first place, I remark that godliness is good for a man's physical health. I do not mean to say that it will restore a broken down constitution or drive rheumatism from the limbs or neuralgia from the temples or pleurisy from the side, but I do mean to say that it gives one such habits and puts one in such condition as are most favorable for physical health. That I believe, and that I avow. Everybody knows that buoyancy of spirit is good physical advantage. Gloom, unrest, dejection, are at war with every pulsation of the heart and with every respiration of the lungs. They lower the vitality and slacken the circulation, while exaltation of spirit pours the very balm of heaven through all the currents of life. The sense of insecurity which sometimes hovers over an unregenerate man or pounces upon him with the blast of ten thousand trumpets of terror is most depleting and most exhausting, while the feeling that all things are working together for our good now and for our everlasting welfare is conducive to physical health.

You will observe that godliness induces industry, which is the foundation of good health. There is no law of hygiene that will keep a lazy man well. Pleurisy will stab him, erysipelas will burn him, jaundice will discolor him, gout will cripple him, and the intelligent physician will not prescribe antiseptic or febrifuge or anodyne, but saws and hammers and yardsticks and crowbars and pickaxes. There is no such thing as good physical condition without positive work of some kind, although you should sleep on down of swan or ride in carriage of softest upholstery or have on your table all the luxuries that were poured from the wine vats of Isphahan and Shiraz. Our religion says: "Away to the bank, away to the field, away to the shop, away to the factory! Do something that will enlist all the energies of your body, mind and soul!" "Diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," while upon the bare back of the idler and the drone comes down the sharp lash of the apostle as he says, "If any man will not work, neither shall he eat."

Oh, how important in this day, when so much is said about anatomy and physiology and therapeutics and some new style of medicine is ever and anon springing upon the world, that you should understand that the highest school of medicine is the school of Christ, which declares that "godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is as well as of that which is to come." So if you start out two men in the world with equal physical health, and then one of them shall get the religion of Christ in his heart and the other shall not get it, the one who becomes a son of the Lord Almighty will live the longer. "With long life will I satisfy him and show him my salvation."

Religion and the Intellect.

Again I remark that godliness is good for the intellect. I know some have supposed that just as soon as a man enters into the Christian life his intellect goes into a bedwaring process. So far from that, religion will give new brilliancy to the intellect, new strength to the imagination, new force to the will and wider swing to all the intellectual faculties. Christianity is the great central fire at which philosophy has lighted its brightest torch. The religion of Christ is the fountain out of which learning has dipped its clearest draft. The Helicon poured forth no such inspiring waters as those which flow from under the throne of God clear as crystal. Religion has given new energy to poetry, weeping in Dr. Young's "Night Thoughts," teaching in Cowper's "Task," flaming in Charles Wesley's hymns and rushing with archangelic splendor through Milton's "Paradise Lost." The religion of Christ has hung in studio and in gallery of art and in Vatican the best pictures—Titian's "Assumption," Raphael's "Transfiguration," Rubens' "Descent From the Cross," Claude's "Burning Bush" and Angelo's "Last Judgment." Religion has made the best music of the world Haydn's "Creation," Handel's "Messiah," Mozart's "Requiem." Is it possible that a religion which builds such indestructible monuments and which lifts its ensign on the highest promontories of worldly power can have any effect upon a man's intellect but elevation?

Now, I commend godliness as the best mental discipline, better than belles lettres to purify the taste, better than mathematics to harness the mind to all intricacy and elaboration, better than logic to marshal the intellectual forces for onset and victory. It will go with Hugh Miller and show him the footprints of the Creator in the red sandstone. It will go with the botanist and show him celestial glories encamped under the curtain of a water lily. It will go with the astronomer on the great heights where God shepherds the great flock of worlds that wander on the hills of heaven answering his voice as he calls them all by their names.

Again I remark that godliness is profitable for one's disposition. Lord Ashley, before he went into a great battle, was heard to offer this prayer: "O Lord, I shall be very busy today! If I forget thee, forget me not." With such a Christian disposition as that a man is independent of all circumstances. Our piety will have a tinge of our natural temperament. If a man be cross and sour and fretful naturally, after he becomes a Christian he will always have to be armed against the rebellion of those evil inclinations. But religion has tamed the wildest natures. It has turned fretfulness into gratitude, despondency into good cheer, and those who were hard and ungovernable and uncompromising have been made pliable and conciliatory. Good resolution, reformatory effort, will not effect the change. It takes a mightier arm and a mightier hand to bend evil habits than the hand that bent the bow of Ulysses, and it takes a stronger lasso than ever held the buffalo on the prairie.

Influence of the Gospel.

A man cannot go forth with any human weapons and contend successfully against these Titans armed with up-torn mountains. But you have known men into whose spirit the influence of the gospel of Christ came until their disposition was entirely changed. So it was with two merchants in New York. They were very antagonistic. They had done all they could to injure each other. They were in the same line of business. One of the merchants was converted to God. Having been converted, he asked the Lord to teach him how to bear himself toward that business antagonist, and he was impressed with the fact that it was his duty when a customer asked for certain kinds of goods which he had not, but which he knew his opponent had, to recommend him to go to that store. I suppose that is about the hardest thing a man could do; but, being thoroughly converted to God, he resolved to do that very thing, and, being asked for a certain kind of goods which he had not, he said, "You go to such and such a store, and you will get it." After awhile merchant No. 2 found these customers coming, so sent, and he found also that merchant No. 1 had been brought to God, and he sought the same religion. Now they are good friends and good neighbors, the grace of God entirely changing their dispositions.

"Oh," says some one, "I have a rough, jagged, impetuous nature, and religion can't do anything for me." Do you know that Martin Luther and Robt. Newton and Richard Baxter had impetuous and all consuming natures; the grace of God turned them into the mightiest usefulness? A manufacturer cares but very little for a state that slowly runs through the mean, but values a torrent that leaps from rock to rock and rushes with mad energy through the valley and out toward the sea. Along that river you will find fluttering shuttles and grinding mills and flashing water wheel. And a nature the swiftest, the most rugged, the most tremendous—that is the nature God turns into greatest usefulness. Oh, how many that have been pugnacious and hard to please, irascible and more bothered about a mote in their neighbor's eye than about the beandike ship timber in their eye who have been entirely changed by the grace of God and have found out that "godliness is profitable the life that now is as well as of that life to come."

Religion In Business.

Again I remark that religion is good for worldly business. I know the general theory is the more business, the less religion, the more religion, the less business. Not so, thought Dr. Harnish "Biography of a Christian Merchant" when he says: "He grew in grace the last six years of his life more than at any time in his life. During those six years he had more business crowding him than at any other time. In other words, the more worldly business a man has the more opportunity to serve God. Does religion exhilarate or retard worldly business? is the practical question for you to discuss. Is it hang, like a mortgage, over the family? Is it a bad debt on the ledger? Is it lien against the estate? Does it enter the door through which custom comes for broadcloths and silks?"

Now, religion will hinder your business if it be a bad business or if it be a good business wrongly conducted; you tell lies behind the counter, if use false weights and measures, if put sand in sugar and beet juice inegar and lard in butter and sell for thing that which is another thing, religion will interfere with that business, but a lawful business, lawfully conducted, will find the religion of Lord Jesus Christ its mightiest ally.

Religion will give an equipoise spirit. It will keep you from extremes of temper, and you know a many fine businesses have been broken to atoms by bad temper. It will keep you from worryment about free loss; it will keep you industrious prompt; it will keep you back squandering and from dissipation will give you a kindness of spirit which will be easily distinguished from mere store courtesy which shakes violently with you, asking about health of your family, when there anxiety to know whether your child well or sick, but the anxiety is to know how many dozen cambric pocketkerchiefs you will take and pay down. It will prepare you for the fiscal duties of everyday life. I do mean to say that religion will make financially rich, but I do say it will give us, it will assure us of a comfortable sustenance at the comfortable subsistence all the through, and it will help us to the bank, to manage the traffic.

THIS COLLEGE IS NOW LOCATED IN ITS OWN GRAND NEW BUILDING,

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WILLIAM E. ROSS.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

Matthew Arnold wrote, 'not this town nor the next, nor yet the next is Jerusalem.' And so we must struggle on, taking counsel for the day and need, glad if only to-morrow find us a little further than to-day, for

We build the ladder by which we climb

From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,

And we mount to its summit round by round.

"In like manner whatever relief is to come from the selfishness and harshness of individualism will come through a generous socialism, which is its correlate. Not that state socialism which would sap the foundations of progress by bestowing the rewards of energy and character upon the idle and the unworthy; not that conciliation of classes that would reduce all to a dead level and a low level by decapitating the prosperous; none of that gospel of the short-haired women and long-haired men, who, having failed in the simplest enterprises of life, propose to lay down the law for the capable and successful; but that saner socialism which, while it recognizes the difference between mine and thine, binds together me and thee. It has its word for the man who will not work and it is short and sharp—'neither shall he eat.' This spoils it for all that free soup crowd whose ideal world would be that of the old lady, who in dying ordered to be inscribed upon her tombstone:

'Don't mourn for me now,
Don't mourn for me never;
I'm goin' to a do nothin' forever and ever.'

"This Christian socialism will preserve the just balance between looking on one's own things and also upon the things of another, between diligence in business and fervency in spirit, between bearing one's own burden and bearing one another's. It is this that is to harmonize our rivalries and purge our philosophies. It anchors us to the right instead of to the expedient.

"Right things in great and small;

Then, though the skies should fall,
Sun, moon and stars and all,
We shall have light.'

"Every question is at bottom a moral question; and in all lands, in all times, in all conditions, the light in darkness, the guide in perplexity, the star for the disappointed and the inspiration for the hopeless, is the gospel of the Son of God. This is the majestic voice that can say to the troubled waters: 'Peace be still.' This is the tree whose leaves are for the healing of our nation and all nations. The one effective sanitary agency for the world diseased in all its parts is the spirit of the Father, incarnate in the Son, and reproduced in the faith-filled lives of His followers. Its purpose is to banish sin, the great social and economic as well as spiritual enemy of the race. It redeems business from sordidness, while it saves philanthropy from folly. It puts bit and bridle upon the animal that is in use and sets free the God. Its keynote is peace on earth, good-will toward men. Its songs are the solace of our adversity and its prophecies are the signals of our relief. It reflects upon the things that are seen and temporal light from the things that are unseen and eternal and makes all luminous. This is the force that is swelling the sails of the old ship laden with the cares and hopes of humanity. We are sailing under sealed orders, it is true, but we have got our chart, not from the sodden earth, but the sunlit skies and with whatever creaking of cordage and straining of timbers and buffeting of waves, we are moving, and that we do move is proof of a pilotage, not of man prophetic of a harbor, not of the earth, but of that radiant shore where perfect righteousness will make possible perfect peace."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

of what are little better than two bar-rooms is a stultification of the work of the temperance people, a deplorable example to set before the young people of the country and a sad commentary on the sincerity of certain members of the national legislative body, but nothing will remedy the existing state of affairs but organized work upon the part of the reformers, and no attempt to attach, in the shape of an amendment to some other bill, a clause which will abate the evil will escape the expert parliamentary enemies of the temperance cause.

Among the recent interesting visitors to Washington was the Rev. Dr. Hampden C. DuBose, of Davidson, N. C., who has spent thirty years as a missionary in China. Dr. Du Bose takes a most hopeful view of affairs in that country, and predicts that in the not distant future the Christian missions will make giant strides which will surprise the world. The late Boxer uprising, the Doctor attributes more to international politics and a fear of the partition of China than to religious causes, and asserts that the American missionaries, at least, stand high in the estimation of the Chinese.

With a few brief words and amid impressive surroundings, President Roosevelt, on yesterday afternoon, laid the corner-stone of the imposing edifice which is to take the place of the diminutive church which he has attended since he came to Washington as Vice-President. Even the fact that the hour for the adjournment of Congress was approaching, and that numerous public bills at the Capitol awaited his signature, did not deter the President from paying this mark of respect to his church and to his highly esteemed pastor, Dr. Shick. As soon as the great granite stone was in place a selected choir rendered the President's favorite hymn, "How Firm a Foundation Ye Saints of the Lord," Mr. Roosevelt joining heartily in the singing. After the sermon was preached, the President was obliged to depart for the Capitol.

As recently announced in these letters, one of the courts of the District of Columbia has rendered a decision to the effect that liquor selling in the Capitol is illegal. Following this decision some interesting correspondence between Senator Spooner, chairman of the Senate Committee on Rules and Privileges, and Dr. Wilbur F. Crafts, Superintendent of the International Reform Bureau, occurred, in the course of which the Senator wrote Dr. Crafts that the Senate had long ago adopted a rule which forbade the sale of "spirituous liquors," and that it was the duty of the sergeant-at-arms to enforce that rule. The Senator made no mention of the fact that the rule is frequently violated in the Senate restaurant, and that "spirituous liquors" are sold regularly in the House restaurant. However, Dr. Crafts immediately replied, calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that the rule quoted did not conform to a law enacted by Congress which forbids the sale of "beer" or any other liquor in the District without a license. To this communication the Senator did not deign to reply. The object of Dr. Crafts is to emphasize the necessity of such a law as was attached to the immigration bill and rejected by the Senate committee as not germane. Earnest work by the constituents of the members and Senators in their own districts and States would doubtless accomplish the desired result and the Doctor hopes that all who have the temperance cause at heart will take occasion this summer to see their Representatives and Senators and plead with them for the enactment of this very essential law.

No sooner had the Philippine bill been signed by the President than the Reform Bureau opened its campaign for temperance in the Philippines by presenting to the new civil government, through the President, twenty-nine petitions requesting that all saloons in the islands be abolished. So long as the islands were under military rule there was little hope of effecting this desirable end, but now that Governor Taft and his associates constitute the supreme governing power in the Philippines, it is hoped that sufficient pressure can be brought to bear on them to cause the elimination of the saloon evil.

With the advent of the warm weather a number of the Washington churches have discontinued some of their services, although, of course, the Sunday morning preaching and the mid-week prayer-meeting will be continued as usual. While it has been deemed necessary to make these concessions to the hot weather, Washington pastors have not spared themselves, and, in lieu of more services in the churches, they have, with great success, turned their attention to certain tent and open air services. While no less beneficial from a religious standpoint, these open air services appear to conform more to the idea of the people as to the proper way to spend a summer evening. They partake, to a slight extent, of the nature of picnics, and frequently include a pleasant "trolley ride" out into the country, where, surrounded by green fields and attractive scenery, the conditions have proven most auspicious for enthusiastic religious meetings.

Reviewing the past year, a Washington clergyman told me yesterday that it had been a most gratifying one to Washington pastors; that all of the churches had added to their membership, and most of them had noted an increased interest in church work. The many practical philanthropies existing in Washington, and the fact that the State Department is, to a certain extent, the Mecca for foreign missionaries, all help to keep up the interest. And, too, he said, that the excellent example set by the President and his family in the matter of regular church attendance had added their quota to the gratifying results of the past year. Speaking of the President, Mr. Cortes told your correspondent, just before leaving Washington, that Mr. Roosevelt and his family attended the pretty little chapel known as Christ Church in Oyster Bay, and Secretary Barnes, who is in charge of the temporary White House here, said yesterday that the President and all his family attended that church on last Sunday.

The memorial tablet in the Metropolitan Methodist church, in memory of President McKinley, has been unveiled. It is of white marble, and bears the inscription:

"In Memory of William McKinley,
"President of the United States.
"Born January 29, 1843;
"Died September 14, 1901.
"Fourteen years a member of Congress
"Twice Governor of Ohio, and "Twice President of the United States
"A Man of Immaculate Purity, I Walked in Perfect and Noble Self-Control.

"He Fell in the Zenith of His Power and in the Glory of a Matchless Career."

In two lines, one above and one below the inscription proper, are the words, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and "Thy Will, not Mine, Be Done."

Washington is rapidly becoming a centre of the highest ecclesiastical architecture, and will soon be known as a centre for ecclesiastical art. Mr. Carl Guthertz is at present engaged preparing the mural decorations for the People's Church of St. Paul, Minn. These will include four large panels each twenty feet high. Two of the panels will symbolize "life" and "immortality," respectively. Life is represented by an angel of heroic size recording in the "Great Book" the deeds of mortals, and "immortality" is typified by a similar angel holding the book closed and sealed. Another canvas will signify "benevolence," and the fourth will typify "liberty of religious thought." As the interior of the church is to be finished in golden oak, Mr. Guthertz has selected gold as the dominant tone of his work, and the various shades of harmonizing yellow will pervade the canvases.

A large number of Christian Endeavorers left Washington last night for Pittsburg, where they will attend the fifteenth Convention of the Pennsylvania Christian Endeavor Union. Mr. Percy S. Foster, of this city, was instrumental in getting together the delegation which left here on a special train.

KING EDWARD AND AMERICANS.

Mr. George W. Smalley in a personal article about King Edward VII in The Outlook says:

We Americans have certain prejudices to get rid of before we can do justice to a king. But we ought to be just to this one, if only because he has approved himself, as did his mother before him, our friend. It has become a commonplace to say so; and the commonplaces of it is good proof of its truth. Americans of distinction who have been abroad are so many witnesses of the fact. They have been welcomed at Marlboro' House, or at Homburg, or at Sandringham; so have other Americans whose chief claim to distinction was their Americanism—which itself for many years has been a passport across many a social frontier in England. The Queen's real regard for the United States and real wish for a good understanding between England and the United States has descended to her son. I will venture to add, delicate as the ground is to tread, that American women in London have done much to foster this inherited and personal predisposition. From the earliest days of the American invasion, when American women, of whom some are still living, began to enliven London society and to light up certain waste spaces of social life, the Prince showed himself susceptible to these new enchantments. The influence thus gained has never been lost, nor the effect of it diminished. The Prince liked Americans. The King likes them. It may not be amiss to note that two American women whose rank as wives of British husbands would not entitle them to witness the coronation in Westminster Abbey will witness it as guests of the King. It certainly cannot be amiss to note that the first Ambassador with whom the King has dined is the American Ambassador, Mr. Choate. And when the President appointed Mr. Whitelaw Reid Special Ambassador for the coronation, the King first intimated, through official channels, his pleasure in this act of our Government, then sent a private message to say how glad he was that the Ambassador should be Mr. Reid, who had held the same post at the Queen's Jubilee.

The Story of a Merchant.

In New York city there was a merchant, hard in his dealings with his fellows, who had written over his banking house or his counting house room, "No compromise." Then when some merchant got in a crisis and went down—no fault of his, but a conjunction of evil circumstances and all the other merchants were willing to compromise they would take 75 cents on the dollar or 50 cents or 20 cents—coming to this man last of all, he said: "No compromise. I'll take 100 cents on the dollar, and I can afford to wait." Well, the wheel turned, and after awhile that man was in a crisis of business, and he sent out his agent to compromise, and the agent said to the merchants, "Will you take 50 cents on the dollar?" "No." "Will you take anything?" "We'll take 100 cents on the dollar. No compromise." And the man who wrote that inscription over his counting house door died in destitution. Oh, we want more of the kindness of the gospel and the spirit of love in our business enterprises! How many young men have found in the religion of Jesus Christ a practical help? How many there are today who could testify out of their own experience that godliness is profitable for the life that now is! There were times in their business career when they went here for help and there for help and yonder for help and got no help until they knelt before the Lord crying for his deliverance, and the Lord rescued them.

In a bank not far from New York—a village bank—an officer could not balance his accounts. He had worked at them day after day, night after night, and he was sick nigh unto death as a result. He knew he had not taken one farthing from that bank, but somehow, for some reason, inscrutable then, the accounts would not balance. The time rolled on and the morning of the day when the books should pass under the inspection of the other officers arrived, and he felt himself in awful peril, conscious of his own integrity, but unable to prove that integrity. That morning he went to the bank early, and he knelt down before God and told the whole story of mental anguish, and he said: "O Lord, I have done right, I have preserved my integrity, but here I am about to be overthrown unless thou shouldst come to my rescue. Lord, deliver me." And for one hour he continued the prayer before God, and then he arose and went to an old blotter that he had forgotten all about. He opened it, and there lay a sheet of figures which he only needed to add to another line of figures—some line of figures he had forgotten and knew not where he had laid them—and the accounts were balanced, and the Lord delivered him. You are an infidel if you do not believe it. The Lord delivered him. God answered his prayer, as he will answer your prayer, oh, man of business, in every crisis when you come to him.

Can You Get Along Without It?

Now, if this be so, then I am persuaded, as you are, of the fact that the vast majority of Christians do not fully test the value of their religion. They are like a farmer in California with 15,000 acres of good wheat land and cultivating only a quarter of an acre. Why do you not go forth and make the religion of Jesus Christ a practical affair every day of your business life and all this year, beginning now, and tomorrow morning putting into practical effect this holy religion and demonstrating that godliness is profitable

How can you get along without this religion? Is your physical health so good you do not want this divine tonic? Is your mind so clear, so vast, so comprehensive, that you do not want this divine inspiration? Is your worldly business so thoroughly established that you have no use for that religion which has been the help and deliverance of tens of thousands of men in crises of worldly trouble? And if what I have said is true then you see what a fatal blunder it is when a man adjourns to life's expiration the uses of religion. A man who postpones religion to sixty years of age gets religion fifty years too late. He may get into the kingdom of God by final repentance, but what can compensate him for a whole lifetime unrelieved and uncomfortable? You want religion today in the training of that child. You will want religion tomorrow in dealing with that customer. You wanted religion yesterday to curb your temper. Is your arm strong enough to beat your way through the floods? Can you, without being incensed in the mail of God's eternal help, go forth amid the assault of all hell's sharpshooters? Can you walk alone across these crumbling graves and amid these gaping earthquakes? Can you, waterlogged and mast shivered, outlive the gale? Oh, how many there have been who, postponing the religion of Jesus Christ, have plunged into mistakes they never could correct, although they lived sixty years after, and like serpents crushed under cart wheels dragging their mangled bodies under the rocks to die. So these men have fallen under the wheel of awful calamity, while a vast multitude of others have taken the religion of Jesus Christ into everyday life and, first, in practical business affairs, and, second, on the throne of heavenly triumph, have illustrated, while angels looked on and a universe approved, the glorious truth that "godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life which now is as well as of that which is to come."

[Copyright, 1902, Louis Klopsch, N. Y.]

Good Cheer About Death.

Let any man be of good cheer about his soul who has ruled his body and delighted in knowledge in this life; who has adorned the soul in her own proper jewels, which are temperance, justice, courage, nobility and truth. In these arrayed the soul is ready for the journey even to another world when the time comes. For, if death be the journey to another place, and there all the dead are, what good can be greater than this? Be of good cheer about death and know this of a truth—that no evil can happen to a good man either in life or after death. God orders and holds together the whole universe in which are all things beautiful and good. He keeps it always unimpaired, unconfused, undecaying, obeying his law swifter than thought and in perfect order.—Socrates.

Muscular Christianity.

"At Plevna, Kan.," says the Kansas City Journal, "a 'joint' keeper cornered the Rev. W. H. Houston in the post-office and informed the reverend gentleman that he must take a licking on account of a temperance sermon which he had preached the day before. 'All right,' responded the parson cheerfully, and two minutes later the friends of the 'joint' keeper were taking him down to the butcher shop for the application of beefsteak to a pair of beautiful black eyes, showing again the low down, deceptive wickedness of our theological seminaries in maintaining physical culture departments."

Since that time the demand for them has steadily increased every year, and we believe that the reason for this increased demand for the goods is due to the fact that all of these Brands have every year exceeded their guaranteed analysis in commercial value. For instance, the guaranteed analysis on—

Editorial.

Dr. B. W. Arnold has been elected to fill the chair of history at the Randolph-Macon Woman's College. The Woman's College has again been unusually fortunate, or, perhaps, it is right to say also, has shown good judgment in the selection of the man for this important work. Dr. Arnold has been at the Normal School in Farmville for two or three years, and designs to take this important place in our educational work. He has already taught at Bedford and Front Royal, and is well known to our educational workers.

THE DEACONESS.

The action of the General Conference on this subject is given below. There were two reports presented. Each had received 13 votes in the committee. Both favored some method by which trained women could be employed to do certain work among the sick and destitute. One report favored a regular organized system, with machinery under control of a central board, etc. The other favored the addition of a sentence to the present constitution of the Woman's Home Mission Board which would authorize the local societies in any place, on the advice of the pastor and Quarterly Conference, to employ trained women to assist the pastor and work under his direction. This editor was inclined to the latter plan, as most likely to work well in all places. It was not, however, a matter of grave concern, as the principal thing was to secure official recognition by the Conference of the need of the work and the authority to perform it. If the plan does not work well it can be adjusted to suit at the next Conference. The reports and the debate follow:

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON REVISALS. to the General Conference, M. E.
Church, South, Dallas, Texas:

Your Committee on Revisals had under consideration various memorials and resolutions, requesting the creation of the office of deaconess.

The judgment of your committee was tested by a vote on the following resolution:

"Resolved, That we establish the office of deaconess in our Church."

Twenty-six members were present and the superintendent of the school.

and voted. The vote resulted in a tie. The undersigned members of your committee, who voted affirmatively upon the above-named resolution, beg leave to report to you as follows—to-wit:

We recommend that you add additional paragraphs next following Art. 15, Par. 403, Sec. 4, Chap. 11, page 164, Discipline of 1898, as follows—to-wit:

P. 404, Art. XVI.—The office of deaconess is hereby created in connection with the Woman's Home Mission Society.

The Woman's Home Mission Board shall prescribe a course of training for candidates for deaconess' work, and shall pass upon the applications of those persons recommended by Quarterly Conferences, for appointment to a training school, and shall have power to reject a candidate at any time during or at the end of a course of training, if she be found unsuited to the work. The Board or the Executive Committee thereof shall, upon application, recommend deaconesses to mission boards, preachers in charge, societies or other Church agencies wishing to employ them.

When a deaconess is thus employed, she shall make reports to the Quarterly Conference of the charge in which she labors, and be, so far as is practicable, under the direction of the preacher in charge. When removing from the bounds of one pastoral charge to another, she shall carry a certificate of official standing. She shall also make annual reports to the Woman's Board of Home Missions. Her certificate must be renewed annually.

P. 405. A candidate for deaconess' work must be at least 23 years of age, a single woman or a widow. She must be a member of the M. E. Church, South, in good standing, and must have shown a fitness for this work by active service in some line of Christian work. She must have a good English education, and a certificate of good health from a reputable physician. Her application for admission to the training school must be endorsed by the Quarterly Conference and the preacher in charge of the church of which she is a member. She must pass a satisfactory examination before the proper committee of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, both as to her educational and religious qualifications before she can be placed in the training school.

She must give two years of probationary service and study the course prescribed by the Board, after which she must have the recommendation of

In exceptional cases, when other requirements are met and the course in the training school is not deemed necessary, she may be nominated by the preacher in charge, and elected to the office of deaconess by the Quarterly Conference, without attending the training school.

The duties of the deaconess are to minister to the poor, care for the sick, provide for the orphan, comfort the sorrowing, seek the wandering and sinful and do any religious or teaching work to which she may be assigned by the preacher in charge, employing her in the home or foreign field, and relinquishing all other pursuits, devote herself to these or other forms of Christian work to which she may be found adapted. No vows shall be required of any deaconess, nevertheless it is expected that those who seek admission to the training school, or who apply for a certificate from the Quarterly Conference, will have considered carefully the steps they are taking, and feeling themselves called of God to do this work, will enter upon it with the purpose of devoting themselves wholly to it. A deaconess shall, however, be at liberty to retire from the work after three months' notice to the Woman's Home Mission Board, and will be subject to a revoking of her certificate and dismissal if found unsuited to the work. While engaged in active service, she shall be entitled to such support as the Woman's Home Mission Board shall stipulate, and if after a long term of service, she shall be disqualified by sickness or old age, she shall be cared for in a deaconess' home hereinafter provided for.

A deaconess, not employed by any of the above Church agencies shall be under the direct control of the Woman's Mission Board.

A report of the work of each deaconess, with a certificate of character and standing, shall be sent annually to the Woman's Home Mission Board by the agency employing her, together with her personal report.

P. 406. Deaconess Institutions: The Woman's Home Mission Board is authorized to provide a home where unemployed deaconesses may temporarily reside and be instructed, and where the aged or sick may be permanently cared for, and such other institutions as will not be in conflict with other provisions of Sec. 4, Chap. 11, of Discipline of 1898.

COMMITTEE ON REVISALS.

Report No. 3.

Your Committee on Revisals, to whom were referred memorial from several of the Annual Conferences, from the Woman's Board of Home Missions, and from others, desiring the establishment of the order or office of Deaconess in our Church, beg leave to report that they have given the subject a prolonged and careful consideration and recommend that the General Conference do not concur with this request. Instead of the proposed action, your committee recommend that paragraph 390, page 159, of the Discipline be amended by the addition of the following:

"Any auxiliary society may, on the advice of the preacher in charge and the recommendation of the Quarterly Conference, employ trained women to assist the pastor and work under his direction; or any such worker may be employed by a District or Conference Society, with the consent of the presiding elder and the preacher in charge of the church with which she may work."

So that when amended it shall read as follows: "Art. II. The object of the Society is to enlist and organize Christian women and children in securing homes for itinerant preachers, in providing religious instruction for the neglected and destitute, and in otherwise aiding the cause of Christ. Any auxiliary society may, on the advice of the preacher in charge and the recommendation of the Quarterly Conference, employ trained women to assist the pastor and work under his direction; or any such worker may be employed by a District or Conference Society, with the consent of the presiding elder and the preacher in charge of the church with which she may work."

Respectfully submitted,

(Signed) PAUL WHITEHEAD, Chairman.

PERRY S. RADER, Secretary.

The secretary then read Report No. 3 of Committee on Revisals and the minority report accompanying the same.

S. S. Keener: I move the adoption of the majority report.

Paul Whitehead: I move to substitute the minority for the majority report.

The motion was seconded.

Paul Whitehead: I claim to be one of the oldest advocates of this movement in the Southern Church. Immediately after the action of the Northern Methodist Conference in 1890

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

SEPTEMBER, 1922, IN U. S. A., BY ADVANCE PUBLISHING CO., CHICAGO.

"Look here, Willis! Don't you dare to charge your own miserable selfishness to my sister! It's all your own fault that she couldn't marry you. And if you go to the bad now it will be your own fault and no one's else, besides showing her that you never really cared anything for her. If you did, you would make a man of yourself."

Willis sat down and leaned his elbow on the old table and put his head on his hand. Then he lifted a haggard face to Edward and said:

"You're right. I'm a poor, miserable, selfish fool, and I would wreck her life if she should put it into my keeping. I know as I sit here that I shall go to the devil through drink, no matter what happens. I've had the tortures of hell to fight all these weeks. Do you know when your sister told me that her refusal was absolute workers or not the slightest hope I of work for their of something like a work they love to do? I have been already done to some extent."

more than ten years. And yet grandfather always said drink never hurt him any. He was one of these personal liberty fellows. He never thought of the possibility that I might go to the devil even if he didn't. Possible, though, that we shall meet in hell. Maybe in God's sight he's as much to blame as I am."

"Don't!" cried Edward, shocked at the reckless, savage manner in which Willis spoke. The sight of the miserable face and the thought of Willis' possible future haunted him all the rest of his college course.

"God keep you from knowing anything about this feeling," said Willis more gently, and then he rose suddenly and came over to Edward.

"Ned, old boy, I'm going away, and I may never see you again. I owe you a lot for the way you've borne with me, and I'll never forget it. You and Freeda have prompted the best feelings I ever had. Don't think too hard of me, will you? I wish you'd write to me once in a while. Don't give me up, even if I do seem to be past hope. Maybe Wheaton's prayers will save me yet."

Oh, Edward Blake, college student, when the judgment day reveals the secrets of the universe, will you see then what you missed because you were not a Christian? What might you have said or done at this time to save this poor soul if you had really had some higher standard of life than your cold, moral standard, that never warmed your heart or fired your soul to help save another soul? The Lord open your eyes to see not only the great opportunity you missed, but also the great sin of daring to live always with no better purpose than the one that has so far ruled you.

So he let Willis go, and go out of his life, at least for the time being, with a kindly and even a self-reproachful feeling, that in time became a vague sort of hope that he might not turn out quite so bad as he himself said he would. And yet if the clutch of his grandfather's sins was on him, how is it that even then you do not yet realize, either of you, that there is a power even greater than hereditary taint in the blood and that the blood of Jesus Christ the Son of God can cleanse even that taint of that other blood? For he is able to save to the uttermost those that put their trust in him.

And now the commencement season was on, and Edward realized that he was through his junior year, and in a few days, as soon as the graduating class had received their diplomas, his own class would be entitled to the dignified name of seniors. He was not so devoid of imagination as not to be quite deeply moved at the thought. He and Freeda were now classified together, for, although she had entered six months earlier, Edward had arranged his course so as to make up his studies, and Freeda had dropped back a part of a year in order to be with him and take a special course in music. So they were glad to think of comradeship still possible for them another year.

As they sat together that commencement day and heard the charge to the outgoing class they realized as never before the value of their college life. The president never said very much at commencement. Perhaps that is one reason why the class that graduated remembered so good many things and carried them away with them.

"It would not be fair nor true to say to you," continued the president after giving the diplomas, "that you had all done the very best you knew how during your entire college course. You yourselves know that you have neglected many opportunities and wasted many important hours. You cannot now help this, and I am not going to use this occasion to blame you for not having made better use of your advantages."

"The question for you to ask now is, What can I do with what I have gained in Hope college? As you go out into the world you will find a great many temptations to use your intelligence selfishly. A college bred man or woman always is strongly tempted to be more or less exclusive, growing farther and farther from a knowledge of and sympathy for the people. Will you let me urge every one of you to use your powers developed here to get nearer the people who have not had your advantages? If education does not mean a brotherhood, if it does not mean the strong bearing the infirmities of the weak, then it is not Christian; it is pagan in its selfishness and narrowness."

"There is just one other thing I want you to feel at this time, and that is the great first thing in all life. I mean the Christian life. If every member of this class in the course of the next ten years should forget every lesson he ever learned in mathematics or chemistry or astronomy, the loss might be great, but it would not necessarily be vital nor fatal to a life of great usefulness. But if every one of you ten years from now should forget and cease to practice all the lessons you have been taught in Christian character and the value of truth and purity and self denial and usefulness the loss would be not only terrible, but absolutely irreparable. All the things you have learned in the whole college course are not worth knowing without the knowledge of God. Paul said that if a man had all knowledge, but did not have love, it profited nothing; it

"I'm not going to apologize, Blake," was of no account. That is what I mean. If the main things you are taking out of this school into the world are facts concerning languages and science and art and music—if that is all you are taking with you, I am sorry for you and for the world. But if you are taking with you a great desire to make use of all this knowledge in such a way as to make human life happier and the kingdom of God on earth more real, because you love with supreme love God and your fellow men, then I am glad for you and the world that you have learned here in this college the secret of all true education, which is the fitting of men and women to serve God and one another more powerfully."

"I am rejoiced as I read your class motto, 'Vires Nobis Desuper.' If you realize this truth that your strength is not in yourselves, not in your own cultured morality, not in your acquired learning, not in your superior training, but is in that power above us who also abides within us, then you can go out and do good work in the world as it ought to be done and do it not to your own glory, but to the glory of God. The Lord bless you and use you to his glory. Go out from here and do not your best, but his best, as he works above and within you."

In the afternoon of commencement day at Hope it was customary to have class day exercises under an elm on the upper campus. But the afternoon on this occasion was rainy, and the class went into the chapel. As Edward was going in with the rest of his own class, which always sat together during the afternoon exercises, he was stopped a moment in the lower hall by Wheaton, who asked him if he would be in his room after the exercises or before the promenade concert in the evening.

"Pardon me for asking or taking any of your time today, but I am obliged to leave for home on the 7 o'clock train on account of illness there, and I want just a word with you before I go."

Edward felt somewhat annoyed, for he guessed what Wheaton wanted to say, but he had come to feel more respect for him than he once felt, and so he answered quite pleasantly.

"Come up right after the exercises here, and I'll have a little time."

"All right; thank you," said Wheaton gratefully.

When Edward went up to his room after the class exercises were over, he found Wheaton waiting for him in the hall.

They went in, and Wheaton somewhat awkwardly took the seat Edward offered.

"I'm not going to apologize, Blake, for saying what I have in my mind at this time," began Wheaton, and all his awkwardness and embarrassment vanished as he began to speak. "I may not come back to Hope next year on account of matters at home, and I may not ever see you again. But I have been praying for you almost ever since you entered Hope, and I have carried a burden in my soul for you that you might accept Christ as a personal Saviour. Won't you give it a serious thought, Blake? Not because I ask you to, but because you owe it to Christ to be his disciple. You have great power for good in this college. Your influence would be something wonderful if it was positively Christian. Why don't you surrender yourself to him, Blake? You will never regret it as long as you live if you do."

Wheaton paused, and Edward sat looking out of the window at the dripping branches of the big elm near by. He was distinctly displeased with Wheaton at first. "Confound the fellow!" he was saying within himself as Wheaton was speaking. "Why should he pick out today of all days to preach his association religion to me?" Then as Wheaton went on a curious change of feeling took place in Edward's mind. "Why should Wheaton care anything about him anyway? What difference did it make to him whether Blake was a Christian or not? But if he really was anxious about the welfare of his (Edward Blake's) soul for any reason whatever, what more to be expected than that he would seize any opportunity he could to speak on the subject?"

Edward was silent so long as he went over this little monologue that Wheaton thought he was perhaps giving the subject serious consideration.

He did not venture to break the silence, and Edward at last said slowly:

"I'm much obliged to you, Wheaton, for your interest in me. I'm afraid I don't deserve it."

"That's not the question," began Wheaton eagerly. "I believe you don't realize all you are missing as you go on with your college course. A Christian faith in your own life would make a wonderful change in it."

"Am I so bad as all that?" asked Edward, with a slight laugh, beginning to feel rise in himself suddenly that unreasonable anger that he had felt before when Wheaton had spoken to him.

"No, you don't understand. But there is a great difference in the life that has put Christ into everything and the life that does not call him Lord. I wish you could see it clearly."

Edward was silent again, and Wheaton looked and evidently felt disappointed. As Edward made no sign of saying anything, Wheaton rose.

"I'm sorry if I've intruded on you, Blake, or said something I ought not. Some day perhaps you'll understand my motive. I pray the Holy Spirit may move your heart and bring you into the kingdom."

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

THE DEACONESS.

on this subject I wrote an article in the Richmond Christian Advocate advocating the establishment of the order of deaconess, and I have never changed my mind.

The vote of 13 to 13 in the committee was on a motion to concur in the establishment of the office of deaconess, which failed on a tie, and the committee reported against it; but 13 were in favor as well as 13 against. I think the whole subject is most cleverly covered by the little leaflet written by Miss Held. The very same objection to the work of trained deaconesses in this business was made to the working and employment of trained nurses the Southern prejudice against women being anything else but a member of the household and working in a social sphere according to her sweet will. I have known a great many men to object most seriously to the education and training of their sisters, though they were poor and dependent as trained nurses. They would say that they would work their fingers to the bone to support their sisters before they should ever go to any such employment. But the common sense of the age and the necessities of the situation and the demands of the people have swept away all this prejudice. I contend there is a demand for trained of this kind. We have plenty to do. We have got to—a work that

but we want this provision for their training just like we want institutions for the graduation of trained nurses. We want to know where we can get them when we want them, and lay our hands upon them and willingly support them and give them our endorsement and help in this work, and we cannot do it until we have some arrangement of this kind. We say expressly that this office of deaconess is no order of any kind, and there is no provision for a woman preacher or a woman expounder on the platform, but to give authority to the office and signification to the woman who consecrates herself to this benevolent work. I cannot see any harm in it; it seems to me I see a good deal of good, and, by God's blessing, I hope this General Conference will order it.

W. R. Peebles: I do not think there is any need developed for the office of deaconess to be created that is not met fully in the report of the committee, or rather in the majority report of the committee. It is claimed that certain sections need just such work as it is claimed the deaconesses can do. This majority report provides not only that you can have them, but there is a factory where you can get them from. I do not know any women that want this scarcely at all. I have taken pains to inquire into it. I am opposed to it because it is an undemocratic measure. According to that paper, it is class legislation. She can't be a married woman. It is in the interests of these long unappropriated blessings. I oppose it, again, because when you get a special lot of women to do a work it will encourage the women to unload on us. It suppresses individual activity.

It is taking away spontaneity and crushing out individualism, and putting everything in orders.

A. Coke Smith: I come from one of the largest pastoral charges in Southern Methodism. For two years that church has employed a city missionary who is doing the work that is provided in this bill for deaconesses. I stand here to say that there is a work in our cities that only women can do, and only women that have been trained to do that kind of work are fitted to do it. She must be trained for it, and this is simply the name given an order of deaconesses. Bro. Peebles talks about class legislation. Why, when a woman marries and has a family of her own, she has already legislated herself out of that kind of work. She cannot attend to her own household work and attend to work of this kind.

C. F. Reed: If ever there has been a question before this Conference from which ridicule should be debarred, certainly this is the question. In the name of our mothers, in the name of our sisters, in the name of that great host of godly women, without which there would be no Church, let us consider this question as in the presence of God. It has been said here that they do not want it. They do want it. What is this petition before us but an asking at our hands consideration? They say, in the first place, they are not asking to be preachers. It is not petticoats in the pulpit that we have to deal with now. They do not ask us to ordain them. They simply ask to be recognized by us, that as they go forward in their labors they may not stand alone; that they may have the endorsement of their brethren upon them. Is this too much to ask at our hands? Another thing I would like to have considered, and that is that this majority report makes no provision for the training and education that is necessary for this work. They ask us to put into their hands the facility for enabling them to do this work in the very best possible way. Unless they have that facility and that study and training which will enable them to be most effective, they cannot meet with that success which they desire.

W. R. Webb: In July, 1862, in front of the batteries in Malvern Hill, I was shot down and left upon the battlefield for three days, unattended and uncared for, as hundreds of others were. The priests and the Sisters of Charity were there. I had been reared among the old Scotch Presbyterians, who dissented from those who suffered persecution who had taught me when I was simply a lad in my teens that the Catholic Church was the great beast spoken of in Revelations. When I saw the old Roman priests and the Sisters of Charity, and I saw no Methodists or Baptists, or any other of the great denominations, I realized what a great work these people were doing for humanity. That may be simply a personal illusion, but it had its weight upon my character. You will pardon me for another. I never knew what it was to have the advice of a father. A mother, a widowed mother, an unappropriated blessing, was the grandest teacher of a Sunday school I ever had the honor of attending. I thank God for these unappropriated blessings. The finest piece of literature ever produced to the South was Thomas Nelson Page's "Cousin Fanny." Bro. Peebles made his speech. He comes from my Conference, that passed a memorial asking this General Conference to establish this order of deaconesses according to the minority report; and I want the Tennessee Conference properly represented before this body. Our delegates who are here—each one that appeared upon the floor—made speeches upon that order. He fights against it because it is undemocratic. If I understand democracy (and I tried to learn it) it is local self-government. My conscience! Can't a good woman have local option on her matrimonial state without being charged with being undemocratic? My brethren, I believe that this is the great question that is now left before us for this General Conference, and unless we adopt that minority report I will return to the Tennessee Conference feeling that we have not taken the best forward step that was before us.

S. B. Adams: Permit a few words in favor of the deaconess movement. I came from a city where an order of this kind is extremely important. I believe that one of the sources of the strength of the Roman Catholic Church, a Church that is very close to the masses, and is doing an immense amount of good among the masses, is in the existence of the Sisters of Charity. I am proud to say, Methodist though I am, that I am one of the managers of a hospital in Savannah controlled by the Sisters of Charity, and belonging to their great Church, and the son of a Methodist preacher is the house physician. I have had occasion to know these godly women, and I bow before them always in grateful and glad recognition of their piety and of their devotion to the cause of the sick and the poor and the afflicted. I would rejoice to know that my own Church, in some practical way, will attest its interest in the sick and the suffering by an order of this kind. It seldom happens to busy men that they can discriminate. Ladies can enter homes and become familiar with the children, their mothers an dtheir needs, and can know better who are worthy and who are not worthy as men cannot know; and they can be of great assistance in this discrimination in the wise use of money for practical religion. I would like to see them distinguished so that they can be recognized anywhere and everywhere. Let us encourage these good women in their great work for practical religion.

A. J. Lamar: Sentiment is a very beautiful thing; I wouldn't say a word against it; but sentiment ought not to govern a grave Church council in the decision of practical questions. We have heard eulogies this morning on the Sisters of Charity, and I would not take one laurel from their brows. But if you please, there are certain things in connection with the Sisters of Charity that we should remember. These good women are profoundly convinced that they can work their way to the kingdom of heaven, and they are working under that conviction. Again, what has been the effect upon the man Catholic Church of these various orders? Have not the energies of this Church been absorbed in these various orders? Is there not a strong tendency in human nature, be it manist or Protestant, when you have organized a society charged with specific duty to turn over the performance of that duty to that society, and all others absolve themselves of responsibility whatever? We have thousands of good women in Southern Methodism who are doing the work of our Lord and His Church in the city as well as in the country. Now I single out from their number two or three, or a half dozen, and say that these are the people to do that work, and you are going to stop a great deal of good work that is going on; you are going to rob a great many of our good women of that which is a great blessing to them, the doing of this great work, which ought to be the work of all Christian women, and not of a select few. There is no great demand in Southern Methodism for the establishment of this order. I honor so many of the women who are nearlily in favor of that movement, but they are not representative of the great sisterhood of Southern Methodism. There are sections where all of our women practically are opposed to establishing this order. We ought to remember that I do not like, personally, the uniform business. I do not believe in advertising piety, and I do not want to see the Southern Methodist Church establish an order of women who, by their garb, shall go out advertised as something superior to their sisters.

D. C. Kelley: Years ago, when I was connected with the Board of Missions, a number of women's missionary societies had been formed. Five were organized before they were authorized by the General Conference. A woman had been started to the mission field before the General Conference had authorized it. It occurred from the fact that I got Bishop McTyeire on our staff and he authorized the woman to do it. I have watched the minutia of the organization of women's missionary societies. From my experience as pastor, I am sure that I had rather have fifty or one hundred women that lay my hands on any time, and have been able to do it. My Monday mornings were spent in writing notes when I knew in less than twenty-four hours every woman would respond to the call that I made. Therefore, I am willing to say that the order of deaconesses, which is now proposed, is the next best thing, and the very best thing is the report of the minority so that I go for that minority report.

L. P. Little: I do not know how to correct Dr. Lamar in his regard to sentiment of Southern women. I want to say this: That the Louisville Conference memorialized this General Conference in favor of establishing the order of deaconesses, and I do know that that movement was largely inspired by the consecrated wife of a North Georgia preacher transferred to the Louisville Conference. Our women are in favor of it. Anybody who ever had an opportunity to consider witness any of the effects of this question cannot doubt that it is Methodist that it is godly, that it is sensible. I am conscious that there are many people in my town, many poor, many hungry, many sick, that I do not visit, and I feel that I have taken a large step towards performing my duty as a Christian when I have got an agent to visit the sick and succor the fatherless and the widow, and therefore I am in favor of this measure.

J. H. McLean: I think we have all studied this question, and I believe we know up against the two reports, and I believe the Conference will adopt one or the other; and if we are to adopt one or the other, I hope we will adopt the minority, which gives our ladies the fairest and fullest test, and I hope they will vindicate the wisdom of the body in giving them a fair test to show the virtue and the value of this organization.

B. McGehee: As I have to speak on a postal card (five minutes), I begin by saying first, that I am opposed to any other restrictive rule in the Church. We have one. I think that I do. In the second place, I am opposed to establishing a hennery in the Church for hatching out female preachers.

The Bishop: The Chair must rule out language out of order. (Applause.)

B. McGehee: I proceed. There is much of sentiment in this movement. These petitions and memorials come under the influence of sentiment. It is difficult to resist the presence and force of duty and godliness. I was a member of this committee, and I saw the influence of the presence of charming and consecrated women; and I am free to say that as early as possible when I saw the effect it was taking, that I drew up the sweetest, nicest, biggest, most significant resolution, thanking the ladies, and promising that I would have them before us again. We are now seeking to set up an altar here. We are seeking to do what we are already doing, and which we will be able to do if we set up a permanent altar here. There is no demand for it throughout the Church. Nine-tenths of our women are opposed to it.

W. P. Lovejoy: I desire to call attention to one view. If you draw the line between two or three good women, trained as they may be for the work to which they are set apart, and the balance of the women of a great church of five hundred thousand members, you say to the balance of the women of the Church practically, this work is organized and in the hands of men especially set apart for it—and that it will be the effect of that? That is of our woman's nature which is the sweetest and tenderest you put your hand of repression upon. You say these good women you must find a development of your higher and better nature somewhere else than here. There is no school of training under heaven that is comparable to the school suffering in which a good woman learns to do the duty that belongs to Christian women.

Delegate: Which item in the report restricts the work among the poor deaconesses alone?

W. P. Lovejoy: The very fact that you organize this work and commit it into the hands of two or three women, itself restricts it to them.

T. T. Fishburne: The very objection that the brother raises is an argument that we need organization. I think what we as a Church are suffering from to-day is the fact that we have allowed secret orders of this country to organize and do the work the Church ought to do. I have been engaged in some work of this kind for twelve years, and I have been attempting to establish a hospital in our city to meet the demands that I believed our Church should meet. We have ladies in our Church who have been doing the work of the deaconesses, but they have not had the endorsement of the Church. I am to-day president of a hospital. We have a training school where we are training them for that work. I do hope that you will pass the minority report and give us these workers that we so much need to do the work that the ungodly institutions are doing. In our town there is one order that spends thousands of dollars a year relieving the sick and contributing to the poor. Yet they had a meeting there sometime ago, and one of their leaders got up and denounced the Church of God, and said he did not believe in the religion of Jesus Christ simply because the Church of God was not meeting the needs of humanity along this line. This went out as a charge against Christianity as a whole. I do hope we will meet this demand that is upon us.

J. A. Clifton: Mr. President and Brethren of the General Conference.—In a very singular and significant way God seems to be moving on the nations of the earth in the influence of women. It is only a few years ago, sir, when our missionaries in China found it impossible to have access to the best classes of Chinese society, that God in His infinite wisdom whispered to our mothers, our daughters, and wives that they must carry the Gospel to the last places in China. I tell you that is a significant fact. She who stoops to catch man's latest whisper and mingling it with her prayers, transfers it to angels who bear it on golden pinions to the throne of God, is not to be disregarded in any movement for the best interests of the Church of God. (Applause.) What would we do in this world without women? They are the prime cause of everything; and Eve was as little to blame in the first transgression as Adam; indeed, if anything, she was the less to blame, for she took the first bite of the apple—it was a very modest bite—and she never saw that apple again. (Great laughter.) I tell you the hope of this world depends upon the morality, the religion and faith in God that is illustrated in the lives of our noble women. I consider the human mind a heterogeneous mass of undecomposed matter, and therefore it is impossible to give expression to but one thought at a time (laughter), but when you focalize all the processes of mentality upon a subject so prominent and important and vital as this, there can be but one verdict. (Applause.) Think of it, my brethren, and what we are doing to-day. Some gentlemen speaking here said that sentiment was a small thing. I tell you sentiment makes character and character makes the nation (applause), and the man who has forgotten to bow down before woman, and who is not chivalrous in her presence has lost the first great element of man. (Applause.) Yes, Mr. President, the whitest foam dances upon the darkest billow; the star shines brightest that is surrounded by the blackest thunder-cloud; and when a man would sweep through the swamp of trouble, overwhelmed in a slough of despair, who is in that whispers in his ears at that critical hour, "Don't give up the ship?" (Great laughter and applause.)

On motion of M. J. Cofer the previous question was called.

The Bishop: The motion is on the adoption of the minority report.

J. M. Mason: The chairman of the Committee on Revisals is opposed to the report, and as I understand it has appointed Dr. Briggs to represent the report.

C. H. Briggs: There appeared before our committee when this matter was considered one of these trained workers laboring in one of our strongest churches. Her grace, refinement, beauty, deep and tender sympathy touched all our hearts, but no plea of that kind was needed to lead us to recognize the need of these workers in many of our cities. We are all one, I think, at that point. The only difference among us is a mere difference of detail in regard to this work. The plea has been made here that we must have the minority report in order to train the workers. If the brethren will turn to paragraph 366 of the Discipline they can read that the Woman's Board shall have authority to establish and maintain a Bible and training school under its auspices, control and management for the education of missionary and other Christian workers. That institution is located in my district, and it is open for any and all who wish to prepare for work in their home or foreign fields. We have already in our Discipline in reference to the Woman's Home Missionary Society the declaration that the object of this society shall be, among other things, to provide for religious instruction for the ignorant and destitute, and otherwise aid the cause of Christ. The majority report proposes adding to this section, "Any auxiliary society may, on the advice of the preacher in charge, and the recommendation of the Quarterly Conference, employ trained women to assist the pastor and work under his direction, or any such worker may be employed by the district or Conference with the consent of the presiding elder and the preacher in charge of the church with which he may work. The difference between the majority and the minority report is that the majority authorizes and recognizes this kind of work and leaves the women at their liberty, while the minority report circumscribes the matter more and leaves less responsibility with the women as to matters of detail.

The vote was taken upon the adoption of the minority report, and the report was adopted. Ayes, 130; nays, 38.

Anson West: I rise to a question of privilege. I endeavored to get the ear of the President to make a speech on this subject, but he would not recognize me. I give notice that I will enter a protest upon the record protesting against this action of the Conference.

Paul Whitehead: We ought not to allow a protest to be spread by a member who merely differs from the majority.

The Bishop: Let the Chair rise to a question of personal privilege. The Chair did not see Dr. West rise at all to address the Chair. It would give the Chair as much pleasure to recognize him as any member of this body; therefore, the Chair objects to the expression that the Chair would not recognize him.

Anson West: I will withdraw it.

J. J. Tigert: Withdraw the protest?

Anson West: No, sir; I will not withdraw the protest.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The world is going forward. The temperance question has become a disturbing element in politics in Tennessee. The Tennessee Republicans declare for extending the four mile law to towns of 5,000 and under, and allowing local option to the cities. At present, under Democratic legislation, the four mile law extends to towns of 2,000 and under. But to have the advantage of this law the small towns require a new charter. Many of the towns are securing the repeal of their charters in order to secure a dry charter. The four mile law means that no liquor shall be sold, except by druggists on prescription of a physician within four miles of a chartered institution of learning. The temperance people have chartered institutions enough to exclude saloons from a larger part of the State. What they want to do now is to exclude them from the State altogether.

Recently the old town of Rogersville voted to repeal their charter and go under the new dispensation. The dries, however, carried the election by only one majority, and then powder was burnt and the bells rung.

Satanism dies hard. What will not men do for money? They work for it, suffer for it, starve for it, lose sleep for it, scheme for it, cheat for it, lie for it, prevaricate for it, steal for it, rob for it, fight for it, kill for it, die for it, go to hell for it.

In a recent address in New York a health officer declared tuberculosis curable, and he thinks that thousands die because their physicians have not the moral courage to tell them the truth, and thus stir them up to use the proper precautions against the progress of the disease:

"In the case of autopsies in New York hospitals which have come under my knowledge," he continued, "fully sixty per cent. had some time in their lives had tuberculosis. Of these a little more than half had died of that disease. The remainder had recovered and many had not known of its existence in their systems. A third

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON V, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 3.

Text of the Lesson, Ex. xl, 1-38.
Memory Verses, 1-3—Golden Text,
Ps. c, 1—Commentary Prepared by
Rev. D. M. Stearns.

1, 2, 17-19. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

Thus Moses was commanded, and thus he did in every particular just as he was commanded. See verse 16 and compare the sevenfold obedience in verses 19, 21, 23, 25, 27, 29, 32. This whole chapter gives a twofold statement of the completion and erection of the tabernacle—verses 1-16 the Lord's command and 17-33 Moses' obedience—after which the Lord approves and accepts the work. About three months after they left Egypt at Mount Sinai the Lord said to Moses, "Let them make Me a sanctuary, that I may dwell among them," and the full instructions concerning it and the priesthood are found in chapters xxv to xxx, while the account of the work as it was done is found in chapters xxxv to xxxix, and in the lesson today we have the erection and dedication on the first day of the first month of the second year. As with this building, so with the temple of Solomon—God Himself, and God alone, was the architect (I Chron. xxviii, 19). A very peculiar thing about the material for the tabernacle was the willingness of the people and the abundance of the gifts, so that Moses had to restrain the people from bringing (chapter xxxvi, 6, 7).

3, 20, 21. And thou shalt put therein the ark of the testimony and cover the ark with the veil.

This was the only vessel in the holy of holies and spoke of Christ, in whose heart was the law and who is the end of the law for righteousness to every believer. The wood and gold suggest His humanity and divinity. He is indeed our mercy seat (Rom. iii, 25, R. V.), where alone God can meet the sinner, and the veil speaks of His body (Heb. x, 20), which concealed the glory while He was here on earth. The cherubim beaten out of the same piece of the gold of the mercy seat, and also figures of the same worked in the veil tell of His body, the church, and our oneness with Him.

4, 22-25. And thou shalt bring in the table and set in order the things that are to be set in order upon it, and thou shalt bring in the candlestick and light the lamps thereof.

In these two vessels in the outer or first room, the holy place, we see Him who said, "I am the Bread of Life," "I am the Light of the World" (John vi, 35; viii, 12). We see His death and resurrection in the sowing and reaping of the grain, and His sufferings are also set forth in the grinding of the grain (John xii, 24; Isa. xxviii, 28). His sufferings are also seen in the pressing or bruising of the olives to obtain oil for the lamps.

5, 26-28. And thou shalt set the altar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony and put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle.

This was the third and only other article of furniture in the holy place, and on it the priest was to burn incense morning and evening (Ex. xxx, 7, 8). It suggests the merits and excellencies of the Lord Jesus in His present great work of intercession for His people, for apart from Him no service can be accepted.

6, 29. And thou shalt set the altar of the burnt offering before the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation.

This brazen altar or altar of burnt offering represents the work of Christ on Calvary suffering in our stead for our sins. It was just within the court by the entrance, and there was blood upon it and at the foot of it. It was impossible to enter the tabernacle except by this altar, so that any who would not accept the way of the blood could not possibly enter.

7, 30-32. And thou shalt set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar and shalt put water therein.

While the brazen altar proclaims justification and also that phase of sanctification which refers to our standing in Christ before God (Rom. v, 9; Heb. x, 10, 14), the laver points to the continued cleansing in daily life by the word of God (John xvii, 17; xiii, 10; Ps. cxix, 9).

8, 33. And thou shalt set up the court round about and hang up the hanging at the court gate.

This linen fence hung upon wooden pillars and attached to them by silver hooks, each pillar standing in a socket of brass and kept upright by cords attached to brass pins driven in the earth, is all suggestive of redemption by blood, the righteousness provided for us and the way we are kept by the power of God. A pillar could not be a part of the tabernacle while it stood as a tree in the forest, but it had to be cut down and put upon a new foundation. This suggests the new birth. We are plainly told in Rev. xix, 8, that the fine linen is the righteousness of saints.

9-16. Both the high priest and his sons and the tabernacle and all its vessels had to be anointed, for all were set apart to be holy unto the Lord and to minister unto Him, His special possession, set apart for Himself, meet for His use (Tit. ii, 14, R. V.; Ps. iv, 3; II Tim. ii, 21).

34, 35. The glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle.

So He will fill us if we are willing and obedient and wholly set apart for Himself, our bodies a living sacrifice, that He may be glorified in us, our de termination that of Paul in Phil. i, 20; iii, 10, etc.

36-38. The pillar of cloud was to them a guide, a light, a shield, an oracle, an avenger, a covering, for God Himself was in it. It was the symbol of His presence in the sight of all the people.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 3, "The Call to Separation"—Text,
II Cor. vi, 14-18; I John ii, 15-17.

The call of Christ to discipleship is a call at the present time, as it was in His lifetime and has always been since, to become different in some respects from other people. This necessity for separateness has not always been clearly seen, nor has the requirement been always faithfully observed. In too many cases Christians seem to the worldly to be no better than themselves and scarcely different in any way.

Some have gone to the other extreme and have made the difference extend to many things which Jesus never included and which should never have been brought into the question.

"Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean, and I will receive you and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be My sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty," gives no sanction for unneighborly conduct and makes no demand for any exclusiveness which is not entirely kind and helpful to every one. It gives no basis for arrogance and the spirit of unkind criticism. It is not a command to banish all pleasant things and cultivate the unlovely in dress or manners.

It is a perfectly natural recognition of the fact that if one becomes fully devoted to the good and pure the impure and unclean must be banished from companionship. The two are incompatible and cannot live together. One or the other must be chosen. If we are to be disciples of Christ and children of the Most High, we can no longer cultivate the merely fleshly appetites and worldly tastes.

We are heirs of all the divine inheritance. We are princes of royal lineage. We must fit ourselves for our high position and call to rulership. We must first become able to rule our own spirits, to control our desires, which, if left untrained, would wander into harmful ways. We are to think of the good and beautiful until we grow to love only that which is pure and admirable. We are to speak the true until we become incapable of the false and untrue. We are to do the kind things until it becomes natural and easy and all unkind deeds are painful and impossible to us in practice.

What a contrast this makes to all merely worldly living! How such consecration and working would make us actually different and separate from the world—not out of the world; still in it, actively, full of life and joy and zest, but blessedly conscious of peace and purity and love in place of the restlessness, unclean lusts and misery of the worldly!

Our pressing need is separateness unto God, leaving the earthly life to live here and now the Christly life—not monkishly and in unnatural constraint, but in perfect soul freedom and contentment.

Living For the Future.

Would it not ennoble our daily existence if we more vividly realized than we do customarily that our human life is not ultimate even in this sphere, not limited by its extent and duration, but has an immortal prolongation even in this world, even when pursued for personal ends? It is true that no man liveth to himself or dieth to himself, for life and death, though personal experiences, have a more or less remote projection upon the race. The energy, force and mental and moral power set free must have a certain continuance. God will not be put off or relegated to some other time and place. He is here at your elbow and at mine, telling us to use the day wisely, cheerfully, justly, to enjoy, to love, to worship, to act now, for in this day foundations are laid for a better time to come; in this day influences are going abroad through all worlds of highest moment; in this day deeds may be done to affect remote ages. All of beauty and truth lie within our reach if we take the healthy and sane view of life and cast from us all those diseased and anæmic thoughts that poison the spring of reflection and feeling at their source. The mawkish abnormality of our time seems sloughing off. Robust and glowing views of man's place in the universe and God's immanence seem about to blossom like the wondrous century tree that after long sterility puts forth a flower.—Christian Register.

God and Goodness.

The persistence of God and goodness through the ages is too often overlooked. Men are prone to give the devil more than his due of virtues. Especially is he credited with patience and persistence in accomplishing his nefarious designs. It is an easy and careless remark of the many that the devil never takes a vacation. As an example of industry and faithfulness to his deceitful purpose the conventional devil has been a pre-eminent position before the world and many saintly hearts have been discouraged by the apparent success of the virtues of the evil one! It is curious and deplorable how men forget God and what God means in life. We gaze over a little interval of time, and it appears that all things are going wrong, that God has let go His grip and goodness lies a bleeding victim at the feet of sin.—Universalist Leader.

Good Resolutions.

You picture to yourself the beauty of bravery and steadfastness, and then some little, wretched, disagreeable thing comes, which is your martyrdom, a lamp for your oil, and if you do not let your oil be spilled.—Phillips Brooks.

Without Religion.

Without religion you cannot make the will equal to its task.—Mrs. Humphry Ward.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Jems Glenned From the Teaching of All Denominations.

The religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is a personal matter.—Rev. Dr. William J. Holtzclaw, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

The Real Reason.

The real reason for rejecting Christianity is that men love sin and will not abandon it.—Rev. E. D. Hull, Methodist, Chicago.

Unfitted For the Master's Use.

The man who has enmity in his heart for his brother in Christ is not sanctified and fit for the Master's use.—Rev. Dr. Holderby, Presbyterian, Atlanta, Ga.

Secret of Being Good.

You will become pure and good by being good and pure. Your acts will be good because your thoughts will be pure.—Professor Nesbitt, Unitarian, Kansas City, Mo.

Reading by the Inner Light.

Not only do we read God's word by means of the interior light, but we can hear the voice of the Lawgiver secretly preaching to us.—Cardinal Gibbons, Catholic, Baltimore.

Working and Helping.

At such a time as this, when possibilities are great and opportunities greater, how tremendous is the loss of life if we do not spend it working and helping.—Rev. C. J. Hall, Denver.

The Watchword.

Back to Christ is the watchword of the new scholarship. In these words we have Christ's own conception of what it is to be a Christian.—Rev. J. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Lost in the Race.

Purposefulness is the secret of attainment. The purposeless man is lost in the race, whether that race be things material or spiritual.—Rev. Dr. L. Roemer, Presbyterian, St. Louis.

Need of Instruction.

Man is born into this world in a state of ignorance and dependence. He needs instruction, he demands help and guidance; hence there must be a teacher.—Rev. M. P. Smith, Roman Catholic, San Francisco.

The Dissatisfied Man.

It is the man full of dissatisfaction and unrest who knows that he has already attained nor is already perfect who becomes the colouler, the civilizer and the saint.—Rev. G. B. Vosku, Baptist, Denver.

A Religion of Love.

We say that Christianity is a religion of love. We appeal to its fundamental commandment, and we quote "love your enemies" as if that put a bar on feelings of natural aversion.—Rev.

S. Garver, Unitarian, Worcester, Mass.

Will Return Like the Prodigal.

Some day—like the prodigal in the matchless parable so simply stated by the Great Teacher—some day the human race will come to itself and return to its Father's house—to God.—Rev. Henry Irving Rosmus, Methodist, Chicago.

The Mysteries of Life.

The inscrutable mysteries of life are inscrutable for the reason that we are so much a part of them that we are not far enough away to see what they mean. There is no new grief in the world. There is no new sin in the world.—Rev. Dr. Thomas Slicer, Unitarian, New York.

The Drawing Power.

Christ is not only the drawing power to draw souls up into heaven, but if held up in the pulpit will draw men into the church here on earth. The church that is filled because of the preached word will be still filled when others are empty.—Rev. L. M. Zimmerman, Lutheran, Baltimore.

Foundation of Heroism.

The root and foundation of true heroism is religion. There must be faith that above us and around us are helpful and cheering influences, that earth and heaven are within telepathic distance of each other and that what strength we need will be given us for the asking if we are to meet sorrow and misfortune with quiet fortitude.—Rev. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist, New York.

Not a Little Thing.

It may be a little thing to save a man, but it is everything to the man you save. It may seem a little thing to move along in a quiet, dignified and virtuous fashion with no anguish, no sorrow, no heaviness, with a quiet claim on this world and a creedal mortgage on the next, but it is not a little thing to the man who is lost for lack of your sorrow for him.—Rev. John E. White, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Present Work of Religion.

It will be a great forward step in the progress of humanity when all come to see that churches and religious services are not for the saving of their souls, the getting to heaven after death, but are for the schooling and inspiring those souls for the service of man in the life that now is and for the strengthening within them of the sense of God, the ever present influence that makes for peace in the heart and good will toward man.—Rev. David Utter, Unitarian, Denver.

Insufficiency of Creeds.

Creeds sometimes are aimed at other creeds. They are often born in doctrinal speculations and nurtured in sectional prejudices. Made by theologians, they require interpretation by professors of divinity. Niceties of doctrinal discrimination are not appreciated by the average layman. He knows that sin is here. He sees lust holding high carnival in all of the departments of life. He asks for a remedy. Surely there must be one. God has supplied every earthly need of the race. The father has certainly provided better things for the soul. A cold theological deliverance does not satisfy the hunger of that which is highest and holiest in man. Creeds have not the drawing power of the physician's plaster. They afford little relief from the misery and wretchedness of a sinful life.—Rev. Dr. J. W. Crutcher, Christian, St. Louis.

Human companionship counts for so much in this life; but, after all, the sharpest corners are to be turned alone.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

MISSIONARY MOVEMENT OF THE CHURCH.

system in such countries as Japan, Mexico and Brazil, and so completely permeated with rationalism are these systems, that it is imperative that the Church should provide for trained leadership among its own sons and daughters. Out of their poverty with a spirit of self-denial and moral heroism which is truly inspiring our native membership in all the fields we occupy, assisted by the missionaries and some friends, have wrought marvellously in building up their twentieth century fund.

A thank offering of $42,000 has been pledged, which is nearly four dollars per member. Of this sum, the amount of $17,000, or $1.50 per member, has actually been paid. With such a magnificent showing as this the Church in the United States should be swift to provide the few thousand dollars required to put such institutions as Granbery College, in Brazil, our Training School in Mexico, Kwansei Gakuin in Japan, Our Girls' School in Hiroshima, and the University in China on a basis which will enable those in charge to meet the demands growing out of the new order of things."

3. "In the Church at home a quickened conscience has been followed by intelligent effort and the fires of missionary revival lighted up from point to point in the homeland answer back again to the flame of loving service kindled by apostolic men and women in the regions beyond. Never in our history has there been such determined and united effort upon the part of the preachers to bring up the collections in full under the assessments. The result has been more than a million dollars contributed during the quadrennium. This surpasses any record we have yet made, and by the regular annual increase indicated in the figures which correspond to each of the four years, we find an unmistakable indication of a healthy and permanent growth." The subjoined shows our receipts by years—first, on collection; second, on collections, specials, and donations:

1900	.....	235,116 51	284,220 46
1901	.....	267,084 22	330,356 65
1902	.....	291,672 70	362,135 85

Total	.....	$1,014,368 44	$1,232,237 99
Last Quad.		901,593 24	1,077,388 13
Increase	.....	$112,775 20	$154,849 49

This increase over the former quadrennium is the more remarkable and gratifying for two special reasons.

1. The receipts of the latter contained about two-thirds of the entire debt payment.

2. During this same period, two of the leading missionary societies have been handicapped by heavy debts, and the missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been obliged to order a reduction of eight per cent. in order to bring its appropriations within the limits of its resources. With a million of dollars as a base line, we ought, indeed, to thank God, take courage and throw ourselves with a stronger faith and broader plans into the work of the future."

4. Our Literature.—"The campaign inaugurated at New Orleans, and made necessary by the forward movement, has necessitated the preparation of a vast number of leaflets and other forms of literature adapted to missionary institutes and mid-year meetings and to the creation of a more intelligent interest in our foreign work. The report of the New Orleans Conference has been sold to the extent of 3,200 copies, and even at the low price of one dollar, will meet the entire expense of its publication.

The Board of Missions at its last session authorized the publication of an illustrated monthly paper, "Go Forward," and the secretaries were obliged to assume the expense of publication, no appropriation being made to cover the same. Beginning with its first issue, July, 1901, it had reached a circulation of more than ten thousand copies in nine months, and had $700 to its credit at the close of our fiscal year, March 31st. The paper has met with a hearty reception all over the Church, and there is no reason why it should not have a circulation of 50,000 by the close of another quadrennium."

Other items might be culled, but this paper is long enough. Send for a copy of the report. In the mean time, let us enter more prayerfully, more intelligently, more earnestly into the work of saving the world.

O Lord, what cross wilt Thou that I should bear this day for love of Thee? Thou knowest, Lord, that I am all weakness; strengthen me to bear it patiently, humbly, lovingly. If I sink under it, look on me and raise me up. Give what Thou commandest and command what Thou wilt; sanctify my cross to me and keep me Thine own forever. Amen.

Religious News.

Rev. George W. Wray is slowly improving from his sickness.

Mrs. H. L. West has received a letter from her father, Rev. George H. Wray, D. D., who is at Healing Springs, Va., announcing his much improved condition. He has been at the springs some time receiving treatment for rheumatism.

Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, has just returned from the Rockingham, N. C., District Conference, over which he presided. He reports having had a most delightful and interesting session. He was cordially received and most hospitably entertained by the Rockingham Methodists.

REV. J. E. POTTS VERY ILL.

Rev. Joseph E. Potts, a prominent Methodist minister of the Pungoteague Circuit, on the Eastern Shore, Va., is dangerously ill. His four sons, all of whom are ministers and members of the Virginia Conference, have been summoned to his bedside. They are Rev. E. A. Potts, of the Highland Park Methodist church; Rev. E. J. Potts, of Highland Springs; Rev. T. N. Potts, of Farmville, formerly pastor of Park Place Methodist church, of this city, and Rev. R. H. Potts, of Suffolk.

Rev. J. E. Potts is one of the best beloved ministers in the Virginia Conference, and has a host of friends in this city.

CHAIR OF HISTORY AND ECONOMICS.

The Executive Committee of the Randolph-Macon Woman's College this evening elected Dr. B. W. Arnold of the State Normal College, at Farmville, to the chair of history and economics to succeed to Dr. John H. Latane, who resigned recently to accept the chair of history in Washington and Lee University.

Dr. Arnold is a Ph. D. of Johns Hopkins, and at one time was employed by that institution to make some special investigations into social problems in large cities. Besides the Farmville school, he has taught at Randolph-Macon Academy, Bedford City, and at Emory College, Ga.

The Executive Committee elected Mrs. William M. Strother, of Lynchburg, professor of elocution.—Times.

THE TENT MEETING.

The tent meeting at Twentieth and Grace streets is meeting with great success. Sunday afternoon Rev. M. Ashby Jones preached to two hundred men. At night Rev. George H. Wiley preached, and although one hundred seats had been added and the weather was cloudy, the seats were filled and many were standing up. Mrs. R. C. Mukel sang "Though your sins be as scarlet."

Last night Rev. George H. Wiley preached again to a great crowd of people. At the close of these services in every instance there are people who are converted. At the close of Mr. Wiley's sermon last night scores of people went to the altar, and there were many conversions.

There will be preaching every night at 8 o'clock, and to-night Mr. White Tupman will sing several selections.

An assault was committed upon some Methodist missionaries in Korea by Japanese coolies about the 15th of last month. As Bishop Moore, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was en route to the town of Soowan, to dedicate a church, his party was attacked by Japanese coolies, who were building the railroad from Seoul to Fason. The Bishop, his two young daughters and Messrs. Appenzeller and Swearer, and all of the party suffered, the Bishop's pitch helmet alone saving his skull from a crushing blow, while Appenzeller was struck down by a blow from a club, and Swearer, the other missionary, was struck with a piece of cordwood, which gashed his head across the forehead to the bone, and may have permanently injured one eye.

PETERSBURG CONFERENCE.

On the 16th instant, the Petersburg District Conference met at Shiloh church, in Mecklenburg county. The preaching has been of a high order.

The business sessions never lapsed into dryness and dullness.

The most beautiful harmony and deep spirituality characterized the daily gatherings.

Great numbers attended the Conference daily, while they were fed spiritually, they also did justice to the wonderful dinners so abundantly provided.

The people of Mecklenburg are noted for their hospitality, and are fully entitled to their reputation as model hosts and hostesses. This is one of the best parts of Virginia's fair domain. Its soil is good, and seems equally adapted to growing the very best of tobacco, corn, wheat and grasses. I believe it is among the best also for "truck farming." I judge this from the fact that within a week my host can dig sweet potatoes from the first "patch" I have seen this season. I am the fortunate guest of one of the most progressive merchants and farmers in this section, Mr. Warren Simmons. On the south of the house stretches away one hundred or more acres of corn that on average is the finest I ever saw.

Northward, between two and three hundred thousand tobacco plants uplift their green leaves until lost in distant perspective.

Flue curing tobacco is clearing away the woods. After awhile the farmers will have to buy coal to cure with.

No resolutions were ever passed more heartily and unanimously by a Conference than those thanking Rev. Baughan and the Mecklenburg people for their lavish hospitality and care of the Conference.

The following delegates and alternates were elected to represent the district in the Annual Conference: L. L. Marks, G. P. Adams, J. M. Davis, and J. H. Wall; alternates are John W. Broadus, R. B. Harley, C. S. Barrow.—Times.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

The Executive Committee on the 1902 encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, to be held in Washington in October, is planning for a grand religious service, to be held on Sunday, October 5th. Ten years ago the Grand Army held its annual encampment in Washington and a similar service, was of great interest. This year, Rev. W. C. Alexander, D. D., is chairman of the Committee on Religious Services, and will have charge of the grand meeting to be held on October 5th. It is the present intention of Dr. Alexander to secure some of the finest musical talent in the city to render the musical part of the programme, while certain well-known hymns, to be sung by the congregation in the hearty and inimitable way in which only old soldiers can render them, will be selected. The speakers have not yet been selected, but it is anticipated that some of the most eloquent men in the country will be in Washington at that time, and their services will be freely requisitioned. It is believed by the committee that no more fitting inauguration of the work could be appropriately blended, and it is hoped to make this great service one on which the participants can look back with pleasure for many years.

Apropos of the Grand Army encampment, the religious people of Washington are much pleased at the action of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in promptly and unequivocally refusing to permit the opening of barber shops on Sunday, October 5th. The Barbers' Association, in view of the large number of strangers who will be in the city on that day, petitioned the Commissioners to permit them to ignore the law and open their places of business, believing that the opportunity for tunity for making large profits would prove especially good, but the Commissioners take the very proper ground that there is no occasion for breaking the Sunday law because there will be strangers in Washington. There is little doubt in the minds of the pastors and other citizens of Washington that, while a few may be put to inconvenience by the absence of barber shops, the respect of the visitors for the city of Washington will be enhanced by a strict respect for Sunday.

One of the most edifying evidences of the religious fervor which stimulates the Church workers of Washington may be seen on any Sunday afternoon when the impressive religious service which takes place every Sunday in the jail is held. The chorus of some four hundred voices, almost all of the prisoners taking part, sounds like a mighty organ, and the sermons, which are delivered by different pastors, are often touching and eloquent. These services are held in the great rotunda of the institution, while the prisoners behind the bars gather on each floor around the central court. In the rotunda proper are the minister who conducts the services, and the choir which is in charge of Mr. D. D. Lore. At last Sunday's services there were present 358 prisoners, of whom 59 were white and the remainder colored. Dr. Geo. P. Wilson, who delivered the sermon, spoke with great fervor and simplicity, and his words appeared to have much effect on his hearers, many of whom wept copiously. His subject was a comparison of the betrayal of the Master by Judas and His denial by Peter.

Referring to the Sunday law, Rev. Lucien Clark, who has been a most active promotor of Sunday legislation, recently made public a letter in which he denounces the "Secular League." In the course of his remarks Mr. Clark says: "The Secular League challenges our admiration in one respect. It has shown a spirit of perseverance worthy of a better cause. Its predecessors, the atheists and infidels of the country, have charged upon the Christian Church, the Christian Bible, the Christian Sabbath and the Christian religion for generations. Now the Secular League, changing the name, has snatched the trailing banner from the hands of its fallen comrades, and, burnishing the broken and impotent armor which they wielded, has returned to the charge again and again, and still it does not despair. Those impregnable bulwarks of truth and righteousness still stand unscathed. They are far stronger to-day in the confidence of men than they were a hundred years ago. Still the League repeats its charge. But the world cannot be deceived. 'By their fruits ye shall know them.' The League has opposed every law providing for the proper observance of the Sunday as soon as it was proposed in Congress, but, fortunately, with little avail."

In my last letter I referred to Washington as a centre of ecclesiastical architecture. It is so already, and now another beautiful church edifice is to be erected in this city. The old Foundry church, having sold its former site, has purchased a new one in an attractive part of the city, and has $145,000 in its treasury with which it expects to build one of the handsomest churches in the city. The pastor, Rev. Dr. L. B. Wilson, and several members of the congregation constitute a building committee, whose members will visit many of the larger cities of the East with a view to gathering ideas on modern church architecture. When all return to the city in the fall they will get together and devise a plan which will be submitted to a competent architect, and the result, it is anticipated, will be a beautiful addition to the long list of houses of worship in the national capital.

A gentleman who came to Washington from Oyster Bay to-day tells me of a reception given, yesterday, by Mrs. Roosevelt, to the ladies of St. Hilda's Society of Christ church, Oyster Bay. The ladies assembled at the Seawan-haka Corinthian Yacht Club House, where they were met by launches and taken aboard the President's yacht, the Mayflower. During the reception the Mayflower made a trip of several miles down the Sound and back, and refreshments were served in the cabin. Mrs. Roosevelt has been an active member of the St. Hilda Society for over two years.

A crank is powerless so long as it insists on working alone.

Talmage Sermos

WASHINGTON.

— From a process familiar to the farmer Dr. Talmage draws lessons of consolation and encouragement for people in sorrow and adversity. The text is Isaiah xxviii, 27, 28: "For the fitches are not thrashed with a thrashing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin, but the fitches are beaten out with a staff and the cummin with a rod. Bread corn is bruised because he will not ever be thrashing it."

Misfortunes of various kinds come upon various people, and in all times the great need of ninety-nine people out of a hundred is solace. Look, then, to this neglected allegory of my text.

There are three kinds of seed mentioned—fitches, cummin and corn. Of the last we all know. But it may be well to state that the fitches and the cummin were small seeds, like the caraway or the chickpea. When these grains or herbs were to be thrashed, they were thrown on the floor, and the workmen would come around with staff or rod or flail and beat them until the seed would be separated, but when the corn was to be thrashed that was thrown on the floor, and the men would fasten horses or oxen to a cart with iron dented wheels; that cart would be drawn around the thrashing floor, and so the work would be accomplished. Different kinds of thrashing for different products. "The fitches are not thrashed with a thrashing instrument, neither is a cart wheel turned about upon the cummin, but the fitches are beaten out with a staff and the cummin with a rod. Bread corn is bruised because he will not ever be thrashing it."

The great thought that the text presses upon our souls is that we all go through some kind of thrashing process. The fact that you may be devoting your life to honorable and noble purposes will not win you any escape. Wilberforce, the Christian emancipator, was in his day derisively called "Doctor Cantwell." Thomas Babington Macaulay, the advocate of all that was good, long before he became the most conspicuous historian of his day was caricatured in one of the quarterly reviews as "Babbletonque Macaulay." Norman McLeod, the great friend of the Scotch poor, was industriously maligned in all quarters, although on the day when he was carried out to his burial a workman stood and looked at the funeral procession and said, "If he had done nothing for anybody more than he has done for me, he would shine as the stars forever and ever." All the small wits of London had their fling at John Wesley, the father of Methodism. If such men could not escape the maligning of the world, neither can you expect to get rid of the sharp, keen stroke of the tribulum. All who will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Besides that, there are the sicknesses and the bankruptcies and the irritations and the disappointments which are ever putting a cup of aloes to your lip. Those wrinkles on your face are hieroglyphics which, if deciphered, would make out a thrilling story of trouble. The footstep of the rabbit is seen the next morning on the snow, and on the white hairs of the aged are the footprints showing where swift trouble alighted.

Troubles Come Unexpectedly.

Even amid the joys and hilarities of life trouble will sometimes break in. As when the people were assembled in the Charlestown theater during the Revolutionary war, and while they were witnessing a farce and the audience was in great gratulation the guns of an advancing army were heard and the audience broke up in wild panic and ran for their lives, so oftentimes while you are seated amid the joys and festivities of this world you hear the cannonade of some great disaster. All the fitches and the cummin and the corn must come down on the thrashing floor and be pounded.

My subject, in the first place, teaches us that it is no compliment to us if we escape great trial. The fitches and the cummin on one thrashing floor might look over to the corn on another thrashing floor and say: "Look at that poor, miserable, bruised corn! We have only been a little pounded, but that has been almost destroyed." Well, the corn, if it had lips, would answer and say: "Do you know the reason you have not been as much pounded as I have? It is because you are not of so much worth as I am. If you were, you would be as severely run over." Yet there are men who suppose they are the Lord's favorites simply because their barns are full and their bank account is flush and there are no funerals in the house. It may be because they are fitches and cummin, while down at the end of the lane the poor widow may be the Lord's corn. You are but little pounded because you are but little worth and she bruised and ground because she is the best part of the harvest. The beft of the thrashing machine is according to the value of the grain. If you have not been much thrashed in life, perhaps there is not much to thrash! If you have not been much shaken of trouble, perhaps it is because there is going to be a very small yield. When there are plenty of blackberries, the gatherers go out with large baskets, but when the drought has almost consumed the fruit, then a quart measure will do as well. It took the venomous snake on Paul's hand, and the pounding of him with stones until he was taken up for dead, and the jamming against him of prison gates, and the Ephesian vociferation, and the ankles skinned by the painful stocks, and the foundering of the Alexandrian corn ship, and the beheading stroke of the Roman sheriff to bring Paul to his proper development. It was not because Robert Moffat and Lady Rachel Russell and Frederick Oberlin were worse than other people that they had to suffer. It was because they were better, and God wanted to make them best. By the carefulness of the thrashing you may always conclude the value of the grain.

Helps Us Bear Burdens.

Next, my text teaches us that God proportions our trials to what we can bear—the staff for the fitches, the rod for the cummin, the iron wheel for the corn. Sometimes people in great trouble say, "Oh, I can't bear it!" But you did bear it. God would not have sent it upon you if he had not known that you could bear it. You trembled and you swooned, but you got through. God will not take from your eyes one tear too many nor from your lungs one sigh too deep nor from your temples one throb too sharp. The perplexities of your earthly business have not in them one tangle too intricate. You sometimes feel as if our world were full of bludgeons flying haphazard

Oh, no; they are thrashing instruments that God just suits to your case. There is not a dollar of bad debts on your ledger or a disappointment about goods that you expected to go up, but that have gone down, or a swindle of your business partner or a trick on the part of those who are in the same kind of merchandise that you are, but God intended to overrule for your immortal help. "Oh," you say, "there is no need talking that way to me. I don't like to be cheated and outraged." Neither does the corn like the corn thrasher, but after it has been thrashed and winnowed it has a great deal better opinion of winnowing mills and corn thrashers.

"Well," you say, "if I could choose my troubles, I would be willing to be troubled." Ah, my brother, then it would not be trouble. You would choose something that would not hurt, and unless it hurt it does not get sanctified. Your trial perhaps may be childlessness. You are fond of children. You say, "Why does God send children to that other household, where they are unwelcome and are beaten and banged about when I would have taken them in the arms of my affection?" You say, "Any other trial but this." Your trial perhaps may be a disfigured countenance or a face that is easily caricatured, and you say, "I could endure anything if only I was good looking." And your trial perhaps is a violent temper, and you have to drive it like six unbroken horses amid the gunpowder explosions of a great holiday, and ever and anon it runs away with you. Your trial is the asthma. You say, "If it were rheumatism or neuralgia or erysipelas, but it is this asthma, and it is such an exhausting thing to breathe." Your trouble is a husband, sharp, snappy and cross about the house and raising a small riot because a button is off. How could you know the button is off? Your trial is a wife ever in contest with the servants, and she is a sloven. Though she was very careful about her appearance in your presence once, now she is careless, because, she says, her fortune is made! Your trial is a hard school lesson you cannot learn, and you have bitten your finger nails until they are a sight to behold.

Complaining Against God.

Everybody has some vexation or annoyance or trial, and he or she thinks it is the one least adapted. "Anything but this," all say; "anything but this." My hearer, are you not ashamed to be complaining all this time against God? Who manages the affairs of this world anyhow? Is it an infinite Modoc or a Sitting Bull savage or an omnipotent Nana Sahib? No; it is the most merciful and glorious and wise being in all the universe. You cannot teach omnipotence anything. You have fretted and worried almost enough. Do you not think so? Some of you are making yourselves ridiculous in the sight of the angels. Here is a naval architect, and he draws out the plan of a ship of many thousand tons. Many workmen are engaged on it for a long while. The ship is done, and some day, with the flags up and the air gorgeous with bunting, that vessel is launched for Southampton. At that time a lad six years of age comes running down the dock with a toy boat which he has made with his own jackknife, and he says: "Here, my boat is better than yours. Just look at this jibboom and these weather crossjack braces." And he drops his little boat beside the great ship, and there is a roar of laughter on the decks! Ah, my friends, that great ship is your life as God planned it—vast, million tonned, ocean destined, eternity bound! That little boat is your life as you were trying to hew it out and fashion it and launch it. Do not try to be a rival of the great Jehovah. God is always right, and in nine cases out of ten you are wrong. He sees just the hardships, just the bankruclies, just the cross that it is best you to have. He knows what kind grain you are, and he sends the right kind of thrashing machine. It will rod or staff or iron wheel just according as you are fitches or cummin or corn.

Again, my subject teaches that God keeps trial on us until we let go. The farmer shouts "Whoa!" to his horse as soon as the grain is dropped from the stalk. The farmer comes with a fork and tosses up the straw, and sees that the straw has let go the grain and the grain is thoroughly thrashed. So God. Smiting rod and turning wheel both cease as soon as we let go. We hold on to this world, with pleasures and riches and emolument and our knuckles are so firmly set that it seems as if we could hold on forever. God comes along with sor thrashing trouble and beats us loose. We started under the delusion that this was a great world. We learned out our geography that it was so many thousand miles in diameter and many miles in circumference, and said, "Oh, my, what a world!" Trouble came in after life, and this trouble sliced off one part of the world, and has got to be a smaller world and some estimations a very insignificant world, and it is depreciating all the time as a spiritual property. Ten per cent off, 50 per cent off, and there are those who would not give 10 cents for this world—the entire world—as a possession.

The Friendship That Endures.

We thought that friendship was a grand thing. In school we used to write compositions about friendship and perhaps we made our graduation speech on commencement day of friendship. Oh, it was a charming thing! But does it mean as much to you as it used to? You have gone on in life, and one friend has betrayed you and another friend has misinterpreted you, and another friend has neglected you, and friendship comes now sometimes to mean to you merely another ax to grind! So with money. We thought if a man had a competency he was safe for all the future, but we have learned that a mortgage may be defeated by an unknown previous encumbrance; that signing your name on the back of a note may be your business death warrant; that a new tariff may change the current of trade; that a man may be rich today and poor tomorrow. And God, by all these misfortunes, is trying to loosen our grip, but we still hold on. God smites with a staff, but we hold on. And he sends over us the iron wheel of misfortune, but we hold on. There are men who keep their grip on this world until the last moment, who suggest to me the condition and conduct of the poor Indian in the boat in the Niagara rapids, coming on toward the fall. Seeing that he could not escape, a moment or two before he got to the verge of the plunge he lifted a wine bottle and drank it off and then tossed the bottle into the air. So there are men who clutch the world, and they go down through the rapids of temptation and sin, and they hold on to the very last moment to life, drinking to their eternal doom as they go over and go down. Oh, let go! Let go! The best fortune are in heaven. There are no absconding cashiers from that bank, no falling in promises to pay. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. Let not depend upon it this of those who die in our hospitals die of consumption. In one of the older cities of Europe the proportion is much greater. The tubercular bacilli do not multiply outside the system. They tend to die. Infection is by the original bacillus, at all. Large numbers are quickly destroyed. Sunlight destroys. The danger is in damp, dark rooms.

"Tuberculosis is an absolutely preventable disease. It is not only preventable, but curable. It is simply a question of how early a diagnosis is made. If it can be made at the beginning, eighty per cent. at least of the cases are curable if placed in pure atmosphere."

These remarks are especially important and interesting, as it is estimated that one-seventh of the race die of consumption. The common opinion is that consumption is incurable. This opinion is founded on the fact that the disease is not recognized in its true character till it is in its advanced stages. My information, derived from high sources, leads me to believe that consumption is not only preventable, but curable in its earlier stages, and is cured by the proper treatment. Evidently pure air, sunlight and moderate exercise, coupled with wholesome and nutritious diet, constitute a preventive and curative treatment that succeeds.

When the Fourteenth Regiment of North Carolina volunteers camped in the woods near Smithfield, Va., in 1861, there was more sickness among the soldiers, but when the regiment moved into an old field and took the sun straight, the health of the men rapidly improved. So much for light and pure air.

Nearly all people have tuberculosis. I have spit up a thousand bread pills—the result of burst tubercles. Many others have done the same, and, like myself, are enjoying good health.

A medical professor lecturing said that one day a man in Nashville met and stopped him to consult him about his lungs. He pulled a handful of gravels out of his pocket and showed them to the doctor. "Where did you get them?" inquired the doctor. "I expectorated them," replied the patient. "How many of those have you expectorated?" asked the doctor. "Enough to build that cupola," replied the patient in the language of hyperbole. The doctor then sounded his lungs, and said to him: "Those gravels are hardened tubercles; you have thrown them off, and your lungs are sound; you are a well man." Here was a case of cured tuberculosis.

Physical treatment is not the only treatment needed to prevent and cure tuberculosis. Vice is the great slayer of mankind. "In the right hand" of wisdom—anti-vice—"is length of days."

Intemperance in eating, sleeping, working, studying is a fruitful source of disease. Intemperate, sensual gratification of all sorts is a breeder of sickness and death. The use of alcohol in all its forms is inimical to long life. High living is a physical curse. It widens the drug habit and shortens life, is making havoc of the race. Disease has slain its thousands, but drugs have slain their ten thousands. A large per cent. of mankind are apothecary shops on legs, and their legs are getting weaker every day, and down are tumbling the shops. Tobacco, snuff, cigars, cigarettes, calomel, morphine, cocaine, brandy, whiskey, wine, beer, patent medicine constitute a mighty host that is scattering, tearing and slaying. Some of these things are useful in their place, but they are too often out of their place.

If doctors would treat more and give less medicine, the race would live longer. If they would advise the use of normal remedies and squirt less morphine, their patients would take a new lease of life.

HYMNS THAT ARE SUNG.

BY REV. J. W. MOORE.

I am in Colorado on a short vacation. There came into my possession "Gospel Melodies," used by an evangelist operating in this section. This book I have examined with some care and interest. No truer exponent of the religious life of a people can be found than the songs in which they delight. No truer exponent of a minister's work exists, perhaps, than the songs he makes the people sing.

This evangelist calls himself "Wild Bill." I am sick and tired of evangelists with wild and woolly titles. It degrades the office and work of the ministry. I have known the "Drummer Evangelist," the boy evangelist, the cowboy evangelist, etc., and now we have Wild Bill, and may soon hear of Buffalo Bill. Imagine the Master or the Apostles appealing for a popular hearing under the name of Carpenter Evangelist or Free Fishermen of Galilee Evangelist. If no crowd were around these were glad to talk to one, to use meretricious methods would have been deemed the greatest of sacrilege.

But let us give our attention to some of the songs here used. The writer heads his book, "A Compilation of Gospel Melodies to be used in the Revival Services." Imagine the effect on a congregation of singing the following sacrilegious parody:

"I saw a Methodist preacher

In seedy garments clad,
And holding down the station,
It seemed that he was sad;

His pocket-book was empty,
Provisions nearly gone;

But he shouted as he tramped around,
Deliverance will come."

Chorus.

2. "The summer sun was shining,

The sweat was on his face;
His steps from early morning
Had quickened to a pace;

But fault-finders would grumble
Because he did not run,

So he shouted as he visited
Deliverance will come.

3. "He went to bed at 12 o'clock,

But could not go to sleep;

For his wife had said, 'For breakfast
We'll have but little to eat,'

But when she rose next morning
With a heart so sad and sore,
He found a ham of bacon
And some flour of the door.
Then palms, etc.

4. "The Conference was coming on,
The salary was behind;

His clothing was not fit to wear,
Which weighed upon his mind;

But the day before he started
The ladies 'rigged' him out

In a brand new suit for Conference,
Which made our preacher shout.

O, palms of victory, etc.

5. "The Conference ground out business
Along from day to day,

Till the time came for appointments,
And the Bishop had his 'say.'

Our preacher listened daily

To see where he would fall;

He was made presiding elder,

And that atoned for all."

I find I have left out a stanza of this incomparable hymn. It will not do to lose any brilliant gem from this rich ornament. I can see sinners pierced by this glorious hymn to the heart and crying aloud for mercy, and the omitted verse is good unto the edification of believers. It is as follows:

"I saw him in the evening,

The sun was bending low;

He had that tired feeling,

Which many of you know;

But as he dragged his weary limbs

Into his humble home,

He shouted loud, 'Susannah,

Deliverance will come.'"

When this was first brought out it was enjoyed by many, perhaps with a feeling that even for a joyous occasion it was too light and flippant, but who would have ever dreamed that any one would have embodied it in revival hymns!

Sarcasm has its uses, but to sing it is something entirely new. The following has been clipped by Wild Bill, and after his genius has been expended on it, we have the following:

What can wash away my sins?

Nothing but a deep immersion.

What can make my conscience clean?

Nothing but entire immersion.

O blessed is that flood,

Though often foul with mud;

It makes the conscience good,

Nothing but a whole immersion.

What can speed me on my road?

Nothing but complete immersion.

What will lead me back to God?

Nothing but a deep immersion.

O blessed is that flood,

Though often stained with mud;

It brings the soul to God,

Nothing but complete immersion.

For my pardon this I see,

Nothing but complete immersion;

This all my hope and all my plea,

Nothing but a complete immersion.

O blessed is that flow,

As in the pond I go;

No other plan I know,

Nothing but a deep immersion.

O, how strange this wonderful flow,
That classifies me so;
With the water fowls you know
We must all have a deep immersion.

The following is another of these most admirable revival songs. It is called the "Grumbles Song." I can only give a few stanzas:

"They've got their dogs a growling,
And the cats with their backs up,
too;

And their neighbors all a-howling,
Who can tell what next they'll do?
Their chickens keep on fighting,
And their geese a gabbling, too,
With their mules and cows a-kicking,
Who can tell what next they'll do?

Chorus:

For they grumble on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday,

They grumble on Thursday, too;

They grumble on Friday, Saturday, Sunday,

And they grumble all the week through.

The Gospel that keeps its hold upon the people must be fervent, and yet dignified. No church grows strong that does not commend itself to the thoughtful and conservative men and women of a community. Nor are the thoughtless and light held for any length of time to any organization that does not commend itself to the thoughtful. Our songs and our sermons should commend the respect of the wise even if we only aim to catch the vicious.

O for the evangelism of the Wesleys! They made thought glow with a holy emotion. They aimed at the heart through the intellect; they convinced men with the power of the Holy Spirit working through a logical and dignified argument. Their sermons were not tissues of apocryphal yarns and impossible incidents. They did not have to kill a baby to make a congregation enjoy the luxury of a cry.

The hymns here noted are respectfully referred to our new Hymn Book Committee.

MISSIONARY MOVEMENT OF THE CHURCH.

BY REV. J. H. PRITCHETT.

For reasons too numerous to mention the annual report of the Board of Missions ought to be more generally known to our people. It seems reasonable that every pastor would desire to be in possession of a copy, especially when it can be had for the asking and the postage. It might be worth while for each Annual Conference Board of Missions to make some provision for circulating this publication annually among the pastors. The information it furnishes would be of great value, and ready access to it would render unnecessary many letters of inquiry sent to the general office. The purpose of this paper is to fix the attention of the general reader upon some of the salient features of the last issue, and thus, if possible, create an enlarged demand for its possession.

The usual value of the annual is enhanced in this issue by the introduction of a brief summary of the work of the quadrennium. The following items will interest those who are praying "Thy kingdom come," and who are looking to missionary endeavor as the channel of its coming.

1. Revival and Growth.—"The Spirit of Almighty God has been poured out upon our missionaries and native workers during the past four years in a marvellous manner. Revival after revival has swept over the Church in some of our fields, while in others the awakening of the people to their sin-stricken condition and their need of a Saviour has been such that scores in a single night were constrained to cry out, "What shall I do to be saved?" In three of our missions forward movements have been planned synchronous with those at home, and in all a spirit of hopefulness has prevailed. The growth of our work in the six foreign fields now occupied by us has been steady and gives evidence of being established upon a permanent basis. The increase of membership during the four years has been twenty per cent. The total membership now approximates twelve thousand, not counting probationers. Our present missionary force numbers one hundred and fifty-four, an increase of thirty-nine during the quadrennium—with one hundred and two native helpers. There has been an increase of fifty per cent. in the membership of the Epworth League, and such growth of Sunday schools as to make the present number of pupils nearly equal to the entire membership of the Church."

2. Self-Support.—"The Gospel of Jesus Christ is not only self-supporting, but self-propagating. It carries with it everywhere its own power and its own resources. It is the business of the Church at home, by her mission boards, to send the Gospel in the lands and hearts and lives of her missionaries, to every people; it is the duty of the Church begotten by the Gospel among these people, to take care of its own pastors, and send that same Gospel into the regions beyond. Christ's "The laborer is worthy of his hire"; Paul's "They that preach the Gospel shall live of the Gospel," are precepts as binding in the Christian economy to-day as when they were first uttered. It is to be seriously questioned if missionary money is ever wisely used in supporting native pastors, wholly or in part, among their own people. To those in sympathy with this statement the following extract from the report will be encouraging: "The policy of self-support has been heartily endorsed by our workers, and its principles steadily inculcated, with the result that while eight years ago there were not more than three churches which supported their native pastors, we can now count seventeen which are meeting their own expenses in addition to pastor's salary. In Korea, where a more radical policy has been pursued from the first, twenty-six organized societies meet their own expenses, receiving no foreign money at all. One of the greatest needs of our native Church is a thoroughly qualified ministry. Institutes for preachers and helpers are being held, but these are only temporary expedients. So thoroughly organized is the government

TEACHERS.

When you meet with neglect let it rouse you to exertion instead of mortifying your pride. Set about lessening those defects which expose you to neglect, and improve those excellences which command attention and respect.—Selected.

A person may know a great deal, and yet not be any wiser than are those who say nothing and simply look wise; for knowledge is one thing, and wisdom is another.

Nobody but a fiend will deliberately kick back into a life of sin a soul that is trying to repent and reform.

God will keep upon you the staff or the rod or the iron wheel until you do let go.

Another thing my text teaches us is that Christian sorrow is going to have a sure terminus. My text says "Bread corn is bruised because he will not ever be thrashing it." Blessed be God for that! Pound away, O thresh! Turn on, O wheel! Your work will soon be done. "He will not ever be thrashing it!" Now, the Christian has almost as much use in the organ for the stop tremulant as he has for the trumpet, but after awhile he will put the last dirge into the portfolio forever. So much of us as is wheat will be separated from so much as is chaff, and there will be no more need of pounding. They never cry in heaven because they have nothing to cry about. There are no tears of bereavement, for you shall have your friends all round about you. There are no tears of poverty because each one sits at the King's table and has his own chariot of salvation and free access to the wardrobe where princes get their array. No tears of sickness, for there are no pneumonias in the air and no malarial exhalations from the rolling river of life and no crutch for the lame limb and no splint for the broken arm, but the pulses throbbing with the health of the eternal God in a climate like our June before the blossoms fall or our gorgeous October before the leaves scatter.

The Cure For the Soul's Wounds.

In that land the souls will talk over the different modes of thrashing. Oh, the story of the staff that struck the fitches and the rod that beat the cummin and the iron wheel that went over the corn! Daniel will describe the lions and Jonah leviathan and Paul the elmwood whips with which he was scourged, and Eve will tell how aromatic Eden was the day she left it, and John Rogers will tell of the smart of the flame and Elijah of the fiery team that wheeled him up the sky steeps and Christ of the numbness and the paroxysms and hemorrhages of the awful crucifixion. There they are before the throne of God—on one elevation all those who were struck of the rod, on the highest elevation and amid the highest altitudes of heaven all those who were under the wheel. He will not ever be thrashing it.

Is there not enough salve in this text to make a plaster large enough to heal all your wounds? When a child is hurt, the mother is very apt to say to it, "Now, it will soon feel better." And that is what God says when he embosoms all our trouble in the bush of this great promise, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." You may leave your pocket handkerchief sopping wet with tears on your death pillow, but you will go up absolutely sorrowless. They will wear black, you will wear white; cypresses for them, palms for you. You will say: "Is it possible that I am here? Is this heaven? Am I so pure now I will never do anything wrong? Am I so well that I will never again be sick? Are these companionships so firm that they will never again be broken? Is that Mary? Is that John? Is that my loved one I put away into darkness? Can it be that these are the faces of those who lay so wan and emaciated in the back room that awful night dying? Oh, how radiant they are! Look at them! How radiant they are! Why, how unlike this place is from what I thought when I left the world below. Ministers drew pictures of this land, but how tame compared with the reality! They told me on earth that death was sunset. No, no! It is sunrise! Glorious sunrise! Let the light now

Then the gates of heaven will be opened, and the entranced soul, with the acuteness and power of the celestial vision, will look thousands of miles down upon the bannered procession, a river of shimmering splendor, and will cry out, "Who are they?" And the angel of God, standing close by, will say, "Do you not know who they are?" "No," says the entranced soul, "I cannot guess who they are." The angel will say: "I will tell you, then, who they are. These are they who came out of great tribulation, or thrashing, and had their robes washed and made white in the blood of the lamb."

Would that I could administer some of these drops of celestial anodyne to these nervous and excited souls. If you would take enough of it, it would cure all your pangs. The thought that you are going to get through with this after awhile, all this sorrow and all this trouble. We shall have a great many grand days in heaven, but I will tell you which will be the grandest day of all the million ages of heaven. You say, "Are you sure you can tell me?" Yes, I can. It will be the day we get there. Some say heaven is growing more glorious. I suppose it is, but I do not care much about that. Heaven now is good enough for me.

Triumphant End of Misfortunes.

History has no more gratulatory scene than the breaking in of the English army upon Lucknow, India. A few weeks before a massacre had occurred at Cawnpur, and 260 women and children had been put in a room. Then five professional butchers went in and slew them. Then the bodies of the slain were taken out and thrown into a well. As the English army came into Cawnpur they went into the room, and, oh, what a horrid scene! Sword strokes on the wall near the floor, showing that the poor things had crouched when they died, and they saw also that the floor was ankle deep in blood. The soldiers walked on their heels across it, lest their shoes be submerged of the carnage. And on that floor of blood there were flowing locks of hair and fragments of dresses.

Out in Lucknow they had heard of the massacre, and the women were waiting for the same awful death, waiting amid anguish untold, waiting in pain and starvation, but waiting heroically, when, one day, Havelock and Outram and Norman and Sir David Baird and Peel, the heroes of the English army—huzza for them!—broke in on that horrid scene, and while yet the guns were sounding, and while cheers were issuing from the starving, dying people on the one side and from the travel worn and powder blackened soldiers on the other, right there, in front of the king's palace, there was such a scene of handshaking and embracing and boisterous joy as would utterly confound the pen of the poet and the pencil of the painter. And no wonder, when these emaciated women, who had suffered so heroically for Christ's sake, marched out from their incarceration, one wounded English soldier got up in his fatigue and wounds and leaped against the wall and threw his cap up and shouted, "Three cheers, my boys, for the brave women!" Yes, that was an exciting scene. But a gladder and more triumphant scene will it be when you come up into heaven from the conflicts and incarceration of this world, streaming with the wounds of battle and wan with hunger, and while the hosts of God are cheering their great hosanna you will strike hands of congratulation and eternal deliverance in the presence of the throne.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph-Macon College or Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

DR. STEEL'S LETTER.

Mr. Editor,—I have always counted it one of the most fortunate circumstances of my life that I was born and reared on a farm. I well remember the bright crisp October morning when I left my father's little farm to work my way to school. I was just twenty years old, and after the parting with my parents at the gate the hardest thing I had to do was to drive my dog back. The faithful companion of many a hunt and Sunday stroll in the woods could not understand why we must part. It is ever thus in this life. The last thing I saw was a wreath of blue smoke curling upward from the little home, and I felt a big lump in my throat. I was afoot, and my possessions were packed in a pair of cavalry saddle bags, a shirt (which was not linen) and several pair of socks in one end, my Bible and a few handkerchiefs in the other end, and twenty-five cents in my pocket. At the gate my father had told me good-bye with moist eyes, and said: "God bless you, my son. Fear God and do right always." My mother hugged and kissed me, and cried until I wept too. But down in my heart there was a deep, stern purpose to be something, no matter what it cost. I have always thought it spoke mighty well for the training I received in that modest little home, that three years from the day I left it I was chaplain of the University of Virginia, and preaching—how imperfectly it must have been!—to one of the most cultured audiences in the land. There is no training like that received in a Christian home.

Since that October morning my life has been spent in cities, in large pastoral charges, in the centre of seething masses of men and women, but I have never lost my love for the farm, or given up the secret hope that as I began so I might end my life in the country. So I count it one of the fortunate things that I have returned to the farm in my mature years. In the old Greek mythology we read of Anteus, who was easily handled by his adversaries as long as they could keep him off the ground, but whenever he touched his mother earth his strength was renewed and he was invincible. I already feel the rejuvenating influence of close contact with nature. Tilling the soil is the oldest and noblest occupation of man. The farmer is the real producer, and is the only really independent man in the world. If the trusts monkey with the markets he can turn his wheat into flour, his corn into meal, his hay into beef and mutton, and live like a lord. I have a thousand acres as the base of my operations, and a free hand in the constructive work of my school.

I believe it was the Emperor Diocletian who got tired of office and abdicated the throne of the Roman Empire. He retired to a farm. They sent for him to resume the purple, but he led the messengers to the field, and showed them his cabbage, and bade them tell the Roman people he would not exchange the hoe for a scepter! History says he was crazy, but history is wrong. His head was level. As I sit here on this wide veranda, and listen to the whistle of the bob-white in the field, and watch the clearing in the woods, and feel the cool, refreshing breezes that blow from the gulf, I would not swap places with any Bishop that wears a mitre to-day. My work blends manual and mental labor. And that is as it ought to be. In my father's little home on the farm, where I was reared, the library was the centre of our life. It was a small affair, a few shelves in the corner, with perhaps not over fifty volumes. But they were books! Shakespeare was there, and after the Bible, was my father's favorite study, and Milton, and Bacon, Addison and Macaulay, Dr. Dick's splendid speculations and Rollin's Ancient History, and my favorite of all, Plutarch's Lives. On these masters of learning my youth was nourished. I read Milton's Paradise Lost while watching the gap in the fence where they gathered corn. We sold the crop for one dollar a bushel in the field. All I had to do was to watch the gap and cut a notch on a stitch when a wagon went through. This left me ample leisure to follow Milton in his flights. Now and then a new book reached us, or an old one like Don Quixote, that was new to us. How I used to laugh at Don Quixote and Sancho Pansa. After years of experience in city life I am on the farm again, for which I devoutly thank God. But a truce to personal reminiscences.

I congratulate the Virginia Methodists on Mr. John P. Branch's noble offer to Randolph-Macon College. Of course Virginia Methodism will not lose this opportunity to put our oldest, and in some respects, our foremost college, on its feet. By the way, speaking of Mr. Branch, I was his pastor for one year. He was easily the richest man in Centenary church, and the last to assert his views. He was sometimes absent from official meetings when I suspected that his absence was due to his desire to leave the brethren entirely free to act as they saw best. He was the most modest rich man I ever had in my charge, a true friend to the Church, a staunch supporter of his pastor, and active in all aggressive and benevolent work. This gift to Randolph-Macon is in the line of a constant giving to every good cause, which is a characteristic of this princely man. God bless him, and may his kind never perish from the earth.

I am glad to see my friend, Dr. R. N. Price, writing with his old-time sparkle. The bosses got his scalp, but left him his brains. I am anxious to read his book on the pioneers of Methodism in the Holston country. That is a theme to stir a man, and call forth all that is in him, for they were real heroes. Holston has been a nursery of giants, and it is a little strange that Dr. Hoss is the first to reach the episcopacy. It is the general opinion that he will make full proof of his ministry, and be a Bishop of whom Holston may well be proud.

What does that Florida editor mean by telling all who do not agree with the action of the General Conference in the war claim matter to leave the Church? Does he mean that the General Conference is infallible? Does he mean that we must surrender the right of private judgment to authority? I am one who does not agree with the action of the General Conference in that matter. The minority report expressed my opinion, and I am sorry that it was not adopted. It seemed to me to be a clear, straight-forward statement of the facts in the case, and the course it proposed to be a proper vindication of the honor of the Church. I liked it, too, because it was frank without bitterness, and free from offensive personal reflections. But I do not agree with the doctrine that we ought to leave the Church because the General Conference blundered. I would rather stay in, and be ready to bring in another minority report when they do wrong again. God has often committed the truth to minorities. I think He has done so in this case. Get out—no, never! Stay in, and speak out always and everywhere against wrong, no matter who may perpetrate it. There are a great many things I would like to see changed; but I would rather belong to the minority in the Methodist Church than be a member of any other. The truth is, I am on the old ship to the judgment. The war claim knocked an ugly hole in her hull, and the patch the Dallas Conference put on it does not indicate a high class of workmanship, but I'm on the ship until she goes down, and then, if it happens before I go hence, which is not at all likely, I'll swim the rest of the way. I'm a Methodist from head to heel; I can't be anything else. That Florida editor will have to put up with us. It would be unwise to continue to agitate the war claim, of course, since the deliberate action of the General Conference has settled the question; but as long as there are those in the Church like the Florida editor, who tell us to get out because we don't agree with the majority, we must stay in. The Church needs us to stand up for the right, regardless of majorities.

We are delighted with the climate down here in South Mississippi. It is cool and delightful where I thought it would be sultry with enervating heat. So far we have been perfectly healthy, and are all able to eat our full allowance. We rise at 5 and retire before 9, and sleep like the fabulous sleepers of Ephesus between. If it holds out as it has been this summer, the mountains are not in it at all for restful nights and refreshing days. S. A. STEEL.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

Some eighteen months ago the Rev. A. W. Walker, who, at that time, was stationed at Rogersville, Tenn., a station of Holston Conference, M. E. Church, South, resigned his parchments and left the country. The only reason assigned for the procedure was dissatisfaction with the financial policy of the Church. He unceremoniously left his wife and child. He was a promising young man, of spotless character. In a two years' pastorate on Morristown circuit he was very acceptable, useful and popular. Having been appointed to Rogersville station, he was popular as a pastor, and drew as a preacher. His sermons were short, beautiful and eloquent. Great was the disappointment of his parishioners when he thus suddenly abandoned them. From Oregon he wrote his wife that he was on his way to Klondike; that if he succeeded in making money, he would return; otherwise, otherwise. She went to Sevierville to live at the residence of her father-in-law; and quietly mourned her fate. A few days ago he telegraphed from San Francisco inquiring after his family, and now

EDWARD BLAKE: COLLEGE STUDENT.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "Malcom Kirk," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong,"
"Robert Hardy's Seven Days."

He walked over to Edward simply and held out his hand. Edward felt ashamed of himself, because he knew he had treated Wheaton rudely. He tried to offer a word of apology.

"I don't question your interest in me, Wheaton, even if I don't understand it. And of course I don't forget what I owe you for your kindness during my sickness. I'll always remember that with the greatest gratitude. I hope you will be back in the fall."

"Thank you. I hardly think I shall. I shall not be satisfied, Blake, until I hear that you have given yourself to Christ."

He shook hands seriously and went away, leaving Edward standing by the window, hardly knowing whether to feel vexed at the interview or pleased at Wheaton's interest in him.

It was still raining quite hard, and there was an hour yet before supper. So he stood aimlessly by the window for a few moments more after Wheaton had gone. As he stood there looking out he saw Professor Clark come out of the chapel and start down the steps toward his house, which was three or four blocks farther down the hill. The professor was very absent-minded, and if he brought an umbrella with him he had probably forgotten it or handed it to some one else who had forgotten to return it.

Edward caught up his own umbrella, put on his hat and ran down the stairs and across the way. He overtook the professor just as he went out of the college gates. It had begun to rain harder.

"Take the umbrella, sir, and I will run back to the hall," he said.

"No, no. You go with me, Blake. Thank you. I really own several dozen umbrellas somewhere, but other people are probably carrying them when it rains. Which should you say was worse, owning umbrellas that other people carry or carrying umbrellas that other people own?"

"I should question the political economy of either," replied Edward, laughing. He had come to have a genuine liking for Professor Clark and did not stand at all in awe of him.

"It certainly is worse for me to own so many umbrellas and never have one when it rains. If thoughtful people like you didn't look after me, I expect I should buy even more umbrellas than I do. Thank you very much. Won't you come in a minute, Blake?" he asked when they reached the house, and Edward went in for a moment.

He sat and chatted easily with the professor a few minutes and then rose to go. The professor went out into the hallway with him.

"I expect to leave for the east tomorrow and probably shall not see you again before next fall, Blake. There is one thing I have been wanting to say to you ever since the meetings last winter. You ought to be a Christian man, Blake, and throw all your influence on the side of the best things in life. Perhaps I'm wrong in taking for granted that you are not a Christian. Am I?"

"Take the umbrella, sir!"

"No, sir; I don't call myself a Christian," replied Edward awkwardly.

"Better decide it, then; the sooner the better. God bless you, Blake. Goodby."

"Goodby, sir," and Edward put up his umbrella and marched up the hill through the rain which was now pouring down steadily.

He went up to his room for a few moments before supper, thinking about Professor Clark's last words. They had been very few; but, coming so soon after Wheaton's, they affected him more. He had great respect for Professor Clark and believed in the sincerity of his Christian life. He could not help wondering if he spoke to other students as he had twice spoken to him. It was or had been such an unusual custom for the professors ever to say anything about Christianity to the students in Hope college that Edward may be pardoned if he had some feeling of wonder over the incident in his own experience.

After supper he went over to the ladies' hall to take Freeda to the promenade concert. This was usually held on the campus, but when it rained as it did that night the concert was transferred to the chapel halls and became more like a reception.

Miss Seton had a bad headache and could not go. Edward felt much disappointed at first, for he had been looking forward to the evening and anticipating her company with Freeda.

As he and Freeda went along together toward the chapel Freeda said, when they were in the middle of the walk by the library:

"Ned, do you remember what I said about Ida and—and Willis once?"

"Yes," replied Edward, wondering.

"Of course there was nothing in that. It was the nearest to a lie that I ever came. Only at the time I was trying to get the better of my own feelings. I know that Ida never cared for him. Then she added as they drew near the chapel: "I know your secret, Ned. Is that the reason you understood my trouble so well?"

"Yes," said Edward simply as they went up the steps.

The president was holding an animated though informal reception in the lower hall, and after chatting with the other professors and students Edward came up and shook hands. The crowd was very noisy, laughing and talking very loud, and the president was standing very close to Edward as he said a few simple words of greeting.

"You're going home this summer, I understand, Blake?"

"Yes, sir. I've sold my route and expect to buy another one in the fall. Mother needs me on the farm this summer."

He moved away as another group was coming up, and the president leaned his tall form over and said in a low tone that only Edward could hear:

"My boy, I have been praying for you all this year that you might be Christ's man. I want to see you start right next fall. Better begin tonight. Goodby, and God bless you."

Edward moved on and spent the rest of the evening with the other students. About 10 o'clock he went out with Freeda, and as it had cleared up they strolled around the familiar walk past the library and out upon the middle campus. Freeda had refused several other invitations from the students to go with a group down on the hill walk. She preferred being with Edward on this last day of the term.

They walked quite a long way without speaking, and then Freeda began to talk about their three years in college. Edward was more silent than usual at first, but afterward became quite talkative. He grew confidential and told Freeda something about his feelings for Miss Seton. Freeda could not give him much consolation, although she said she thought Ida admired Edward greatly.

"What was the president saying to you?" Freeda asked as they finally turned back to the library walk and went on toward the ladies' hall.

"He asked me about my summer plans. You know I've sold the route to Rawlins in order to get Barnes' route. It's nearer college and practically as good as the avenue route."

"I mean what he was saying to you as he leaned over and spoke to you all alone? I was just coming up and had to wait a minute."

"He spoke to me about being a Christian. That's the third person who has spoken to me about that today."

Freeda was silent a moment, and then she said quietly: "Let me be the fourth person, Ned. Why aren't you a Christian? I've had a good many anxious thoughts about you this year. Mother would be so glad too. Sometimes I think it's the only thing you need to make you perfect."

"One thing thou lackest," eh?" said Edward, with unaccustomed levity, and then he lapsed into silence, which was unbroken until they reached the ladies' hall.

As he said good night to Freeda he added, "I don't want to disappoint you and mother, Freeda."

"I hope you won't, Ned," she replied gently as she went up the steps.

He walked slowly back to his room and went in and for a few minutes sat down by his window in darkness, thinking over the events of the day. Then he got up and lighted his lamp. As he turned from the table he happened to think of his letter box that he had not looked into since noon.

He went over to the door and found one letter there. He was glad it was from his mother. He sat down at the table at once and opened the letter. His mother did not write to him very often. She was not a college bred woman and had lived a life of hard physical labor, but there was no one in all the world who had more influence over Edward, and he always read her letters with a reverence and respect that he never felt for any other person.

The letter contained a short account of affairs on the farm, then went on to speak of Edward's uncle and aunt and finally referred to Edward's and Freeda's college course:

It has been a joy to me, Edward, to think of you and Freeda receiving an education. In your last letter you spoke of a feeling of regret on your part that I was shoving so hard on the farm, while you and your sister were having such an easy time in college, but you ought to know, dear son, that I count no hardship of any account by the side of the love I have for you. You may be wondering why I am writing this letter now, so near your home coming and at a time while you must be so busy, at commencement time, but two nights ago as I lay awake, toward morning, I had an experience that prompted this letter. I seemed to hear a voice say to me: "Your son Edward is a good boy, truthful, honest, unselfish in most things, free from coarse vices, but he is not a professed disciple of Christ and has never joined a church nor tasted of the communion. One thing he lacks, and that is the greatest of all. He needs to repent and believe in order to be saved."

You know I am not imaginative in the least, and I simply believe that what I heard was the Spirit speaking to me in your behalf. And I could not resist the feeling that I ought to write you and urge you to give yourself to Christ. Why should you stand outside the kingdom, my son, looking on at the struggle of the ages and possibly criticizing it because you feel as good as any one? Give your heart to him who gave us all. Enter the kingdom like a little child, Edward. You have a great work to do in God's world, if he shall spare you. You wrote in your last letter that you might decide to give up being a doctor and become a public speaker and write for a living. It makes little difference to me what particular thing you do in the world, but it makes all the difference in the world whether you are a Christian or not. That is the main thing, after all. Seek first the kingdom, my son. If you succeed in all worldly affairs and know all knowledge and do not know and love God supremely, it will not profit you anything.

You do not doubt my love for you, do you? Why should you doubt the love of God for you? He gave his own Son for your salvation. Why should you be careless in the face of that great atonement? He died for you, Ned, the same as for me. Oh, my dear son, your mother is growing older and more feeble every year! I shall soon pass over to the other side. But it will be the best day of my whole life when you tell me that you have decided to give your heart to God and believe in his redemption through Christ. May the Holy Spirit as he pleads with you be allowed to enter your heart and will and lead you by his almighty power to the feet of Jesus. Your loving Mother.

Edward finished the letter and let it lie open on the table. First Wheaton and then Professor Clark, then the president and Freeda, and now this culminating letter from his mother. And all these appeals on one subject, as if all the persons making them had been consulting together.

Why was he not a Christian? He believed in everything that was good and true and pure. Why did he not believe in Christ? The question drove all the other memories out of his mind. He had thought a good deal during the first part of the day about Willis, wondering what his future would be. He had thought about Miss Seton and wondered if he would ever gather up courage enough to tell her what he felt. He had thought of his own future and had more than once speculated on the ambition he was beginning to have for authorship and the public platform. But now, near the close of the day, near the midnight hour, alone in his room, with that sacred appeal of his mother's lying before him, he could not shut out this one thought. Why was he not a Christian man? Who was keeping him back? Was this question of the age, "What think ye of the Christ?" going to face him continually? What difference would it make with his future? All the difference in the world he himself knew was

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

he writes them asking them to join him 'n California, where he aims to make his home. His success or failure in Klondike I know not.

The real cause of this wild-goose chase is yet unknown. It is generally attributed to mental aberration. I think, however, that there has been method in his madness; that he became disgusted with the occupation of the ministry, and that he had not the courage to remain and face the criticism to which he was likely to be subjected upon resigning it.

He may not have made a mistake in quitting the ministry, but he certainly made a mistake in his manner of quitting it. Walker is a bright, honest man, vastly above the average in talent and moral character.

The battles of temperance have not been fought in vain. Prohibition or local option exists in 70 out of the 96 counties of Tennessee. We are slowly but surely approximating Christian civilization. What are you doing in Virginia?

I copy the following paragraph from the Morristown Gazette of this week:

"The board of directors of the Greeneville Orphanage met in called session at the Orphanage Home last Friday and transacted some important business. Arrangements were perfected for the completion of the baby cottage now under construction, and for the purchase of additional grounds for orphanage purposes. The donation of money for the support of the institution this year has been satisfactory. Fifty-five children are now inmates of the home. The next meeting of the board will occur the third Tuesday in November. Those present were: Mrs. J. E. Chapman, of Knoxville, president; Mrs. Warren L. Rohr, of Chattanooga; Mrs. E. C. Reeves, of Johnson City; Mrs. A. A. Gibson, of Athens; Mrs. E. E. Wiley, Mrs. W. C. Naff, and Miss Mary Trim, of Greeneville; Rev. L. M. Cartright, of this city, and Rev. M. D. Mitchell, of Jonesboro."

The corner-stone of the new Methodist church in Morristown was laid with appropriate ceremonies Thursday, 17th instant. It will be a large, fine building. The enterprise was rendered possible by the liberality of Mr. J. E. Robertson, who died a few years since, some four miles west of town, and left a verbal will requesting his wife to give $2,000 for this purpose. This she has done, with intimations that there is more to follow. This is the more noble, as she could have kept the money, and she is not a Methodist. Nobility has not yet deserted our planet.

Anent the question of rural delivery, I send you the following clipping from "Success" for July:

"The importance of this new branch of the postal service is best indicated by the rate at which it has grown. We began in 1896 with an appropriation of $40,000. For three years previous to that Congress had made each year an appropriation; but, with declining revenues and increasing deficits, the Postoffice Department had been loath to take any step that might involve additional burdens. As the matter of establishing rural routes had been left to the discretion of the Postmaster General, the appropriations were unused. In 1895 Congress, in making the appropriation, embodied a mandatory clause; and, with much misgiving, Postmaster General William L. Wilson, in October, 1896, established the first route, which was out of Charleston, W. Va. On July 1, 1897, only forty-three routes were in operation. To-day there are more than 6,000 routes, serving 690,000 farmhouses, in which live more than 4,000,000 people. It requires some experience of life in the country, under old conditions, to realize what it means to the people to be suddenly brought from an isolated position into daily touch with the outer world, the news and events of which had only sifted to them at haphazard. The territory covered by the rural routes is equal about 120,000 square miles, equalling in area the New England States, New York and New Jersey. Eventually they will cover 1,000,000 square miles or more. The appropriation for the maintenance of the service advanced from $40,000, in 1897, to $50,000 in 1898, $150,000 in 1899, $450,000 in 1900, and $1,750,000 in 1901. For the fiscal year ending June, 1902, we have an appropriation of $3,500,000. Of this sum $3,000,000 will be required to maintain the more than 6,000 routes, the cost of each being $500. Nearly $500,000 will be used in the expense of administration. For the year 1903 the department has requested an appropriation of $6,250,000, and there is not the slightest doubt that it will get it, for the members of Congress are agreed that no other single item in our annual expenditure brings anything like a proportionate return to the people."

FROM RICHMOND.

Richmond, Va., July 24, 1902.

Dear Bro. Cannon,—I would like this line to go in your paper from our summer work. Two years ago we attempted some tent work, and in a very limited way were successful in removing some prejudice and winning souls. Last year Bro. James E. Cook, a Presbyterian preacher near our mission, took hold with us, and there was a great work among the people about our mission and around his church. This year we have a new tent, much larger than the old one, and for three weeks a work of grace has been going on. Hundreds of the working people attend the services, and often more than fill the tent. We have a bass drum, cymbals, small organ, cornet, etc., with which we hold preliminary services every night in the slums to toll the lost and abandoned to the meetings. On each Sunday afternoon we give the service to the men's meeting of the Railroad Y. M. C. A., Mr. Thomas, the secretary, having come in with us this season to bear part of the burden and to reap some of the blessed results. I enclose this clipping to show the wonders of His grace. We beg the prayers of your readers:

"To the delight of the workers of the Railroad Department, Young Men's Christian Association, the large tent at the corner of Twentieth and Grace streets was filled with men Sunday afternoon to hear the message by Rev.

George H. Wiley. From the first hymn to the benediction there was decided manifestation of the presence and leadership of the Holy Spirit. One of the remarkable instances was the testimony of a man who had been saved on the very spot where he stood in the tent services one year ago.

"There was no more hopeless drunkard and no more miserable hovel than his home. As he testified of God's marvellous saving and keeping power; how God had given him a home in the truest sense of the word in place of the hovel, and had given him purity, peace and plenty in the place of poverty, pain and purgatory, the entire company of men were greatly moved at the mighty work that had been wrought in this man's life, and there were at least twenty requests for prayer. It was by far the best meeting ever held by the Railroad Department. The large male chorus and orchestra of the department demonstrated their efficiency in leading the music, and most of the audience remained during the social half hour that followed and enjoyed the music furnished by them.

"Great preparations are being made for the meeting next Sunday, at which time the Rev. Ashby Jones will speak."

The above party has been a consistent member of Trinity church since his conversion.

Yours in Christ,

GEORGE H. WILEY.

EXTRACTS FROM A LETTER OF MISS N. B. GAINES, PRINCIPAL HIROSHIMA GIRLS' SCHOOL.

Hiroshima, Japan, April 29, 1902.

Dear Mr. Wilson,—Your letter came some days ago. . . . Well, another year has gone by, still our new building is not in sight. We have cut down in the kindergarten, and have refused pupils in almost every department. I believe even our present number of pupils would double in two years' time or sooner if we could take all that come to us. We took in something over seventy new pupils this spring, not counting the primary, which is now above eighty. We have over fifty boarders, and have refused many because we could not put them in anywhere. The sheds leading from the chapel to the schoolrooms are all tumbling down, no protection against rain; the condition of the fence, you know. I must confess that I begin to feel discouraged.

I wish you could have been here last week. Mr. Kawabi (an evangelist) was holding some meetings in our church, and as some of the girls seemed interested, I asked him to hold a service in the school chapel especially for non-Christian girls, explaining that many of these were new girls, and nearly all from heathen families.

After school he spoke an hour on repentance, our duty toward God, and God's love toward man. He spoke very simply and clearly. The girls seemed spell-bound, though he was not an eloquent speaker. When he had finished talking, he asked all that truly repented and wanted to lead a new life to stand up. As if it had been one person the entire school stood. I judge there were over two hundred present. After much urging on his part that only those who had really made up their minds to go on whether they met percutions or had consent of parents, and after picturing to them what it meant if they once began and then turned back, he persuaded about half to do so. Then after another hour's talk he told all those who wanted to talk with him still more to meet him in another room. Some forty spent another hour with him. He remained over another day to talk with those he did not see the day before. Till time for his train he had those about him asking questions. I never saw in any meeting a more manifest working of the Spirit. I sifted the matter down by getting the girls who intended to go on seeking hand in their names. There are something over eighty who expressed a desire to know the truth. Some of them have been in school quite a time, and are perhaps nearly ready for baptism; some are new girls, and some have heard before from others. Look at any way we may, it certainly was a most wonderful meeting. We have divided the probationers into classes of ten and appointed leaders. The classes will meet once a week for special Bible study, prayer and planning of work. I hope that we may be able to keep them at some active work, that is necessary for growth. Our active pastor, Mr. Hori, is to have general superintendence and meet with the classes in turn. I was sorry the meetings could not continue, for I am sure the interest will spread beyond the school into the families. . . . Japanese people have in them the possibilities of a new spiritual life. They are ready and waiting for it, but those who are responsible for bringing the Gospel are not yet filled with needed power. Pray for the work in the field, and also that others may be sent for the harvest gathering.

I know you will be glad to get back into the thick of the work,

Yours,

NANNIE B. GAINES.

PETERSBURG LETTER.

When malaria has a good hold upon the physical system it takes the state out of a fellow. To take up duty when the liver is out of fix requires strong will power. It won't do to allow one's feelings when malarial germs are racing through the body, for it is so easy then to sit still or lie down and sleep. Heat, sickness and malaria subjects that have forced themselves of late upon the brain. I have nothing for the bettering of science to say about such subjects. Sakes alive! How hot some of these July days have been and how often thoughts of rural scenes, cool country water, pure and sparkling, and other things have entered mind. Reading and writing and monitoring when the mercury registers 98 or 100 degrees is not inviting a pastime.

Of late years certainly I have wasted much time in reading novels. I don't read them just to kill time, I want to get truth, thought and vision from reading them. Of modern novels which have brought fame to their authors, I have read "Richard Carvel," my judgment a powerful work of fiction; "Alice of Old Vincennes," a dramatic and interesting book, and reading "The Battle Ground." The in the ointment with these works the abundance of profanity that the authors make their characters utter. The profane expressions with which these works abound may be true to man nature, as it is delineated in the historical past in such works, but for me, I am tired of them, and thoroughly disgusted with them. How reputable writers can write these cuss words and reputable publishers print them in a professedly Christian country in books that are pretentious, and which expect to circulate in best literary circles, is inexplicable to me. I see that this profanity-loving disposition so freely indulged is having a bad effect upon me. These miserable phrases have a tendency to pollute the mind and heart.

Life is a monster of so frightful a mien, that to be hated, needs but to be seen; when too oft, familiar with its face, we see the monster, then pity, then embrace."

What made you treat my little unpretentious pamphlet, "Methodism in Petersburg," recently published, a copy of which I sent you, with a coldness and indifference. I had hoped to get a "puff" from you to help me get rid of copies of the same. What is fame, any way? To be unnoticed, neglected or ignored is to meet a sad fate, isn't it? In Church circles at present in this city there is nothing of fresh interest to write about. Hot weather, of course, affects the attendance upon religious services in all other cities. The preaching meeting is in a suspended state for the heated term. A large number of excursions to the seashore principally are taken place. Street car traffic is intensive hereabouts. The street car traffic between here and Richmond I understand is very good. This is desired to be a popular mode of travel to the capital city. If the scheme now being worked here of getting a National Battle Park not far from Petersburg materializes the street car travel will be extended. Petersburg's battles during the late war were many and of historic interest.

Our last catalogue of the Blackstone Normal Institute, a copy of which came a few days ago, is a gem. Good sense, good taste and good judgment were in the front when your catalogue plans were crystallized. I rejoice in the success of our school. Farewell for the present.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Much interest is manifested in religious circles in Washington in the cables cabled to the effect that the Chinese tariff commissioners have drawn up six articles which they propose to embody in the new commercial treaty. These articles, it is cabled, are as follows: The first provides that bad characters shall be admitted to the church; the second, that the missionaries shall have no right to interfere in the matter of law suits, which must be settled entirely by the proper officials; the third, that missionaries shall be empowered to report cases of persecution; the fourth, that converts to the Christian religion shall be exempt from paying tribute for festivities in honor of idols, but shall be liable to all other taxes; the fifth, that missionaries shall be especially prohibited from concealing bad characters from the representatives of the law; and the sixth, that all property owned by a Christian Church must be held in the name of that Church, and that only property so held shall, when damaged or destroyed, be regarded as a basis for a claim for damages. In case of property owned by a Church, the title to which rests with a private individual, the government cannot be appealed to for indemnity. Those persons who are informed in regard to affairs in China say that while there is nothing on the face of these provisions that appears to be repugnant to justice to Christian Churches and missionary societies, they fear that under Chinese administration they may be perverted to be so. The question is also raised as to whether, under the above provisions, the missionary societies may acquire title to property which will be protected from depredations under penalty of loss to the government or whether all titles must be vested in the Church people. This question will probably be taken up with Secretary Hay or one of his assistants in the near future, as it is regarded as essential that the missionary societies shall have the right to own land and buildings under the same conditions as would prevail in the case of church ownership.

Dr. Craft informs your correspondent that the Treasury Department has not yet secured from the St. Louis Fair managers a pledge which, in the opinion of the attorney for the Reform Bureau, will empower the department to insist upon Sunday closing of the Fair throughout the period of its existence, and he urges every one interested in the proper respect for Sunday to lend the weight of his influence to effect the perfection of such a contract. Influence should be brought to bear both on the Secretary of the Treasury and on the Fair officials.

The International Reform Bureau is still pressing its campaign for the abolition of the sale of liquor at the Capitol, and, while the work is progressing quietly, Dr. Craft hopes that no one will miss an opportunity to further the work of the Bureau in this direction. To accomplish this most desirable end strong pressure must be brought to bear on the members of the Senate, for it is the upper chamber of Congress which is most opposed to the reform.

Private advices have brought word to Washington of an assault made upon Bishop Moore, his daughter and Messrs. Appenzeller and Swearer while travelling in Korea. While at first it was feared that the assault might be the first blow in a general demonstration against the Christian missionaries, subsequent letters state that such was not the case, and that, apparently, there was no race prejudice in the attack. The Japanese Minister at Seoul has taken immediate steps to punish the miscreants, and has expressed the greatest regret to the Bishop over the unfortunate occurrence. His treatment of the Bishop and his party, who were on their way to Soowon, where they were to dedicate a new church, has been kind and polite.

The Epworth League Union of Washington and the vicinity held a most successful quarterly meeting last Friday at Rockville, Md., a short distance from Washington. A number of trolley cars were chartered in Washington, and the trip into the country and the return in the cool of the evening were pleasant features of the affair. An address by Mr. Lucien Smith, entitled "Cottage Prayer and Outdoor Meetings," was most favorably received and was followed by an interesting discussion. As outlined in these letters some time ago, the outdoor meetings in and about Washington have proved a great success, and have resulted in renewing interest in church and religious work at a season when the hot weather has heretofore had a depressing effect on such undertakings.

The drop of $105,000,000 in exports and increase of $79,000,000 in imports is not looked upon by the chief of the Bureau of Statistics as a cause for anxiety regarding the future of our foreign commerce.

"It was perfectly apparent when the result of the drought of 1901 became known," said Mr. Austin, "that our exports in 1902 must fall off, and the only surprise to me is that the loss was not greater. The corn crop, as is well known, is the chief reliance of our farmers for preparing for market the live stock, of which we now export over $200,000,000 worth annually in the form of provisions and live animals. In addition to this, we have been exporting about $100,000,000 worth of the surplus corn and oats left over after feeding the live stock of the country. The great reduction of the corn crop by the drought, of course, reduced to almost nothing the surplus corn that could be spared, and also caused the use at home of a much larger share of the oats, and so reduced the available surplus of that class of farm products. The result is that the exportation of corn fell from 177,000,000 bushels in the fiscal year 1901 to 27,000,000 bushels in the fiscal year just ended, and that of oats from 37,000,000 bushels to 9,000,000. The drop in the value of corn and corn meal and oats and oatmeal exported is over $76,000,000. Fortunately, the farmers learned quickly to economize their depleted corn supply, and to substitute other materials for it, and therefore the reduction in exportation of provisions and live animals is only about $6,000,000."

"It also became apparent in the early part of the year," continued Mr. Austin, "that the value of cotton exports could not be expected to reach the phenomenally high figure of the preceding year. The export prices of cotton in 1901 were the highest that had been realized for many years, and as result the total value of cotton exported in the fiscal year 1901 was greater than in any previous year in the history of our commerce, amounting to over $300,000,000, and forming more than one-fifth of the total value of the exports of that greatest year in our export trade. The average price of cotton exported in the fiscal year 1901 was nearly nine and one-half cents per pound, while the average export price in the fiscal year 1902 was eight and one-fourth cents per pound. So it is not surprising that the value of the cotton exported in 1902 fell $24,000,000 below that of 1901, although the quantity exported was actually 160,000,000 pounds greater in 1902 than in 1901."

"The third item of reduction in exports," continued Mr. Austin, "is in manufactures of iron and steel. The figures for the full fiscal year have not yet been received, but, judging from those of the eleven months which have been received, it seems probable that the reduction in iron and steel exports will be about $20,000,000. This reduction is due in part, it is believed, to the fact that German manufacturers found it necessary, by reason of the depressed conditions in that country last year, to unload their surplus stocks of iron and steel manufactures at greatly reduced prices, thus temporarily unsettling and reducing prices in foreign countries generally, while, on the other hand, the home demand in the United States for iron and steel manufactures has been larger than ever before, and in many cases beyond the capacity of our manufacturers to supply. The result of these two conditions was a reduction of about $20,000,000 in the exports and an increase of nearly $10,000,000 in the imports of iron and steel, and the total importations of iron and steel for the fiscal year just ended will probably exceed those of any other year since 1893."

"The increase in importations," said Mr. Austin, in conclusion, "is especially gratifying, in view of the fact that it shows a healthy condition in our manufacturing industries. While the figures of the year are not sufficiently completed to permit an analysis for the full twelve months, the fact that the analysis for the eleven months ending with May showed an increase of over $65,000,000 in manufacturers' materials is a sufficient explanation of the total increase of 79,000,000 of imports in the full year. Manufacturers' materials imported during the year will amount to about $420,000,000 in value, or 46 per cent. of the total importations. This is not only the largest importation of manufacturers' materials ever known, but they form a larger percentage than ever before of the grand total of imports, notwithstanding the fact that the total imports are the largest in the history of our commerce. ***

No one who has watched the steps of progress in educational methods for the past decade will question that along the lines of practical and industrial training are the signs of greatest progress, or refuse to believe that this will make most efficient and useful the average citizen of the coming century. —National Printer's Journal.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 10.

Text of the Lesson, Lev. x, 1-11. Memory Verses, 8-11—Golden Text, 1 Thess. v, 6—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

1 And Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, *** offered strange fire before the Lord, which He commanded them not.

The opening chapters of this book tell of the different offerings, all typifying our Lord's one great offering, and of the consecration of the priests, the Lord accepting the atonement of feelings by fire supernatural (Lev. ix, 7, 22-24). Now, right at the beginning of the ministry of the priesthood we see this sad failure on the part of two of Aaron's sons. "Every man at his best state (apart from God) is altogether vanity" (Ps. xxxix, 5).

2 And there went out fire from the Lord and devoured them, and they died before the Lord.

Thus at the very beginning of the priesthood Jehovah made it very plain that He would have a whole hearted service or none. So also at the beginning of the church story in the case of Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v, 5, 10) He showed unmistakably how He hates deceit and half heartedness.

3 Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the Lord spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them (that come nigh Me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace.

That they were to be a holy people unto the Lord is the oft repeated requirement from Ex. xix, 6, 22, onward. Jesus said concerning Himself and His disciples in His great intercessory prayer, "For their sakes I sanctify Myself that they also might be sanctified through the truth" (John xvii, 19).

4, 5. Come near; carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp.

Thus Moses commanded the sons of Uzziel, the uncle of Aaron, and thus they did. But what about Nadab and Abihu? We never bury people, strictly speaking; we bury the bodies in which they sojourned for a season. It has been a great comfort to me to think of this since ever I grasped the fact that if my body ever has a burial I will not be there that day, but absent from the body and present with the Lord; with Christ, which is very far better (II Cor. v, 8; Phil. i, 21, 23).

6. Uncover not your heads; neither rend your clothes.

Thus Moses commanded Aaron and his two surviving sons. Mourning has oftentimes a large element of rebellion in it. This we must not tolerate, lest we find fault with God. We must abide on the Lord's side even though His chastening falls on those who are very dear to us. If we love our loved ones more than we love God, we are not worthy of Him.

7. Ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation lest ye die, for the anointing oil of the Lord is upon you.

Because they were the anointed priests of the Lord, chosen to minister unto Him, they were to keep themselves wholly for Him. The Spirit says through Peter that believers are a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ—a royal priesthood to show forth His praises (I Pet. ii, 5, 9). In Eph. iv, 30, we read that we are not to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, by whom we are sealed unto the day of redemption.

8, 9. The Lord spake unto Aaron, saying, nor thy sons with thee when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation lest ye die.

The Lord had been speaking to Aaron through Moses, but Aaron by his subdission and obedience has come into a place where the Lord Himself can speak to him. Some think because of this prohibition that this was partly at least the trouble with Nadab and Abihu, but in Num. vi, 1-3, we learn that it was part of the obligation of every Nazarite or specially separated person. That which tends to muddle a man's brain unfits him to worship God, and as His people redeemed with precious blood we are to live only and wholly "unto Him who loveth us" and "do all to the glory of God" (Rev. i, 5, R. V.; I Cor. x, 31). A good word for the unsaved intemperate is, "Nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards shall inherit the kingdom of God" (I Cor. vi, 10), and for the saved intemperate, "It is good neither to eat flesh nor to drink wine nor anything where by thy brother stumbleth or is offended or is made weak" (Rom. xiv, 21).

10. And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy and between unclean and clean.

They were, as a whole nation, severed from other people, that they might be the Lord's (Ex. xix, 5, 6; xxxiii, 16; Lev. xx, 26). In Egypt and the night they left Egypt the Lord put a difference between His people and those who were not His (Ex. viii, 23; xi, 7). In Gen. i, 3, 4, He divided the light from the darkness, and in II Cor. vi, 14-18, the division and separation are very strongly emphasized. By nature and by practice all are sinners, and there is no difference as to the fact, though there is as to the degree of guilt (Rom. iii, 22, 23).

11. And that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the Lord hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses.

They were first to do, then to teach, and this is always the order (Mark vi, 30; Acts i, 1). Unless we ourselves are holy in our lives and separate from the world lying in the wicked one our advice to others will not have much weight, for we will then be like the Pharisees who say, but do not (Matt. xxiii, 3); but if, like Levi, we walk with God in peace and equity we shall turn many away from iniquity (Mal. ii, 6).

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 10, "A Suggestion In Addition." Text, II Pet. i, 4-9.

What we are is shown by what we would like to have. Not what one has, but what he wants, is the best test of his nature. But we are not very often able to get all the things we wish. Many seek to be rich; only a few succeed. Many want to be happy; multitudes only succeed in being miserable. There are many things which most folks can never have.

But the most desirable things in all the world are freely and fully open to every one who truly wishes for them. Peter says that "all things that pertain to life and godliness" are given to us. This means more than existing, more than getting health and wealth and the things of the world. Jesus asked, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Our goal is the gaining the true self, the attaining unto likeness to the divine nature, the participation in the power and perfections of God, and so sharing in His glory and blessedness. This chance to get the highest and best which is possible does not come to us from our common nature, but is a gift of God. It is a special privilege offered us by His glory and power. It comes through a peculiar knowing of God which is entirely different from the ordinary knowledge of God. This is in addition to all the ordinary mercies and benefits which are given to men in the common course of life.

The divine power and glory have given to us the fulfillment of what was promised to the fathers and only dimly understood by them. The promise of a personal Saviour has been kept. This was the first promise made the sinful race and carries with it all possibilities of goodness. This Son of God has been given us as our Redeemer. With Him was also promised the Holy Spirit to be our guide and helper. The prophecy of His coming brightened all the Old Testament ages. Jesus repeated the assurance which the Baptist had with great energy given that the spirit of power and purity should be given the seekers after God. This promise has been fulfilled, and we have received the gift more precious than all others which human nature can have.

Life takes on new meaning and worth is added to it beyond all calculation as the Saviour and Holy Spirit give power and beauty to the soul to become like the divine Father, escaping from the lust and corruption which are in the world.

The end is not here. The power and glory are wholly a gift of God, but our acceptance and participation are not passive, but full of action and self exercise. The beginning is in our faith in God. The final end is in love. Between these lie all the active virtues of Christian being and doing. These qualities of our nature aid each other and hand in hand make a glorious company of helpers and defenders of the soul life.

God gives the Saviour and Holy Spirit. We are to contribute diligence. In our faith we are to add virtue, which is the old idea of fortitude, firmness, manliness—not effeminacy nor ease, but vigor and strenuousness of life. In this vigorous life we are to add knowledge or discretion, a sobriety and discernment of right. Then we acquire self control and hold appetites to their proper place. This leads to patience, a temper of soul which does not fret nor hurry, but bides its time. All this leads to a godlikeness and oneness with God which produce care for fellow men and are crowned with genuine love.

The Value of Sentiment.

Sentiment is more potent among men than is logic or morals, and it is well that this is so, for sentiment really gives practical power to both logic and morals in the realm of man's highest and profoundest personality. What is anything worth living for but a sentiment? Love of one's flag, that makes so many ready to die for it, is but a sentiment. Honoring the memory of a dead dear one—of one's child or wife or mother—is only a sentiment. Observing sacredly Christmas or Good Friday or Easter is a sentiment. Doing what is demanded by hard logic or cold duty is comparatively a lifeless act unless the life and warmth of sentiment accompany it. Logic and duty are dependent for most of their practical efficiency on sentiment. That fact should be borne in mind by whoever would lead or inspire his fellows in the right way.—Sunday School Times.

Character Ripening.

Not all Christian people bear loss, sorrow and sickness in a victorious way. Too often do we see men yielding to trouble, not growing more beautiful in soul, but losing their spiritual beauty in life's trials. This is not the way it should be, however. Our character should ripen in life's weather, whatever the weather may be. "Tribulation worketh patience." The object of life is to learn to live. We are at school here and shall always be at school until we are dismissed from earth's classes to be promoted into heaven. It is a pity if we do not learn our lessons. It is a pity if we grow no gentler, no kinder, no more thoughtful, no more unselfish, no more unworldly as the years pass over us.—Christian Intelligencer.

Love.

Love is a day.

With no thought of morrow.

Love is a joy.

With no thought of sorrow.

Love is to give.

With no thought of receiving.

Love is to trust.

Without quite believing.

—Charles Henry Webb in "With Lead and Line."

FORCE OF EXAMPLE.

MANY AN ABLE MAN HAS STARTED WEAKER MEN ON WHISKY PATH.

If You Have Strength Enough Not to Drink Too Much, Prove It by Not Drinking at All, Says the New York Journal in an Editorial.

We are well aware that among those who drink a great many lead lives of self control, says an editorial in the New York Journal. Drink does not conquer them. It gives excitement, without serious damage. It may even make life really more agreeable.

There are thousands of self controlled drinkers—self controlled for the present at least. Each of these is apt to look upon himself as proof of the fact that drinking is not necessarily harmful. But each of these, especially if a conspicuously successful man, is one of the most dangerous men in the community.

Weak young men follow the example of those whom they admire. If the successful business man drinks and controls himself, his weak clerk follows his example and does not control himself. Many a poor creature has gone to jail, indignantly prosecuted by his employer, by the very man from whom he learned his bad habits.

We write today to urge upon successful men, upon all temperate drinkers this fact: You can of course do as you please with yourself, but don't put temptation in the way of others.

If you have a son of fifteen, you would be furious at any man who should tell him that a little whisky would not hurt him. You would call the giver of such advice a villain. But many a grown man, weak in character lacks the moral strength of a young boy.

Remember that what you can stand others cannot stand. When drink is discussed, think of the harm it does. Think of the women and children made miserable by it, think of the pitiless slavery that it inflicts on mankind. Never say a good word for whisky or for any of its fellow troubles of civilization.

You are a responsible part of the human race. You have no right to be in different to the effect of your example on others. The greater your own strength of character the more followers you will have. Lead them on the path that will keep them free from harm. You are powerful and fearless. Do not on that account encourage them weak to pick a quarrel with an enemy that will vanquish them.

Many a poor devil started on that whisky road through no fault of his own. But that will not excuse you if you take that path.

Have you strength of mind enough not to drink too much whisky? Good. But prove it by drinking none at all. And remember this about the path that starts out so pleasantly and ends among broken bottles at the door of failure:

You never meet a good bartender on that path. You never meet a successful whisky manufacturer on that path. The saloon owner wants, demands and gets sober men as bartenders. The whisky manufacturer will have only sober men for his agents and managers.

Young men, keep off that path. It leads only one way. You may walk just so far, stop and come back. But why start at all?

Human success is becoming more and more a matter of clear thought. Keep your clearness of thought. Keep your force, your vital energy to build up success.

Pity the man who drinks—he needs pity—but set him a good example. Remember this:

A drink of whisky never did for a man anything that sleep will not do. And whisky, while it seems to rest you, hurts you. Sleep builds up your brain.

Look at the man rolling out of a gin-mill in the morning. Compare him with the fresh man going to his work after natural sleep. Compare their eyes, their gait, their speech, their mental alertness.

The difference between two such men is the difference between sleep and whisky. Take sleep for your stimulant. Take good thoughts and the companionship of good, sober men and women for your excitement. Leave whisky to others.

WOMEN AND THE SALOON.

They Are Best Judges of the Rum Trade, Says G. C. Lorimer.

There can be no excuse, in the name of our liberty, for fostering the saloon, which has become a moral peril to thousands, says George C. Lorimer in the New York Journal.

Were the women and children, who are most seriously affected by this "institution," called on to express an opinion of its character and could they do so undeterred by threats of brutalized men, the overwhelming majority would denounce it as the curse of their homes and as the ruin of their hopes. But were we to ground an argument in their complaints we would doubtless be reminded that "we take our temperance views from women."

Well, so be it. Who, I ask, has a better right to decided views on the subject if the women have not? It is their happiness that is destroyed by the saloon. It is their fireside that is blighted, their husbands that are debased, their sons that are slain, and I insist that they have a paramount right to speak—a right made so sacred by sorrow and suffering that it even transcends the right of the entire bench of bishops.

Temperate and Popular.

The wife of Hon. Clifford Sifton is one of the most popular entertainers at Ottawa, Canada, yet she uses no liquors at her receptions.

Glorification is a new condition with God. "All things are become new."

The boy is now born who will see the utter overthrow of the saloon.—The Keystone Citizen.

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

The richest latent capacities of our State are in the minds and hearts and hands of the little children of our plain people. If we can get our public enthusiasm to work in behalf of investments which will touch this noblest element in our "raw material," then, indeed, we shall have reason to find our pride not only in our past, but in our future.—Edgar Gardner Murphy.

Religious News.

Evangelist James E. Schoolfield, who has been ill, is improving.—Times.

Rev. W. R. Proctor will spend his vacation at Chautauqua, N. Y.—Pilot.

Dr. W. G. Starr, late president of Randolph-Macon College, is spending some time in Massachusetts, with his daughter.—Dispatch.

Rev. George Wesley Jones left yesterday for Princess Anne county to assist the Rev. W. H. Riddick in a revival meeting at one of the Methodist churches on his circuit.—Pilot.

Trinity church has granted its pastor, Rev. George Wesley Jones, a month's leave of absence, which he will spend in visiting relatives and friends on the Eastern Shore and in King and Queen county.—Pilot.

The protracted meeting will begin the third Sunday in August at the tabernacle, and will continue for ten days. The meeting will be carried on by the pastor and N. B. Foushee assisted by Rev. Dr. Bradford, the evangelist.—Virginian-Pilot.

Rev. Ernest L. Peerman, a student of Vanderbilt University, who is visiting relatives in Windsor, Va., preached at the Main Street Methodist church last Sunday, morning and night, and made a very favorable impression. He gives promise of rare pulpit power.—Suffolk Herald.

Professor R. E. Blackwell, president of Randolph-Macon College, delivered a fine address on Christian education at Cumberland Street Methodist church Sunday morning. He gave some valuable information in regard to the wonderful advance this institution has made within the past decade.—Pilot.

Rev. W. R. Proctor, of McKendree church, leaves this week on his month's vacation granted him by his congregation. There will be no Sunday night services at his church during his absence. Rev. W. P. Jordan, of Park Place, will preach next Sunday morning, and the following Sunday morning Rev. C. W. Cain, of Portsmouth, will occupy the pulpit.—Virginian-Pilot.

Nashville, Tennessee, July 25th.—At a meeting of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, yesterday, it was decided to endeavor to raise a $5,000,000 endowment fund, the interest of which is to go to superannuated ministers and widows and orphans. An agent to canvass for this fund is to be appointed at a meeting to be held here August 27th.

The Revs. J. J. Tagert, L. J. Parks and Jordan Stokes were appointed as the executive committee of the board.—The News.

Louisa is now a dry town. Judge Morton, of Orange, sent a letter to Judge F. W. Sims, of Louisa, this evening stating that after due consideration and a careful examination of authorities, he was constrained to hold that the local option election held in this district on June 18th last had the effect of prohibiting the further sale of whiskey, wine, etc., by any one, even with a license previously granted. He accordingly overruled the motion of the defendant to quash the warrant and revoked his license. The sentiment for local option here is so strong that it will not be well for any persons to attempt to run "blind tigers."—Special to Dispatch, of July 24th.

It is probable that the trustees of Randolph-Macon College will receive notification to hold a called meeting at an early date to elect a successor to Captain Irby, of Randolph-Macon College. The special committee appointed recently to elect a successor met in Richmond, but came to no decision. A number of names were discussed, and it was finally determined to correspond with several who were thought fitted for the position, with a view to finding out if they would be willing to accept. Probably by next Wednesday the committee will be in a position to suggest a name to the trustees, and they will decide whether to extend a call. It is thought the meeting will be held in Ashland.—News.

BEDFORD DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The District Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church for Lynchburg District began a session at 8:30 this evening at the Methodist church, Rev. Paul Whitehead, presiding elder.

There are about a hundred delegates, clerical and lay, entitled to representation, and it is expected that three-fourths of the number will attend. The Conference will remain in session until Thursday.—Times of the 28th.

NANSEMOND LADY PASSES AWAY.

Mrs. Clara A. Riddick died this morning at the home of her son, Mr. Miles J. Riddick, a few miles from Suffolk. She was in the 78th year of her age, and had been suffering with rheumatism for fifteen years. She was the oldest member of the Main Street church of Suffolk, which she joined over sixty years ago. Mrs. Riddick was the sister of Rev. W. E. Judkins, D. D., of Salisbury, Md., presiding elder of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore District of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, who was with her when she passed away. She was an aunt of Mr. Lewis McKay Judkins, of Richmond.—Suffolk Special to Dispatch of July 24th.

CALLED TO DAUGHTER'S BEDSIDE

The Rev. T. McN. Simpson, a former pastor of Monumental M. E. church, but now of Danville, Va., arrived here yesterday morning in response to a telegram announcing the illness of his daughter, Miss Mary Simpson. The young lady has been visiting for some days the home of Mr. J. C. Proctor, in Washington street. She became ill last Monday and the attending physician believes that she is suffering from typhoid fever. Her condition was, however, not so serious as to prevent her being taken to her home, and in company with her father last night over the Southern Railway for Danville.—Pilot.

CUMBS TO ATTACK OF MALARIAL FEVER.

Mrs. Alice Estelle Elmore, a sister of Mr. Carson Elmore, of this place, died at the home of her parents, near Brunswick county, on Wednesday morning at 8:30 o'clock, from an attack of malarial fever.

She was in her twentieth year, having been born on November 10, 1892. She was a graduate of the B. F. State, and taught school in Sussex county the past session.

Mrs. Elmore was a member of Trinity Episcopal church. Besides a father and mother, she leaves three sisters and six brothers. These are Mrs. L. Feibles and Misses M. S. and Lucile Elmore; Messrs. T. M. Elmore, of Lawville; H. C. Elmore, of Blackstone; W. E., C. V., and H. C. Elmore, of Brunswick county.—Blackstone Pilot.

CHURCH CONFERENCE.

A Church Conference held at Centerville last night was largely attended. Several matters were brought up for discussion, principal among which was the plan for raising money to complete the new church building and the naming of the same.

A letter was read by Mr. W. H. Beadles from the Rev. Dr. Beadles, of the late Rev. R. F. Beadles, which he suggested that the new church be given a name other than Beadles Memorial, which has been selected by the members, and that it be placed in the edifice to memory instead. The matter was discussed and finally referred to the Quarterly Conference.—Norfolk Pilot.

RESTING LECTURE TO BACHELORS.

A large number of young men attended in the lecture hall of the Men's Christian Association last night to hear Bishop A. Coke Smith give a practical talk on the subject of "Physical Side of Getting Married." The lecture was one of the series as instituted to be given during the month, and like the rest of the series that have been given already, it was greatly enjoyed. Many hints were given to the young men who are contemplating matrimony as well as those who have determined to spend the rest of their days as bachelors.

Brother Smith divided his subject into three parts—"Purity," "Health," and "Home Surroundings." Each was plain and instructive in itself, and as interesting to a great degree. After the lecture refreshments were served, and then a short musical program was rendered.

METHODIST SUNDAY SCHOOL IN GHENT.

Several prominent Methodist laymen of Ghent, who are interested in the movement to erect a new church building for that denomination in the rapidly growing section of Ghent, have just adopted a plan for the organization of a Sunday school. At a meeting held recently a committee was appointed to take up the matter and bring it to a successful issue. It is learned that they are meeting with encouragement on every hand, and are confident of organizing the school early in September. Through the kindness of Rev. E. E. Dudley, pastor, and the board of deacons of Central Baptist church, they have secured the use of their lecture room to hold their Sunday school exercises in.

There are quite a large community of Methodists who are residents of Ghent, who are pleased at the prospect of having a Sunday school of their own denomination in their midst, and have assured the committee of their sympathy in the movement, and will render them all the aid possible.—Virginian-Pilot.

DR. YOUNG AT EPWORTH.

The congregation that steadily worships at Epworth Methodist church had the pleasure of listening to two learned and eloquent sermons from their former pastor, Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., of Court Street church, Lynchburg, Sunday. Despite the excessive warm weather the people turned out in large numbers at both services to hear the distinguished and eloquent divine. At the morning service Dr. Young took as his theme "The End of All Strife," selecting as the foundation of his discourse Romans 5: 1—"Therefore being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Upon the words "faith" and "peace" the doctor built a powerful argument in favor of the doctrine that the man who consecrates his whole life unreservedly to the will of the Divine Master places Himself upon the lofty pinnacle of being forever free from all strife. The trials and troubles of life in whatever form they may come upon him can never shake the "peace of God, which passeth all understanding," which is the inheritance of those who have become partners with Christ in that inheritance that is incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for all the faithful.

At the evening service Dr. Young discoursed eloquently upon the subject, "How to Win a Large Fortune," basing his sermon on Luke 21: 19—"In your patience possess ye your souls." The central thought in the discourse was that the patient man who possesses his soul has completely mastered himself spiritually, mentally and physically, and is greater than he that conquereth a city, for he has conquered himself. The broad and comprehensive views brought out in the sermon were discussed in an able and logical manner, holding the rapt attention of the large congregation from its beginning to its close.

At the conclusion of the service hundreds in the congregation flocked to the altar and gave Dr. Young a most cordial greeting. The doctor left last night for Lynchburg. To-morrow he will leave for the Lynchburg District Conference.—Virginian-Pilot.

MINISTERS IN SESSION.

Owing to the meeting of the Port-mouth District Conference, at Crittenden, Nansemond county, yesterday, the session of the Methodist preachers was slimly attended.

The body was called to order by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, at 10:30 A. M., and prayer was made by Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., of Court Street church, Lynchburg.

Dr. Young gave a most encouraging account of Methodism in Lynchburg, and especially of his own charge, Court Street church. The new edifice has been completed on the site of the old one at a cost of $100,000, and is one of the handsomest church edifices in the city of hills. It has been constructed so as to throw the auditorium and lecture room into one, which will give a seating capacity of 1,200 people. The most interesting feature in connection with the new church, said Dr. Young, is that it is free of debt and no collection will have to be lifted when the dedicating services are to take place, which will be on the first Sunday in October.

Dr. Young preached at Epworth church Sunday morning and night to very large congregations, the audience at night being an unusually large one for the summer.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth held his usual services at LeKies Memorial church Sunday and had an increase in the attendance and much enthusiasm.

At Owens Memorial Rev. W. C. Vaden preached at 11 A. M., and the pastor, Rev. W. Asbury Christian, preached at 8 P. M. He reported that his mid-week prayer-meetings were well attended, and the services profitable.

Rev. J. B. Merritt completed his usual rounds Sunday and held his regular services at the Seamen's Bethel.

Rev. E. K. Odell preached morning and night at Huntersville; had a good Sunday school and interesting Epworth League meeting.

Rev. C. W. Cain preached to a fine congregation at Centenary Sunday morning, and the Rev. Mr. Dryen preached on missions in the afternoon, and secured a number of subscribers to the circulating library.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt reported an unusually good day for summer at Port Norfolk Sunday. The Sunday school and Epworth League meetings were well attended, and at the regular church services the congregations were fairly good ones.

Rev. D. B. Austin had a good Sunday school at Haygood Memorial. He preached at 11 A. M. to a fair sized congregation.

Rev. W. P. Jordan conducted the Sunday school at Park Place Sunday morning. There was a very good attendance of teachers and scholars.

At the Christian Memorial Temple Dr. Barrett preached morning and night. He conducted service at the almshouse in the afternoon.

Rev. J. K. Jolliff preached to a large congregation at Queen Street church Sunday morning and a fair sized audience at night. He reported that his mid-week services on Wednesday night were well attended, and the exercises spiritual and profitable.

Rev. C. H. McGhee reported a good Sunday school at Lambert's Point and a fine attendance at the 11 o'clock service. The congregation at night was not so large. He said that much interest is taken in his mid-week services; the people turn out to them in goodly numbers.

Rev. W. R. Proctor preached morning and night at McKendree church to attentive congregations. The Sunday school was well attended. He reported a gratifying attendance on the regular mid-week services and interesting exercises. He uses the Sunday school lesson at these meetings.—Virginian-Pilot.

MISSIONS OF THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH—A SUMMARY OF RESULTS—1902.

Prepared by the Secretaries.

THE FIELD, THE FORCE, THE WORK.

Our foreign mission fields are China, Brazil, Japan, Mexico, Korea and Cuba. We also have work for Germans and Indians. In addition, small appropriations are made to a few weaker Conferences in the Northwest. Preaching the Gospel, teaching in day and boarding schools, in Sunday school; dispensing medicine; house-to-house visitation by Bible women; and the dissemination of Christian literature cover the work done in these fields.

CHINA MISSION.

Opened in 1848 by Drs. Taylor and Jenkins. In this, the greatest and most difficult of all mission fields, a half century of sowing is now to be followed by a century of reaping.

Organized in 1886 into an Annual Conference, we now have: Missionaries (including wives), 33; native travelling preachers, 15; members, 934 (decrease, 23); Sunday schools, 29; scholars, 1,712; Epworth Leagues, 18; members, 599; organized churches, 27; churches entirely self-supporting, 3; boarding schools, 2; pupils, 264; day schools, 8; pupils, 153; hospital, 1; dispensaries, 2; patients treated, 16,462; total collections, $1,416.55; total value of mission property, $19,932.50.

JAPAN MISSION.

Work opened in 1886 by Drs. J. W. and W. R. Lambuth and O. A. Dukes. Sixteen years of labor have been greatly blessed of God. In this Annual Conference, organized in 1892, we have: Missionaries (including wives), 39; native travelling preachers, 11; members, 744 (increase, 56); Sunday schools, 42; scholars, 1,654; Epworth Leagues, 2; members, 60; organized churches, 15; churches entirely self-supporting, 2; boarding schools, 2; pupils, 586; day schools, 8; pupils, 181; total collections, $1,245.17; total value of mission property, $62,694.

KOREA MISSION.

Opened by Bishop Hendrix in 1895. Dr. C. F. Reid, of the China Mission, was appointed superintendent. The conversion of Mr. T. H. Yun and his urgent appeal to enter Korea became a call of providence to the Church. The superintendent reports: Missionaries (including wives), 10; local preachers and helpers, 28; members, 424 (increase 155); Sunday schools, 11; scholars, 343; dispensary, 1; patients

WASHINGTON. —The Christian view of death as the entrance to a fuller life is presented in this Easter discourse by Dr. Talmage from the text I Cor. xv, 54, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

About 1,870 Easter mornings have awakened the earth. In France for three centuries the almanacs made the year begin at Easter until Charles IX. made the year begin at Jan. 1. In the Tower of London there is a royal pay roll of Edward I. on which there is an entry of 18 pence for 400 colored and pictured eggs, with which the people sported. In Russia slaves were fed and alms were distributed on Easter. Ecclesiastical councils met in Pontus, in Gaul, in Rome, in Achaia, to decide the particular day and after a controversy more animated than gracious decided it, and now through all Christendom in some way the first Sunday after the full moon which happens upon or next after March 21 is filled with Easter rejoicing.

The royal court of the Sabbaths is made up of fifty-two. Fifty-one are princes in the royal household, but Easter is queen. She wears richer diadem, she sways a more jeweled scepter, and in her smile nations are irradiated. How welcome she is when, after a harsh winter and late spring, she seems to step out of the snowbank rather than the conservatory, to come out of the north instead of the south, out of the arctic rather than the tropics, dismounting from the icy equinox, but welcome this queenly day, holding high in her right hand the wrenched off bolt of Christ's sepulcher and holding high in her left hand the key to all the cemeteries in Christendom.

My text is an ejaculation. It is spun out of hallelulabs. Paul wrote right on in his argument about the resurrection and observed all the laws of logic, but when he came to write the words of the text his fingers and his pen and the parchment on which he wrote took fire, and he cried out, "Death is swallowed up in victory!" It is an exciting thing to see an army routed and flying. They run each other down. They scatter everything valuable in the track. Unwheeled artillery; hoof of horse on breast of wounded and dying man. You have read of the French falling back from Sedan, of Napoleon's track of 90,000 corpses in the snowbanks of Russia, of the retreat of our armies from Manassas or of the five kings tumbling over the rocks of Beth horan with their armies while the hailstorms of heaven and the swords of Joshua's host struck them with their fury.

The Charge of the Black Giant.

In my text is a worse discomfiture. It seems that a black giant proposed to conquer the earth. He gathered for his host all the aches and pains and malarias and cancers and distempers and epidemics of the ages. He marched them down, drilling them in the north-west wind and amid the slush of tempests. He threw up barricades of grave mound. He pitched tent of charnal house. Some of the troops marched with slow tread commanded by consumptions, some in double quick commanded by pneumonias. Some he took by long besiegement of evil habit and some by one stroke of the battle-axe or casualty. With bony hand he pounded at the door of hospitals and sickrooms and won all the victories in all the great battlefields of all the five continents. Forward, march! ordered the conqueror of conquerors, and all the generals and commanders in chief and all presidents and kings and sultans and czars dropped under the feet of his war charger. But one Christmas night his antagonist was born.

As most of the plagues and sicknesses and despotisms come out of the east, it was appropriate that the new conqueror should come out of the same quarter. Power is given him to awaken all the fallen of all the centuries and of all lands and marshal them against the black giant. Fields have already been won, but the last day of the world's existence will see the decisive battle. When Christ shall lead forth his two brigades, the brigade of the risen dead and the brigade of the celestial host, the black giant will fall back, and the brigade from the risen sepulchers will take him from beneath, and the brigade of descending immortals will take him from above, and death shall be swallowed up in victory.

The old braggart that threatened the conquest and demolition of the planet has lost his throne, has lost his scepter, has lost his palace, has lost his prestige, and the one word written over all the gates of mausoleum and catacomb and necropolis, on cenotaph and sarcophagus, on the lonely khan of the arctic explorer and on the catafalque of great cathedral, written in capitals of azala and calla bly, written in musical cadence, written in doxology of great assemblages, written on the sculptured door of the family vault, is "Victory." Coronal word, embannered word, apocalyptic word, chief word of triumphal arch under which conquerors return.

Route of the King of Terrors.

Victory! Word shouted at Culloden and Balaklava and Blenheim, at Megiddo and Solferino, at Marathon, where the Athenians drove back the Medes; at Poltiera, where Charles Martel broke the ranks of the Saracens; at Salamis, where Themistocles in the great sea fight confounded the Persians, and at the door of the eastern cavern of chiseled rock, where Christ came out through a recess and throttled the king of terrors and put him back in the niche from which the celestial Conqueror had just emerged. Aha! When the jaws of the eastern mausoleum took down the black giant, "death was swallowed up in victory." I proclaim the abolition of death.

The old antagonist is driven back into mythology with all the lore about Stygian ferry and Charon with oar and boat. Melrose abbey and Kenilworth castle are no more in ruins than is the sepulcher. We shall have no more to do with death than we have with the cloakroom at a governor's or a president's levee. We stop at such cloakroom and leave in charge of a servant our overcoat, our overshoes, our outward apparel, that we may not be impeded in the brilliant round of the drawing room. Well, my friends, when we go out of this world we are going to a King's banquet and to a reception of monarchs, and at the door of the tomb we leave the cloak of flesh and the wrappings with which we meet the storms of this world. At the close of an earthly reception, under the brush and broom of the porter, the coat or hat may be banded to us better than when we resigned it, and the cloak of humanity will finally be returned to us improved and brightened and purified and glorified.

You and I do not want our bodies returned as they are now. We want to get rid of all their weaknesses and all their susceptibilities to fatigue and all their slowness of locomotion. We want them put through a chemistry of soil and heat and cold and changing seasons, out of which God will reconstruct them as much better than they are now as the body of the rosiest and healthiest child that bounds over the lawn in Central park is better than the sickest patient in Bellevue hospital. But as to our soul, we will cross right over, not waiting for obsequies, independent of obituary, into a state in every way better, with wider room and velocities beyond computation, the duldest of us into companionship with the very best spirits in their very best mood, in the very parlor of the universe, the four walls burnished and paneled and pictured and glorified with all the splendors that the infinite God in all the ages has been able to invent. Victory!

The Urn or the Tomb.

This view, of course, makes it of but little importance whether we are cremated or sepulchred. If the latter is dust to dust, the former is ashes to ashes. If any prefer incineration, let them have it without cavil or protest. The world may become so crowded that cremation may be universally adopted by law as well as by general consent. Many of the mightiest and best spirits have gone through this process. Thousands and tens of thousands of God's children have been cremated—P. P. Bliss and wife, the evangelistic singers, cremated by accident at Ashtabula bridge; John Rodgers, cremated by persecution; Latimer and Ridley, cremated at Oxford; Pothinus and Blandina, a slave, and Alexander, a physician, and their comrades cremated at the order of Marcus Aurelius; at least a hundred thousand of Christ's disciples cremated, and there can be no doubt about the resurrection of their bodies. If the world lasts as much longer as it has thus far, there perhaps may be no room for the large acreage set apart for resting places, but there is plenty of room yet, and the race need not pass that bridge of fire until it comes to it. The most of us prefer the old way. But whether out of natural disintegration or cremation we shall get that luminous, buoyant, glad, transcendent, magnificent, inexplicable structure called the resurrection body. You will have it; I will have it.

I say to you today, as Paul said to Agrippa, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" That far up cloud, higher than the hawk flies, higher than the eagle flies, what is it made of? Drops of water from a river, other drops from a lake, still other drops from a stagnant pool, but now embodied in a cloud and kindled by the sun. If God can make such a lustrous cloud out of water drops, many of them soiled and impure and fetched from miles away, can he not transport the fragments of a human body from the earth and out of them build a radiant body? Cannot God, who owns all the material out of which bones, muscle and flesh are made, set them up again if they have fallen? If a manufacturer of telescopes drops a telescope on the floor and it breaks, can he not mend it again so you can see through it? And if God drops the human eye into the dust, the eye which he originally fashioned, can he not restore it? Aye, if the manufacturer of the telescope, by the use of a new glass and a change of material, can make a better instrument than that which was originally constructed and actually improve it, do you not think the fashioner of the human eye may improve its sight and multiply the natural eye by the thousandfold additional

Forces of the Resurrection Eye

Everyday Resurrections.

"Why should it be thought with an incredible thing that God should raise the dead?" Things all around suggest it. Out of what grew all the flowers? Out of the mold and earth. Resurrected! Resurrected! radiant butterfly—where did it come from? The loathsome caterpillar. The allatross that smites the tempest with its wings where did it come from? senseless shell. Near Bergerac, France, in a Celtic tomb under a block, found flower seeds that had been buried 2,000 years. The explorer took flower seed and planted it, and it bloomed. It bloomed in bluebell and in trope. Two thousand years ago, yet resurrected! A traveler he found in a mummy pit in Egypt garden peas that had been buried 3,000 years ago. He brought them and on the 4th of June, 1844, he planted them, and in thirty days they sprang up. Buried 3,000 years, yet resurrected! "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?"

Where did all this silk come from? the silk that adorns your persons and your homes? In the hollow of a Greek missionary brought from India to Europe the progenitors of the worms that now supply the silk markets of many nations. The pages of bannered host and the luxuriant articles of commercial emporium flowing out from the silkworms. And shall we be surprised if out of this insignificant earthly body, this insignificant earthly life, our bodies unfold something worthy of the coming realities? Put silver into diluted n and it dissolves. Is the silver forever? No. Put in some piece copper, and the silver reappears. one force dissolves, another force organizes.

"Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead?" The insects flew the worms crawled last autumn bler and feeble and then stop. They have taken no food. They none. They lie dormant and insensible, but soon the south wind will the resurrection trumpet, and the and the earth will be full of them. you not think that God can do as for our bodies as he does for the worms and the spiders and the snails? morning at half past 4 o'clock it was a resurrection. Out of the the day. In a few weeks there will a resurrection in all our gardens. not some day a resurrection amid graves?

Ever and anon there are instances men and women entranced. A trance is death followed by resurrection a few days; total suspension of power and voluntary action. Rev. William Tennent, a great evangelist of last generation, of whom Dr. A. A. Alexander, a man far from sentimental, wrote in most eulogistic terms—Rev. William Tennent seemed to die. His spirit apparently left body. People came in day after day and said, "He is dead, he is dead." But the soul that fled returned. Will Tennent lived to write what had seen while his soul was gone.

Excursions into the Unknown

It may be found some time that is called suspended animation or those state is brief death, giving the an excursion into the next world, which it comes back, a furlough few hours granted from the confinement to which it must return. Is this waking up of men from trance this waking up of insects from lifelessness and this waking up

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WILLIAM E. ROSS.

A letter from Mr. D. M. Cloninger, Stanley, N. C., dated July 5, 1900, asking for catalogue of our school, contains this statement:

MISSIONS OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

treated, 105; collections, $272; total value of mission property, $30,115.

MEXICO MISSION.

In 1873 Bishop Keener laid in the city of Mexico the foundation of our mission in that country. The combined statistics of the Central (organized in 1886), the Northwest (organized in 1890), and the Mexican Border (organized in 1885) three Mission Conferences now in Mexico, which represent the fruits of incessant toil and heroic devotion for twenty-nine years, are: Missionaries (including wives), 34; native travelling preachers, 53; members, 5,814 (increase, 106); Sunday schools, 116; scholars, 3,862; Epworth Leagues, 17; members, 1,545; organized churches, 168; churches entirely self-supporting, 5; boarding school, 1; pupils, 212; hospitals, 2; patients treated, 3,133; total collections, $5,180.30; total value of mission property, $167,107.08.

BRAZIL MISSION.

In 1874 Rev. J. J. Ransom was sent out to organize and superintend work that had been begun by Rev. J. E. Newman. The new mission grew rapidly, and has proven a wide and open door. There are now in the Brazil Mission Conference, organized in 1886: Missionaries (including wives), 26; native travelling preachers, 19; members, 3,313 (increase, 562); Sunday schools, 65; scholars, 2,370; Epworth Leagues, 7; members, 315; organized churches, 48; churches entirely self-supporting, 7; boarding school, 1; pupils, 53; day school, 1; pupils, 39; total collections, $7,301.28; total value of mission property, $115,338.

CUBA MISSION.

Our first work in Havana was organized in 1896, and in 1898 Cuba was taken under the control of the Board as a regular mission field. We are establishing ourselves firmly on the island, as is shown by the erection of a substantial stone church in Matanzas and the purchase by Bishop Candler for $15,000 of a centrally located property in Havana well adapted for church and school purposes. The work has grown steadily, there being a marked increase over last year. The statistics are as follows: Missionaries (including wives), 14; native travelling preachers, 2; members, 494 (increase, 62); Sunday schools, 9; scholars, 522; Epworth Leagues, 3; organized churches, 8; day schools, 3; pupils, 288; collections for all purposes, $2,884.57; total value of mission property, $40,000.

GERMAN MISSION.

At the suggestion of Dr. William Winans, of Mississippi, in 1842 a mission in behalf of German immigrants was begun in New Orleans. In a few years the work was carried into Texas, where we now have our German Mission Conference, organized in 1890.

A Joint Commission upon the part of the Texas Conference is planning wisely for future educational and evangelistic work among the Germans in that State.

INDIAN MISSION.

In this work, which was organized in 1844, efforts are made to reach several distinct classes of people—viz., the whites, those of mixed blood, the fullbloods, and the blanket Indians. The Indian Mission Conference should be self-supporting at an early day, as a very large proportion of the members are whites.

WESTERN WORK.

The eight Western Conferences to which appropriations are made are: Columbia, East Columbia, Pacific, Los Angeles, Denver, Montana, Western, and New Mexico.

SUMMARY.

In our six foreign fields we have: Missionaries (including wives), 156; native travelling preachers, 100; members, 11,713 (increase 918); Sunday schools, 372; scholars, 10,463; Epworth Leagues, 77; members, 2,617; organized churches, 292; churches entirely self-supporting, 17; boarding schools, 5; pupils, 903; day schools, 20; pupils, 661; hospitals and dispensaries, 6; patients treated, 20,000; collected for all purposes, $18,299.97; total value of mission property, $611,186.58.

WOMAN'S FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

This Society, which sent out Miss Lochie Rankin, its first missionary to China, in 1878, after twenty-four years of splendid effort, reports as follows: Including one medical missionary, the Woman's Board employs 64 missionaries and 175 teachers and helpers; it supports 22 boarding schools, 63 day schools, 2 hospitals, 2 Bible colleges, 4 kindergartens, and has under instruction over 5,000 women and children. A large number of conversions in the various fields has been reported this year, with increase in Sunday schools and Church membership.

There are at present in China 19 missionaries appointed by the Woman's Board, and 8 ladies, wives of missionaries, who are associated with them in the work. There are 6 boarding schools, 2 hospitals, 60 native teachers and helpers, 38 Bible women, and 2 Bible colleges and 120 scholarships.

There are in the Republic of Mexico 7 boarding schools in successful operation, including 1 in Laredo, on the border. There are 15 day schools, 16 Bible women, and a large force of native helpers, besides the 21 missionaries, and 74 teachers.

The work in Brazil has prospered in all the stations. There are open now 7 stations. Besides native helpers and teachers there are 15 missionaries, 3 boarding schools, 6 day schools, and 2 kindergartens.

The work under the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions in Korea is also very promising. At Seoul there are besides Mrs. Campbell, 5 native helpers and assistants, 1 boarding school, 2 day schools, and 40 pupils. The school at Songdo, under Miss Hinds and Miss Harbaugh, is doing well. At Wonsan, recently occupied, are Miss Carroll and Miss Knowles.

The work prospers in Cuba at Havana and Matanzas. About 150 pupils are in the two schools.

In the Indian Mission the work at Anadarko has grown in interest and spirituality. Methvin Institute, at Anadarko, has 120 pupils, and needs only more house room to have double the number.

EDUCATIONAL WORK (OF BOTH BOARDS).

In some of these mission schools young men are being educated as teachers, and others trained for the ministry. Indeed, the majority of our pupils after graduation engage actively in some kind of Christian work.

The girls are prepared for usefulness as teachers and Bible women, or are fitted to become Christian wives and mothers, thus aiding in the establishment of Christian homes, which are to be the foundation of Christ's kingdom in these distant lands.

COLLECTIONS.

The total receipts for foreign missions for 1901 and 1902 are $362,135.85. Of this amount the sum of $291,672 is from regular collections, the increase over last year being $25,507. The receipts of the Woman's Board for the year amount to $104,017.96. Total receipts from both Boards, $466,153.81.

Received for foreign missions on regular collections for the quadrennium, $1,014,368.44; from other sources, $217,869.75. Total, $1,232.19.

Received for domestic missions from Conferences in the United States, $598,461.23; receipts of Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, $403,390.68; receipts of Woman's Home Mission Society, $175,752.10. Total from all sources, $2,409,842.20.

Increase of collections for foreign missions during the quadrennium, $250,586.17; increase for home missions, $180,883.32. Total increase, $431,469.49.

The responsibility for creating a spirit of liberality and a habit of systematic and proportionate giving rests heavily upon the pastor. Without a steady increase in collections our missionary work will be seriously crippled, as the natural growth of the work demands larger appropriations every year. How much more is an increase necessary when, by a succession of providential movements, the barriers to the nations have been removed and the very gates of the Orient flung wide open!

HOW THE MONEY IS SPENT.

Some who have no vital interest in foreign missions, and seek an excuse for not contributing, assert that it requires two dollars to send one dollar to the foreign field. The truth is, the only expense in sending funds is the letter postage. As to the use of the dollar, 93 cents in every dollar is applied to the work in the mission fields, while the remaining 7 cents must be made to cover the expense of collection, disbursement, and administration, which includes salaries of secretaries and treasurer, clerical help, the publication of two monthly periodicals, the printing of leaflets, mailing of circulars, dissemination of literature, and a large correspondence.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

The supreme need of the hour is a missionary revival throughout the Church. This must begin in the individual, and must grow out of a devotional study of the Word of God in relation to missions, and earnest supplication for a personal endowment of the Holy Ghost. It is only by this prayerful study of God's purpose in the gift of His Son for the redemption of the lost world, and by a closer fellowship with Jesus Christ, that the conscience can be awakened to a true sense of loyalty to God and duty to man. We need pastors who will faithfully lay the missionary obligation upon the people. We need a membership rooted and grounded in the principles of the Gospel, informed as to the facts of missions, and constrained by the love of Christ to go or send. We need a missionary periodical in every home and a contribution from every member. Every Sunday school should be organized into a missionary society. Every Epworth League should co-operate with its pastor to secure the full collection under assessment before it undertakes to work for any special contribution, and every man and woman as a steward intrusted with the Gospel should be consecrated to the work of carrying out the Lord's command.

They say the Rothschilds can't tell within millions how much they are worth. That is just my condition. All the wealth of this world and all the planets—everything—is mine; I am joint heir with Jesus Christ. Find out what Jesus Christ is worth, and I will tell you what I am worth.—D. L. Moody.

THE MOTHERS OF TO-MORROW.

THE OLD IDEA AND THE NEW.

The following from one of our exchanges is too good to lose, though we have forgotten the name of the exchange: "There has been, according to history, an idea in the world that education was intended for boys, and boys only; that woman had no need of any book knowledge more than to read, write and figure a little; that to educate a girl was waste of energy, time and money; and, too, that all education would not and could not be of any advantage to the female sex. Things for girls to know were how to spin, weave, wash, sew, cook, and all such rudgery work as might need to be done in housekeeping, and when she advanced beyond this she was getting on forbidden grounds for a woman.

"Such was once the prevailing idea in regard to the education of the female sex, and even to-day some of our people cling to that same nonsensical idea.

"The girls should know how to do all these things mentioned, and more. The old idea of this being a sufficient knowledge for a girl has been abandoned by our best and most broad-minded people. They see that to educate the girls of our land means more than mere contentment for that sex, but, on the contrary, means true happiness and prosperity for the rising generation.

"The girls of to-day are to be mothers of to-morrow; and oh! how thankful a boy or a girl should be who has an educated mother. An educated mother almost means an educated son or daughter. A child who never hears properly spoken English never speaks rich. It is the mother who has the everlasting influence over son or daughter, and for these reasons, if for no other, give us educated women—women with an all-round education, and Christian women.

"So give us rightly educated mothers, and we will have less trouble with the young generation, need fewer lawyers, fewer prisons, fewer sheriffs, and have fewer drunkards. We will have more schools and better ones, more churches and better members, better citizens and better and happier homes. Humanity will then stand on a higher and nobler plane than ever before."

EDUCATION AND SUFFRAGE.

Many of the States are adding an educational clause to the requirements of suffrage, and hence it becomes imperatively obligatory on the State to give the children ample opportunity and encouragement to prepare themselves for the demands of citizenship.

Otherwise the State places itself in the attitude of requiring certain conditions from the citizens, and at the same time depriving them of the means of meeting those requirements. It is not in high schools and colleges, says the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, that the children are taught to read and write, but in the humble and unobtrusive common schools of the country, and these should be made as free and effective as the State is able to do.

***

Mother, do you want your children to be what you are, to go at last where you are going?—Echoes.

genius buried 3,000 years ago make it easier for you to believe that your body and mine after the vocation of the grave shall rouse and rally, though there be 3,000 years between our last breath and the sounding of the archangel's reveille? Physiologists tell us that while the most of our bodies are built with such wonderful economy that we can spare nothing, and the loss of a finger is a hindrance, and the injury of a toe joint makes us lame, still that we have two or three useless physical apparatuses, and no anatomist or physiologist has ever been able to tell what they are good for. They may be the foundation of the resurrection body, worth nothing to us in this state to be indispensably valuable in the next state. The Jewish rabbis and the scientists of our day have found out that there are two or three superfluities of body that are something gloriously suggestive of another state.

I called at my friend's house one summer day. I found the yard all piled up with the rubbish of carpenter's and mason's work. The door was off. The plumbers had torn up the floor. The roof was being lifted in cupola. All the pictures were gone, and the paper hangers were doing their work. All the modern improvements were being introduced into that dwelling. There was not a room in the house fit to live in at that time, although a month before when I visited that house everything was so beautiful I could not have suggested an improvement. My friend had gone with his family to the Holy Land, expecting to come back at the end of six months, when the building was to be done. And, oh, what was his joy when at the end of six months he returned and found the old house had been enlarged and improved and glorified. That is your body. It looks well now—all the rooms filled with health, and we could hardly make a suggestion. But after awhile your soul will go to the Holy Land, and while you are gone the old house of your tabernacle will be entirely reconstructed from cellar to attic, and every nerve, muscle and bone and tissue and artery must be hauled over, and the old structure will be burnished and adorned and raised and cupolaed and enlarged, and all the improvements of heaven introduced, and you will move into it on resurrection day. "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." Oh, what a day when body and soul meet again! They are very fond of each other. Did your body ever have a pain and your soul not pity it, or your body have a joy and your soul not rejoice in it, or, changing the question, did your soul ever have any trouble and your body not sympathize with it, growing wan and weak under the depressing influence? Or did your soul ever have a gladness but your body celebrated it with kindled eye and cheek and elastic step? Surely God never intended two such good friends to be very long separated.

The Final Victory.

And so when the world's last Easter morning shall come the soul will descend, crying, "Where is my body?" And the body will ascend, saying, "Where is my soul?" And the Lord of the resurrection will bring them together, and it will be a perfect soul in a perfect body, introduced by a perfect Christ into a perfect heaven. Victory! Do you wonder that on Easter day we swathe our churches with garlands? Do you wonder we celebrate it with the most consecrated voice of song that we can invite, with the dearest fingers on organ and cornet and with axologies that beat their arches with the billows of sound as the sea smites the basalt at Giant's Causeway? Only the bad disapprove of the resurrection. A cruel heathen warrior heard Mr. Moffatt, the missionary, preach about the resurrection, and he said to the missionary, "Will my father rise in the last day?" "Yes," said the missionary. "Will all the dead in battle rise?" said the cruel chieftain. "Yes," said the missionary. Then said the warrior: "Let me hear no more about the resurrection. There can be no resurrection; there shall be no resurrection. I have slain thousands in battle. Will they rise?" Ah, there will be more to rise on that day than those whose crimes have never been repented of will want to see! But for all others who allowed Christ to be their pardon and their life and their resurrection it will be a day of victory.

The thunders of the last day will be the salvo that greets you into harbor. The lightnings will be only the torches of triumphal procession marching down to escort you home. The burning worlds flashing through immensity will be the rockets celebrating your coronation on thrones where you will reign forever and forever and forever. Where is death? What have we to do with death? As your reunited body and soul swing off from this planet on that last day you will see deep gashes all up and down the hills, deep gashes all through the valleys, and they will be the emptied graves, they will be the abandoned sepulchers, with rough ground tossed on each side of them, and slabs will lie uneven on the rent billocks, and there will be fallen monuments and cenotaphs, and then for the first time you will appreciate the full exhilaration of the text, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

Edward Blake, College Student.

enough. Did Wheaton and Clark and the president and Freeda and his mother really believe that he would be lost if he did not believe in Christ? Evidently they did. But would he? Was he not moral and truthful and honest? What more was required? "Yet one thing thou lackest." The young man who asked Jesus what he must do to inherit eternal life was moral. What did he lack? Acknowledgment of Jesus as master of his whole life. Was he, Edward, ready to do that? Or did he shrink from that absolute following of the divine Penitent of Galilee because it would change his selfish ambitions and make him serve others instead of himself?

It was after midnight, and still he sat there with his mother's letter before him. The new century was his to enter. Rich powers of mind and strength were his to enjoy. What would he choose as he looked into the future? Edward Blake, college student, you are at the most critical point in all your life now. The Spirit will not always strive with your soul. Your mother's prayers cannot save you if you do not give your heart to God. Will you be Christ's man or not?

Leave him alone with God and pray for him that he may cry before the morning breaks, "O Christ, thou art my Lord and my God!"

The Rock of Ages has been cleft for me,
But thou wilt never save against my will;
The water and the blood have flowed from thee,
But I must let that blood my being fill.

Oh, Spirit, pleading with strong tears and pain,
Grant that this soul may humbly let thee in!
Show him the Christ who came for sinful men
And in his heart thy work of grace begin.

THE END.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Chris- tian Influences at the lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph-Macon College or Randolph-Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positive Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

N. B. The statement sometimes made that the State Normal School is the only school which trains girls to become teachers is incorrect. Randolph-Macon Woman's College and Blackstone Institute both have departments of Pedagogy, and train teachers by means of observation and practice in "Model Schools."

Editorial.

THE SO-CALLED TRIAL OF JUDGE CAMPBELL.

The editor had followed with much interest the trial of Judge Campbell at Amherst C. H. until he got beyond the reach of the Richmond papers. It was evident from the beginning that the trial would be a farce. The selection of the men, from whom the jury was to be chosen, by Judge Campbell himself was directly in accordance with his previous conduct. No verdict but acquittal could be expected under such conditions. That followed on Saturday. For further comment, the editor will wait for fuller details. The so-called trial has made impeachment proceedings by the Legislature a necessity, if it is desired to maintain the administration of justice in Amherst county.

PETERSBURG DISTRICT CONFER- ENCE.

The Petersburg District Conference met at Shiloh church, North Mecklenburg circuit, July 16-18, 1902.

There was a large delegation of preachers and laymen present. The residing elder, Rev. R. T. Wilson, D.
D., dispatched the business in a pleasing and business-like manner. Bro.
James R. Harrison was the efficient secretary; in this work he excels.

The opening sermon was preached by Rev. S. C. Hatcher, of Market St. church, and while this scribe did not hear the sermon, owing to sickness, he heard many speaking of it in the highest terms. It made a fine impression upon the large congregation present.

The reports from the different charges on the district showed that progress was being made along all lines of Church work, but more especially in the great missionary movement. A special missionary programme was arranged, and speakers were appointed beforehand to discuss the different phases of this important subject. Rev. G. E. Booker, of High street church, preached the missionary sermon, and did it eloquently. Nearly every charge on the district expects to pay in full the missionary assessments, and some will overpay. This is indeed encouraging, and we shall not be surprised if the Petersburg District leads all the other districts in our Conference in the matter of paying in full its missionary assessments. The interest in the Epworth League is not what we might desire, yet every charge but five (5) reported Leagues actively at work.

The Sunday school work is progressing finely. The Church is waking up to the importance of this department of work, and special effort is being put forth to gather into the Sunday schools all the children and better equip our forces for more aggressive work.

The cause of education was ably presented by President R. E. Blackwell, of Randolph-Macon College, Principals James Cannon, Jr., of Blackstone Female Institute, E. Sumpter Smith, of Randolph-Macon Academy, and Wm.
Holmes Davis, of Randolph-Macon Institute. Each represented the institution under his especial care. Being peculiarly interested in our Blackstone Female Institute, it is gratifying to note the bright prospect of filling every room in the large building the coming session with students. The success of this school is truly marvellous.

By a set of resolutions the Conference pledged itself to President Blackwell to render any assistance possible in helping him raise $200,000, in order that the generous offer of John P.
Branch, of Richmond, may be accepted.

The temperance sentiment is growing, and we were delighted to see the laymen taking such an active part in this movement. When the whole Church shall rise up in its power and might this curse will be removed from our midst. God speed the day!

The greatest harmony prevailed, a deep spiritual feeling was manifest throughout the entire session, and there were several conversions under the earnest preaching of the brethren.

What shall I say of the hospitality of the Mecklenbergers? Their very name is a synonym for hospitality!
What dinners! My! the yellow leg chickens, so dear to a Methodist preacher's heart and palate. Everything in abundance—dust galore.
Baughan, our host, was in evidence, busy, active, looking out for everybody and doing everything possible for our comfort. Bro. Guyer's tent was pitched on the grounds, and the preaching was conducted under it. This was more comfortable than a crowded church—a very good arrangement. My name is George, and I worthily wear that historical patronymic—I cannot, cannot say it was cool, it never is at a District Conference. Show me the man who will dare assert such a thing. Nevertheless we heartily enjoyed everything, even our first day's sickness, for we were waited on and humored in the greatest possible manner, milk shakes were brought us, and the choicest part of the chicken was reserved for us, while others must take what they could find. Who is there who does not like to be treated so? So well did we enjoy our stay that we were loth to leave until all others were gone (because we did not want to take their dust), and for one would certainly vote to return next year. My home was with a member of the house of Ogburn, who is not familiar with that name and all that it stands for—"may their shadow never grow less!"

J. H. Wall, Geo. P. Adams, Dr. J. M.
Davis, and L. L. Marks were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with John R. Turner, C. S. Barrow, J.
W. Bradbury and A. S. Bridgeforth as alternates.

Blackstone was selected as the seat of the next Conference, and we hope to have a handsome new brick building to hold the services in. If any one desires to take a thousand dollars' worth of stock, more or less, in this enterprise, I would be glad to confer with that person at his or her earliest convenience.

G. F. GREENE.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

You can't imagine how it annoys me to see one of my articles misprinted.
They are bad enough when well printed. Seventy-five per cent. of the articles I have written for magazines and newspapers have been more or less mutilated by the typo., and there seems to be no help for this. I have this consolation, however, the majority of readers read so carelessly that they never detect an error, and those who read intelligently and critically usually know to what to attribute a sentence that has no sense in it.

I am now sitting in my back yard in the shadow of my house, and just at this moment a sister in the Lord, who happens to know that to-morrow is my birthday, has handed me a five-dollar bill as a birthday present. I was born in the same year and on the same day with her mother, who is now in heaven, and whose obituary notice I recently wrote and published. This giving was a nice thing to do, and yet how few ever think of rewarding the men who bury their dead and write their memoirs. The preacher is a very convenient thing—a necessary evil, and yet very necessary. As Brownlow used to say, "He preaches, prays and finds himself." The honor of being invited to preach, or to attend to a funeral, or to write an obituary notice, is usually considered sufficient compensation, considered not by the laborer, but by the employer. If I am not mistaken, "the workman is worthy of his hire," and I see no justice in paying a lawyer five dollars for making a motion in court, or one hundred dollars for haranguing the jury for an hour, and putting off the preacher with a little cheap honor.

Honor is a good thing in its place, but you can neither eat it nor wear it. I have heard an anecdote of a Catholic priest, who was in the spring going through the fields of a parishioner and blessing them, to make them productive; coming to one unusually sterile, he turned to the parishioner with a look of despair, and remarked: "Blessing won't do this field much good; it must have a load of manure." The application is this, there are cases in which honor will not do the preacher much good; he must have a load of groceries.

I see somewhere the statement that good-bye is an abbreviation of "God be with you." I prefer the etymology, that bye means way or journey, and that good-bye is equivalent to saying,
"a pleasant journey," or "may you go well." It is the equivalent of farewell, which means "go well." Adieu in French, a dios in Spanish, and ad dio in Italian, are a commendation to the care of God, and correspond to goodbye and farewell in English. I like good-bye better than any of them, and can adopt the old verse:

"Farewell, farewell, is a lonely word,

Of spoken with a sigh;

But give to me that better word,

That comes from the heart—goodbye."

In preparing a talk on the Wonders of Psychology, I have had occasion to observe how positively and boldly some theologians and ecclesiastics of the present day set themselves against the discoveries which are being made in this science. Our chief Southern Methodist paper once said: "We do not believe that anybody was ever healed by magnetism." I once sent an article on The New Psychology to our Review, and it was rejected. It was afterwards published in a New York magazine, and I was much complimented on it. This story of the opposition of theologians

CHAPTER I.

CHRISTMAS EVE IN A LUMBER CAMP.

IT was due to a mysterious dispensation of Providence and a good deal to Leslie Graeme that I found myself in the heart of the Selkirk for my Christmas eve as the year 1882 was dying. It had been my plan to spend my Christmas far away in Toronto with such bohemian and boon companions as could be found in that cosmopolitan and kindly city. But Leslie Graeme changed all that, for, discovering me in the village of Black Rock, with my traps all packed, waiting for the stage to start for the Landing, thirty miles away, he bore down upon me with resistless force, and I found myself recovering from my surprise only after we had gone in his lumber sleigh some six miles on our way to his camp up in the mountains. I was surprised and much delighted, though I would not allow him to think so, to find that his old time power over me was still there. He could always in the old varsity days—dear, wild days—make me do what he liked. He was so handsome and so reckless, brilliant in his class work and the prince of halfbacks on the Rugby field and with such power of fascination as would “extract the heart out of a wheelbarrow,” as Barney Lundy used to say. And thus it was that I found myself just three weeks later—I was to have spent two or three days—on the afternoon of the 24th of December, standing in Graeme's Lumber Camp No. 2, wondering at myself. But I did not regret my changed plans, for in those three weeks I had raided a cinnamon bear's den and had wakened up a grizzly. But I shall let the grizzly finish the tale. He probably sees more humor in it than I.

The camp stood in a little clearing and consisted of a group of three long, low shanties, with smaller shacks near them, all built of heavy, unbewn logs, with door and window in each. The grub camp, with cook shed attached, stood in the middle of the clearing; at a little distance was the sleeping camp with the office built against it, and about a hundred yards away on the other side of the clearing stood the stables and near them the smiddy. The mountains rose grandly on every side, throwing up their great peaks into the sky. The clearing in which the camp stood was hewn out of a dense pine forest that filled the valley and climbed half way up the mountain sides and then frayed out in scattered and stunted trees.

It was one of those wonderful Canadian winter days, bright and with a touch of sharpness in the air that did not chill, but warmed the blood like drafts of wine. The men were up in the woods, and the shrill scream of the bluejay flashing across the open, the impudent chatter of the red squirrel from the top of the grub camp and the pert chirp of the whisky jack hopping about on the rubbish heap, with the long, lone cry of the wolf far down the valley, only made the silence rest the more.

As I stood drinking in with all my soul the glorious beauty and silence of mountain and forest, with the Christmas feeling stealing into me, Graeme came out from his office and, catching sight of me, called out, “Glorious Christmas weather, old chap!” and then, coming nearer, “Must you go to-morrow?”

“I fear so,” I replied, knowing well that the Christmas feeling was on him too.

“I wish I were going with you,” he said quietly.

I turned eagerly to persuade him, but at the look of suffering in his face the words died on my lips, for we both were thinking of the awful night of horror when all his bright, brilliant life crashed down about him in black ruin and shame. I could only throw my arm over his shoulder and stand silent beside him. A sudden jingle of bells roused him and, giving himself a little shake, he exclaimed:

“There are the boys coming home.”

Soon the camp was filled with men talking, laughing, chaffing, like light hearted boys.

“They are a little wild tonight,” said Graeme, “and tomorrow they'll paint Black Rock red.”

Before many minutes had gone the last teamster was “washed up” and all were standing about waiting impatiently for the cook's signal—the supper tonight was to be “something of a feed”—when the sound of bells drew their attention to a light sleigh drawn by a buckskin broncho coming down the hillside at a great pace.

“Bedad, and it's him has the foine nose for turkey,” said Blaney, a good natured, jovial Irishman.

“Yes, or for pay day, more like,” said Keefe, a black browed, villainous fellow countryman of Blaney's and, strange to say, his great friend.

Big Sandy McNaughton, a Canadian highlander from Glengarry, rose up in wrath. “Bill Keefe,” said he, with deliberate emphasis, “you'll just keep your dirty tongue off the minister, and, as for your pay, it's little he sees of it or any one else, except Mike Slavin, when you're too dry to wait for some one to treat you, or perhaps Father Ryan, when the fear of hell fire is on to you.”

The men stood amazed at Sandy's sudden anger and length of speech.

“Bon! Dat's good for you, my bully boy,” said Baptiste, a wiry little French Canadian, Sandy's sworn ally and devoted admirer ever since the day when the big Scotsman, under great provocation, had knocked him clean off the dump into the river and then jumped in for him.

It was not till afterward I learned the cause of Sandy's sudden wrath which urged him to such unwonted length of speech. It was not simply that the Presbyterian blood carried with it reverence for the minister and contempt for papists and Fenians, but that he had a vivid remembrance of how, only a month ago, the minister had got him out of Mike Slavin's saloon and out of the clutches of Keefe and Slavin and their gang of blood-suckers.

Keefe started up with a curse. Baptiste sprang to Sandy's side, slapped him on the back and called out:

“You keel him! I'll hit (eat) him up, me.”

It looked as if there might be a fight when a harsh voice said in a low, savage tone:

“Stop your row, you blank fools! Settle it, if you want to, somewhere else.”

I turned and was amazed to see old man Nelson, who was very seldom moved to speech.

There was a look of scorn on his hard, iron gray face and of such settled fierceness as made me quite believe the tales I had heard of his deadly fights in the mines at the coast. Before any reply could be made the minister drove up and called out in a cheery voice:

“Merry Christmas, boys! Hello, Sandy! Comment ca va, Baptiste? How do you do, Mr. Graeme?”

“First rate. Let me introduce my friend, Mr. Connor, sometime medical student, now artist, hunter and tramp at large, but not a bad sort.”

“A man to be envied,” said the minister, smiling. “I am glad to know any friend of Mr. Graeme's.”

I liked Mr. Craig from the first. He had good eyes that looked straight out at you, a clean cut, strong face, well set on his shoulders, and altogether an upstanding, manly bearing. He insisted on going with Sandy to the stables to see Dandy, his broncho, put up.

“Decent fellow,” said Graeme; “but, though he is good enough to his broncho, it is Sandy that's in his mind now.”

“Does he come out often? I mean are you part of his parish, so to speak?”

“I have no doubt he thinks so, and I'm blowed if he doesn't make the Presbyterians of us think so too.” And he added, after a pause: “A dandy lot of parishioners we are for any man. There's Sandy, now. He would knock Keefe's head off as a kind of religious exercise, but tomorrow Keefe will be sober, and Sandy will be drunk as a lord, and the drunker he is the better Presbyterian he'll be, to the preacher's disgust.” Then, after another pause, he added bitterly: “But it is not for me to throw rocks at Sandy. I am not the same kind of fool, but I am a fool of several other sorts.”

Then the cook came out and beat a tattoo on the bottom of a dishpan. Baptiste answered with a yell; but, though keenly hungry, no man would demean himself to do other than walk with apparent reluctance to his place at the table. At the farther end of the camp was a big fireplace, and from the door to the fireplace extended the long board tables, covered with platters of turkey not too scientifically carved, dishes of potatoes, bowls of apple sauce, plates of butter, pies and smaller dishes distributed at regular intervals. Two lanterns hanging from the roof and a row of candles stuck into the wall on either side by means of slit sticks cast a dim, weird light over the scene.

There was a moment's silence, and, at a nod from Graeme, Mr. Craig rose and said:

“I don't know how you feel about it, men, but to me this looks good enough to be thankful for.”

“Fire ahead, sir,” called out a voice quite respectfully, and the minister bent his head and said:

“For Christ the Lord, who came to save us, for all the love and goodness we have known and for these thy gifts to us this Christmas night, our Father make us thankful. Amen.”

“Bon! Dat's fuss rate,” said Baptiste; “seems lak dat's make me more better for sure.”

And then no word was spoken for quarter of an hour. The occasion was far too solemn and moments too precious for anything so empty as words, but when the white piles of bread and the brown piles of turkey had for second time vanished and after the last pie had disappeared there came a pause and a hush of expectancy, whereupon the cook and cookee, each bearing also a huge, blazing pudding, came forth.

“Hooray!” yelled Blaney. “Up with ye!” And, grabbing the cook by the shoulders from behind, he faced him about.

Mr. Craig was the first to respond, and, seizing the cookee in the same way, called out:

“Squad, fall in! Quick march!”

In a moment every man was in the procession.

“Strike up, Batchees, ye little angel,” shouted Blaney, the appellation a concession to the minister's presence, and away went Baptiste in a rollicking French song with the English chorus:

“Then blow, ye winds, in the morning,
Blow, ye winds, ay oh!
Blow, ye winds, in the morning,
Blow, blow, blow!”

And at each “blow” every boot came down with a thump on the plank floor that shook the solid roof. After the second round Mr. Craig jumped up the bench and called out:

“Three cheers for Billy the cook!”

In the silence following the cheer Baptiste was heard to say:

“Bon! Dat's mak me feel lak hit d puddin' all hup meself, me.”

“Hear till the little baste!” said Blaney in disgust.

“Fu sure, but de more stomach da more better for dis puddin’,” replied the little Frenchman cheerfully.

After a time the tables were cleared and pushed back to the wall, and pipes were produced. In all attitudes suggestive of comfort the men disposed themselves in a wide circle about the fire, which now roared and crackled, the great wooden chimney hanging from the roof. The lumberman's hope of bliss had arrived. Even old Nelson looked a shade less melancholy than usual as he sat alone, well away from the fire, smoking steadily and silently. When the second pipes were well a-going, one of the men took down a violin from the wall and handed it Lachlan Campbell. There were two brothers Campbell just out from Argyle typical highlanders—Lachlan, dark, silent, melancholy, with the face of a mystic, and Angus, red haired, quick impulsive and devoted to his brother devotion he thought proper to cover under biting, sarcastic speech.

Lachlan after much protestation, interspersed with gibes from his brother, took the violin and, in response to the call from all sides, struck up “Lo Macdonald's Reel.” In a moment the floor was filled with dancers, who were dancing and cracking their fingers in the wildest manner. Then Baptiste called the “Red River Jig,” a most intricate and difficult series of steps, the men keeping time to the music with hands and feet.

When the jig was finished, Sandy called for “Lochaber No More,” and Campbell said:

“No, no; I cannot play that tonight, Mr. Craig will play.”

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

to everything new in science is an old, old story. Dr. Wm. B. Carpenter, in his great work on "Mental Physiology," says: "But if such be the legitimate tendency of scientific inquiry, the question arises why—especially in these days—so many of its votaries should place themselves in an attitude of direct antagonism to religion. The answer to this question seems three-fold, and each point needs a separate consideration.

"In the first place, there has been for several centuries past a constant endeavor on the part of the upholders of theological creeds and ecclesiastical systems either to repress scientific inquiry altogether, or to limit its range. While accepting with the rest of the world those results of scientific labor which contribute to their own comfort or enjoyment—making no objection to science so long as it confines itself to giving them steam engines and railroads, gas-lighting and electric telegraphs—such theologians maintain that the minds of men who devote the best powers of their lives to the search for the truth as it is in nature, are to be 'cribbed, cabined and confined' by narrow interpretations of the Bible; and now think to put down the great scientific hypothesis which is engaging much of the thought of our time, by citing the text, 'God made man in His own image,' just as three centuries ago they declared the Copernican system to be a pernicious error, because Joshua commanded the sun and moon to stand still, and even yet denounce geologists as skeptics and infidels, because they refuse to accept as revealed truth that God made heaven and earth in six days, and rested the seventh day. It is not strange that men of science should not only rebel against self-constituted domination, but should repudiate the whole system of belief of which it is the expression. For all history shows that nothing drives men to the extreme of license so surely as tyrannical restriction. The juste milieu can only be found by those who are free to seek for it.

"In the second place, there is in what claims to be the 'orthodox systems' of theology so much that runs counter to the strongest and best instincts of humanity, that those who have been led by scientific study to build up their fabric of thought on the basis of their own intellectual and moral intuitions, find it impossible to fit into this a set of doctrines which are altogether conformable to it. They cannot reconcile, for example, the everlasting damnation of all such as are unable to accept a body of unintelligible dogma with any conception they can form either of a righteous Creator or of a loving Father. Nor can they conceive that either the performance of the baptismal rite or the atoning sacrifice of a divinity can be the condition on which depends the rescue of an innocent child from eternal torment. * * * So long as this is the haven to which orthodox theology invites men of science, the great mass of them will most assuredly avoid it altogether; and unless they find an anchorage elsewhere, will drift away into either vague unbelief or absolute disbelief.

"While theological systems are thus answerable for two sources of scientific antagonism to religion, a third arises out of the tendencies of scientific research itself. For the more constant and invariable the great agencies of nature are found to be, and the more what at first seemed exceptional phenomena, are brought within the domain of law—the more, on a superficial view, does it appear as if the order of nature were simply mechanical, going on of itself, as it has done through all the past, and will continue to do through the future. But a deeper scrutiny has shown us that the man of science cannot dispense with the notion of a power always working throughout the mechanism of the universe; and that on scientific grounds alone this power may be regarded as the expression of mind. And anything else than an unvarying uniformity in the mode of operation of that mind would be an indication of its defect, rather than of its perfection. For if all the agencies of nature are the unconscious ministers of an all-wise and all-powerful ruler, they will work out His bidding like the disciplined members of a large and well-ordered household, in which every one knows his work and does it. Surely it would be strange if any who should watch these servants in the performance of their several duties, should study the successor of every hour, should find each doing at a certain prefixed time and place exactly that which proves most suitable to the occasion, and should thus finally arrive at a conception of the harmony and completeness of the whole scheme of domestic economy—were to be led by this very harmony and completeness to regard that as a mere mechanical routine, which is really the silent, invisible action of the directing will, and will see the operation of that will only in such departure from the system as may be required to meet contingencies, for which no human foresight can provide."

I have quoted the above, not because I endorse everything in it, but because, first, it is a merited rebuke of those theologians who oppose everything which antagonizes their interpretation of Scripture, as also a rebuke of those who construe the order and regularity of nature in to fatality, and banish God from His own universe.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND MISSIONS.

[Read at Petersburg District Conference, July, 1902, by Rev. J. O. Moss, and ordered to be published in Southern Methodist Recorder.]

The Sunday school has been defined as "the Church working in a distinct part of the great world vineyard." It is the Church—the whole Church, it ought to be—doing one of the most important parts of its work. Just as the Church works when it builds its edifice, carries forward its revivals, supports its institutions, it works in the Sunday school in the study of God's Word, which is not only able to make us wise unto salvation, but is also a lamp unto our feet, and a light unto our pathway, showing us every duty we are under to God and to man.

The ideal Sunday school would be the whole church earnestly, devoutly studying the Word of God. But while we may never attain the ideal, we can strive after it, and have as many disciples—literally learners—as possible in the school in which the book of books is the text-book. And the student of this volume will find abundant commands, exhortations to give to others the same gracious truths which have been freely given to us, and which we cherish as our most sacred heritage.

The International Sunday School Committee has divided the time for the study of the Bible in the Sunday school equally between the Old and the New Testament, and in either division we find abundant evidence that the great purpose of God is the salvation of the whole world through His Son.

The very first promise—the seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head—has the missionary idea in it; for the trail of the serpent is seen everywhere, and it was not the seed of a Hebrew woman of whom the promise was spoken, but the seed of the only woman in the world, and, therefore, the mother of all nations, and while He came of a Hebrew family, in His veins ran the blood of Ruth, who belonged to the great Gentile world.

And ever and anon in the progress of that nation through which the Redeemer was manifested to the world, we get glimpses or hear prophetic echoes of God's great purpose to save the whole world.

The promise to Abraham was: "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Jacob foretold: "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the people be." The Psalmist sang: "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord; and shall glorify Thy name."

Isaiah prophesied: "It shall come to pass in the last day that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it."

And again: "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek."

Malachi, called the seal of the prophets, because his book closes the Old Testament writings, declares: "My name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of Hosts." Like all the great doctrines of revelation, we have this one, the salvation of all nations, in the bud in the Old Testament; in the New Testament we have it in full development—yea, bearing precious fruit, for when the Sunday school passes from the study of the Old to the study of the New Testament, they hardly turn a page without learning, directly or by implication, that God's purpose in the gift of His Son to the world is the salvation of all its people.

Does the venerable and saintly Simeon, by the power of the Holy Spirit, chant his "Nunc Dimitis?" Not a note in his holy song rises higher than this one: "A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory Thy people Israel."

Is the theme of the Sunday school lesson the incarnation? We are here taught that the first missionary was the sinless one Himself, who, though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor that we through His poverty might be rich.

Is the theme of Nicodemus the truth-seeker after truth? In our Lord's instruction to him we find the whole Gospel thus epitomized: "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through Him might be saved."

Is the subject the conversion of the woman of Samaria? who was both heathen and a sinful woman. He teaches her that while salvation is of the Jews it is not confined to them, for He declared: "The hour cometh when ye shall neither in this mountain, nor at Jerusalem, worship the Father. * The true worshippers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth." And was a throng of these heathen Samaritans who were coming to Him on the invitation of their saved neighbor, was the first female home missionary that the Saviour pointed and said to His disciples: "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest."

Is the subject for study the matchless parable of the Prodigal Son? The wayward son not only stands for an individual receiving a glad welcome to his father's home, but he is a type of lost nations as well, coming unto the kingdom of God.

Is the theme the precious parable of the Good Shepherd? Hear Him as He says: "And other sheep I have which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear My voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

And as we move on towards the last scenes in the matchless life, He sweeps away every doubt from the most skeptical when He says: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Ye, therefore, and teach all nations baptizing them in the name of the Father and the Son and of the Holy Ghost." "Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day. And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

"And ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

And when He had ascended and the promise of the Father, which was the gift of the Holy Ghost, came up the witnesses, they began to do as they were bidden. Philip preached to the Ethiopian. Peter brings Cornelius into the kingdom. And this Gentile soldier, who had reached the highest possible type of manhood and heathen environments, needed Christ in his life—needed Him like the ethio-and the gentle John and the de-Nathaniel needed Him.

and the crowning missionary act when God laid His hand upon the thirsty persecutor of His Church changed his name and his nature;
this one, who was of "the stock of el, of the tribe of Benjamin, an ew of the Hebrews, as touching law, a Pharisee; concerning zeal, cuting the Church; touching the teousness which is in the law, eless," and sent him a chosen vesto bear his name before Gentiles kings and the children of Israel, open their eyes and turn them from ness to light, and from the power atan unto God, that they may re-forgiveness of sins and inheriamong them which are sanctified alth that is in Me." And nearly thing that this primitive and ess missionary wrote might be ed as missionary literature.

and as the Sunday school moves on s studies to the glowing wonders e Apocalypse, amidst many things which confessedly are hard to be stood, it will find them very plain ances: "For thou was slain, and redeemed us to God by Thy blood, f every kindred and tongue and e and nation."
id I saw another angel fly in the
of heaven, having the everlastospel to preach unto them that on the earth, and to every nation indred and tongue and people."

I well-nigh the last command the enthroned Son of God given in previous volume is this: "Let at heareth, say come."

h scatter broadcast all your lition modern missions. Let us fill htre tables with the "The Review ssions," "The Woman's Missiondvocate," "Go Forward," and the permanent forms from the pens rvin, Haygood, Kelly, Galloway, n and others, but nothing can be place of the Bible as a text-n the great subject of missions.
we shall get all our Sunday at work for the great cause is difficult of solution. The Discisays: "Let every Sunday school anized into a missionary society ry to the Board of Missions."
the Virginia Conference find the ld Society somewhat in our way aying out this provision of the ine, for these societies are com-almost entirely of members of Saday schools.

while the Rosebud societies have great work, its assessment plan ecting two cents a month from ember puts the same amount on pr as the well-to-do, and this is ry to the law for giving which ve to His ancient people, and he New Testament gives to all when it says: "Let every one of la by in store as God has prosper-ir."

he amount required is too small to give. Let us not bring up re members of the Church who eir obligations to missions by ual contribution of twenty-five
s. We have a surplus of that sort rips the best way would be to our schools organized into missionary societies, and have one Sunday each quarter for Sunday school missionary day, and let the contributions be according to God's law for giving.

The modern Sunday school and the movement for modern missions began well-nigh together. God's hand was, God's hand is, in both. The study of God's Word increases missionary interest, and the spread of missions opens new fields from which to gather those who shall become students of God's Word.

EPWORTH LEAGUE AND MISSIONS

[Paper read by Rev. Geo. F. Greene at Petersburg District Conference, and ordered to be published in Southern Methodist Recorder.]

To every thoughtful young person there comes questions like these: Who am I? Why my creation? What my destiny? And the great problem of life is to properly solve these questions; and in the solving of them he is thrown back upon divine revelation and his own self-consciousness. He reasons in this wise: I am a living personality, differentiated from all other personalities, a creature distinct and separate from all other creatures, endowed with wonderful powers—powers of intellect, powers of sensibilities, powers of will,
and born under divine and human laws, responsible for acts both to God and man.

There must have been a purpose in his creation. God breathed into him the breath of life. Revelation says he was made in the image of God in spirit.
If, then, he would know the purpose of his creation, he must know the God who created him, hence arises another question: Who and what is God? Revelation again answers, God is holy, God is love, God is eternal; in order that God's purpose may be carried out in his life he, too, must be holy, just and good, and be filled with the divine attribute of love. This he recognizes can only be done by a life of obedience to the revealed will of God. The conformity to the will of God determines his eternal destiny. But what about his choice? Has he the power to disobey? Yea, and in disobeying he frus-trates the divine plan. What terrific power is his! He has even the power of projecting a thought into the world's thinking and changing the lives of others for good or evil. He can speak Gospels or utter curses. He can withhold the truth as he knows it, and in this way retard the progress of the truth. He is responsible for the hiding or letting shine the light that he possesses, for being made in the image of God he is God's reflector, and God is light.

Along with these other powers the young man finds himself the possessor of a strong physical body, a body capable of enduring toil and labor. By the exercise of this physical body he provides for the wants of the body.
He can earn money. What is money?
It is simply what individuals agree upon as a commodity of exchange. It may be gold, silver, wood, shells or anything else, and it has just that commercial value that the individuals dispose to place upon it; when this is done it becomes an agent, a powerful agent for good or ill. And here, again, the young man is confronted with a grave problem—viz., how to rightfully use this great agency so as to effect his well-being here, his destiny hereafter.

Given the definition above, money is a stored power, it is more than a merely material substance, it becomes human and has life and force in it. A young man earns one dollar per day by his physical energies, six dollars a week; on Saturday night he has his accumulated earnings. To get this he has expended brain power, it also represents time, physical exertion—yea, the very life of the young man, and hence has become humanized. So he might well ask how must I spend myself, for this thing that I call money has become myself?

Shall he waste this money (himself) upon what the world calls its pleasures? Like the prodigal, shall he spend his all in riotous living, and at the end come back a shrivelled, wasted being?
Or shall he spend himself upon higher and nobler purposes? The end of his existence is to glorify his God. How can this be done? By service, there is no other way. This was the Master's way. He says: "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister." Whom shall he serve, his friends and neighbors? Yea, verily. Who is his neighbor? The man who needs him, he is his neighbor, whether at home or abroad. Others have a partial right to what he possesses. "Our Father" makes the whole world kin. Unto the utter-most part of the world must the light extend. This relationship brings us face to face with the missionary work.
The Chinese, the Japanese, the Indian, the African are my brethren, my neighbors.

When we speak of missionary effort we simply mean sending help to any and all who are in need, at home or abroad. Where the need is most felt, there the greatest efforts should be made.

Can we not see the hand of Providence in raising up the Epworth League?
An organization of young people, banded together for organized effort, bearing upon their banner the inspiring motto, "All for Christ," which means all my powers given to Christ, and all the world brought to Christ. Think of the power wrapped up in the lives of two millions of young people—Epworth Leaguers! realizing their obligations to God and their fellow-men; well may the prince of darkness quail before this mighty force!

Great work has been done by the Epworth League in Southern Methodism.
To the League is due largely the forward missionary movement in the Church to-day. Fifty thousand dollars has been raised in the last five years for special missionary work. The success of that wonderful Missionary Conference in New Orleans was largely due to the spirit of the League.

What is the great need of the League in carrying out fully the spirit of its motto? The answer is plain—A systematic study of missions. The standing difficulty at home is lack of information regarding the work abroad. We have abundant material; what we need is an educational campaign. The young must know and be made to feel the need, and then you will have no difficulty in interesting them for service.

Our Leaguers are loyal, they are earnest, they want to do some kind of work, and they will work if specific direction be given them. A larger Christian intelligence is needed. Young people respond readily and willingly to any cry of distress, and the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," must be made real to them, and they will rise up and answer the call.

Epworth Leaguers, there lies before you blessed privileges in the near future of girding yourselves and going forth to carry forward the great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature."
If in person you cannot go, you can send your substance, which is really yourself. The conquest of the world is not far distant. Let us unfurl our banner and go forward. Remember your motto, "All for Christ."

Blackstone, Va., July 14, 1902.

TEMPERANCE.

[Report read at Petersburg Conference, and adopted by the Conference.]

Your Committee on Temperance beg leave to report that it must be a source of much joy to every true disciple of the Lord to notice the growing sentiment against alcoholic drinks. Only a few years ago whiskey was on the sideboard and almost at every cross road; but to-day there are few homes in which ardent spirits are kept, and the saloons are dropping out one by one.
We are also glad to note with much pleasure that the railroad companies and large firms will no longer employ men who use intoxicating drinks.
While we must confess that this great curse is somewhat weakening, we must also admit that the enemy is yet strong and crafty. The recent unprecedented, and, as it seems to us, disgraceful conduct of the judge of the county of Amherst, is a warning to us that our cause will not triumph without opposition.
Your committee would hence urge upon the ministry and laity of the Petersburg District to continue to educate public sentiment against this great destructive evil. The following resolutions are offered:

1. Resolved, That every member of this Conference will ever oppose the sale of ardent spirits, either in a saloon or a dispensary.
2. Resolved, That we will arrange to organize the Anti-Saloon League where-ever it is practicable.
3. Resolved, That we request our preachers to preach on the subject of temperance at least once during the Conference year.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN O. MOSS,
W. L. MURPHY,
M. P. ADAMS,
L. A. HARDY.

The board of trustees of the Ohio Anti-Saloon League has appointed a committee to investigate the question of substitutes for the saloon. This matter of substitutes for the saloon is being agitated all over the country, and in a good many places the idea has been put in practice with excellent results.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 17

Text of the Lesson, Num. x, 11-13 and 20-36—Memory Verses, 33, 34—Golden Text, Ps. xxi, 3—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

11-13 And they first took their journey according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

In the third month of the first year they came to Sinai, and on the first day of the first month of the second year the tabernacle was erected and accepted by God and filled with His glory (Ex. xix, 1; xl, 17, 34). Now, just fifty days later the cloud lifted, and they journeyed from Sinai to the wilderness of Paran in the order described in this chapter. Whether it was the tabernacle and its erection or the priesthood and the sacrifices or the journeying through the wilderness nothing was done and no step was taken except as God commanded or guided by the pillar of cloud and fire. On the part of Moses and Israel it was simply a matter of obedience. Concerning the cloud and its guidings and their obedience, see carefully chapter ix, 15-23.

29. Come thou with us and we will do thee good, for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel.

Thus said Moses to Hobab, the son of Raguel, or Rael, or Jethro, the father of Zipporah, Moses' wife (Ex. ii, 18; iii, 1). The Lord had truly spoken good concerning Israel, as in Ex. vi, 6-8, that wondrous sevenfold "I will," beginning and ending with "I, Jehovah." Moses believed the word of the Lord, and, having respect unto the recompense of the reward, he forsook all his prospects in Egypt and fully identified himself with Israel as their leader under God (Heb. xi, 24-27).

30. And he said unto him, I will not go, but I will depart to mine own land and to my kindred.

This was what Naomi afterward desired Ruth and Orpah to do, for she did not say to them, Come with me and I will do you good. Hobab saw no such prospect as opened up to the mind of Moses, and as far as appearances went he felt that he would be better off with his own people. It is difficult to many believers to esteem the reproach of Christ greater riches than the visible treasures of this world, yet Jesus and His sufferings now, with eternal glory hereafter, is the programme for the Christian.

31. Leave us not, I pray thee, forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes.

It looks as if, for the moment, Moses was forgetting God and His cloud and His unerring guidance. So unstable is man even at his best. We think of Simon Peter one moment confessing that Jesus was the Christ, the Son of the living God, and the next acting as Satan's mouthpiece to tempt the Lord to pity himself and turn from the cross (Matt. xvi, 16, 23).

32. And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what goodness the Lord shall do unto us the same will we do unto thee.

Moses now talks more correctly, for we are fully authorized to offer all the riches of God's grace and glory to all who will accept Him through Jesus Christ, but we are not authorized to seek either help or guidance from those who are not His. It will help us to remember that Jesus said concerning His own, "The glory which Thou gavest Me I have given them," and "as Thou hast sent Me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world."

(John xvii, 22, 28). See also John xvi, 15; 1 Cor. iii, 21-23.

33. And they departed from the mount of the Lord three days' journey, and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them in the three days' journey to search out a resting place for them.

This was infinitely better than the eyes or the wisdom of Hobab. How could Moses forget or seem to that God had led them out and would surely lead them all the way? How beautiful and all sufficient the promise in Ex. xxiii, 20, "Behold, I send an angel before thee to keep thee in the way and bring thee into the place which I have prepared."

34. And the cloud of the Lord was upon them by day when they went out of the camp.

The cloud was the visible symbol of the Lord's presence with them, and He by it was their guide, their light, their shield, their oracle, their avenger, their covering (Ex. xiii, 21; xiv, 19, 20, 24-28; Num. ix, 15-23; x, 34; xiv, 14); in fact, all they needed for all their journey.

35. And it came to pass when the ark set forward that Moses said, Rise up, Lord, and let Thine enemies be scattered and let them that hate Thee flee before Thee.

David, by the Spirit, afterward embodied this in at least two of the Psalms (lxxviii, 1, 2; cxxxii, 8). In Josh. iii, 13, the ark is called "the ark of the Lord, the Lord of all the earth," and before it Jordan was dried up and the walls of Jericho fell down. When the people relied upon God, who dwelt between the cherubim, their enemies fled before them, but when they relied upon the ark (which was only the symbol of His presence), then their enemies obtained the victory (1 Sam. iv, 3, 11).

36. And when it rested he said, Return, O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel.

Thus, whether on the march or at rest, the great reality of Israel's life was Jehovah in their midst. In proportion as they realized this and acted accordingly they prospered, but when they forgot Him they failed. It is so with us. He says, "Lo, I am with you always," and when we believe this and thus realize His presence (for the only way to realize anything in the spiritual life is to believe it and count on Him we have joy and peace and victory, but when we forget His presence we fail.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Aug. 17, "Gleanings From Many Fields"—Text, John iv, 35.

"Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest."

This is literally true at the present time in respect to people becoming Christians. The change has come rapidly and finds the church unprepared to gather in the harvest which is ripe for the ingathering. A new era has dawned, and we have not become accustomed to the new conditions, nor have the older methods of doing been properly adjusted to the new needs. Many indications point to hopeful times. Increasing attention to the worldwide needs and careful study of the best means of meeting the pressing demands on the church to give the gospel to the un-Christianized masses of men are the demands of the hour.

1. A study of the fields. Every church should give at least one service a month to a careful survey of the general work of the church outside its own parish lines. This can be done in a League service or in a more general meeting of the church. The old time monthly missionary prayer meeting on the evening of the first Sunday of the month can be modernized and made helpfully alive. The various mission fields of the church can be taken in succession. Begin with Japan. Let some one make a study of old Japan and in a brief talk or paper of ten minutes set forth the conditions of life in the land of the mikado previous to the visit of Commodore Perry in 1854. This should be followed by a concise review of the changes which have made the new Japan, and the new spirit of the nation under the leadership of Count Ito can be shown. The present place of Christian missions in the empire and the work already done will make a third topic. Where possible a map should be used, and places of importance can be pointed out during the progress of the addresses or at the close. Information sufficient for the preparation of such talks or papers can be had in any public library. This failing, a letter to the missionary secretaries at New York or the Epworth League headquarters, Chicago, will bring needed literature and the titles of a few books, which can be bought at a very small price. Some chapters have during the season just passed made use of a monthly meeting for a trip around the world, visiting the leading mission fields on the way. Several papers during the evening dealt with various topics of interest, such as routes of travel, public buildings, people, productions, local customs, history and religious conditions. At the close a choice collection of views illustrating the matters presented was shown by stereopticon. The illustrated papers and magazines now give so many fine illustrations of all parts of the world that it is not difficult to make a collection at small expense which will instruct and interest any company in this work.

2. How shall we increase our working power to harvest the fields?

Present the duty clearly in speech and paper for every one to lay aside regularly and proportionately of his income for God's work. Economize on personal adornment and pleasures and give more.

Bring home to the young men and women the pressing duty to fit themselves as preachers and teachers, and of others to do business so as to support these preachers and teachers.

Is Life Worth Living?

Life is worth living for the brute. He is not sensitive, and the lower he is in the scale of organized life the less his sensibility. But man, the summit of creature development, is sensitive. He is capable of suffering in both body and mind, and by his power to anticipate pain and sorrow he may and does prolong his sorrows. If man is only the highest of animate creatures, his eminence is purchased at too great a price. It may be questioned whether that eminence is worth the cost. But if man is something more and something else, if he is connected with other than the creatures below him, if he is a candidate for immortality, then there is no question—life is worth the cost. "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."—Rev. Joseph G. Wilson in Episcopal Recorder.

Religion.

There are two ways of lighting a dark room. One is to attack the darkness with candles. The other is to open the shutters and let in the light. When light comes, darkness goes. There are two ways of forming character. One is to conquer our sins. The other is to cultivate the opposite virtues. The latter plan is best because it is easier; the virtue replaces the sin.

Christianity is not a drill. It is life, full, free, radiant and rejoicing. What a young man should do is not to vex himself about his imperfections, but to fix his mind on the bright image of perfection; not to weary his soul with rules, but to live with Christ as one liveth with a friend. There is only one way to complete manhood, and that is fellowship with Jesus Christ.—John Watson.

Poverty and Unselfishness.

There was a bitterness in her poverty. She met, looked at it, often laughed at it, for it bound all the family together hand in hand. It taught endurance, self dependence and, best of all lessons, self renunciation.—L. Maria Mulock.

Consider.

Consider well your actions; What's done you can't recall; No use to pull the trigger, Then try to stop the ball.

—Lippincott's Magazine

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

A pure faith cannot abide in an empty conscience.—Rev. Frank Craue, People's Church, Chicago.

Man's Natural Attitude.

Man's natural attitude is that of perpetual seeker.—Rev. Dr. Harry Universalist, Worcester, Mass.

Destiny of the Race.

The destiny of the race depends on what men love and what they know. Rev. A. Roeder, Swedenborgian, Chicago, N. J.

The Spirit of Unity.

Unity is not necessarily identity; it is sympathy. There may be diversities of gifts, but there may be the same spirit; the spirit of love and Christian tolerance.—Rev. J. E. Adams, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

Christ's Word the Chart.

Every forward movement must be through Christ. His word is our chart. His spirit is our guide. His person our star. Our motto is, "Not a new gospel, but more gospel."—Rev. H. Van Dyke, Presbyterian, Princeton, N. J.

True Religion.

Religion does not consist in mere connection with the Christian church or in formal worship; it is connected with the soul of man and has respect to internal condition.—Rev. Dr. William A. Silvius, Presbyterian, Pittsburgh.

Great City a Wilderness.

St. John's wilderness of rock is a name for a great city. It is a wilderness, and there are no wilder beasts roaming among forests than some of the human monsters who live in the city.—Rev. Dr. Frank Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago.

The Love That Triumphs.

Every man who feels "I am my brother's keeper" carries the staff and bloodless weapon of a love which he shall triumph with the world as their mills grind selfishness in forms finer than dust.—Rev. Fred E. Hopkins, Congregationalist, Chicago.

Evil Effect of Overindulgence.

Avoid an overindulgent spending of money. It is not hard work, but indulgence, that ruins men. Real happiness consists not in increasing riches, but in limiting wants.—Rev. Arthur Thomas Peabody, Baptist, Chicago.

The Mission of the Church.

The church that knows its duty and has caught the spirit of its mission not trying to build itself up in separation from the world, but to put itself with its ideals, aims and principles into the world, that the world may be changed.—Rev. Charles R. Brown, Congregationalist, Oakland, Cal.

Must Begin With the Pulpit.
The church needs higher Christianity that must begin with the pulpit and show itself in the life and preaching of the preacher as well as in the pew. The preacher who would become a reformer must first reform himself. He must be sure that egotism, self-glory and self-gain do not get into his efforts.—Rev. Dr. William J. Holtzclaw, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

The American Paradise.
The homes of our American people are the American paradise. There are tendencies against the home life of our people. These tendencies should be counteracted. If we are to grow great as a nation as the years go on, the American homes must be the great centers of our patriotic and religious life. The good home is the paradise.—Rev. Dr. Pickard, Baptist, Cleveland, O.

Something Better Farther On.
Hope—what is it? The strange something which has made history and saved the world, for we read in the Bible to the Romans, "We are saved by hope." What is hope? A rational expectation of good as yet unrealized, something better farther on, from the morning of life to the setting of the sun; something better farther on.—Rev. A. Z. Conrad, Congregationalist, Worcester, Mass.

Ourselves Rather Than Our Gifts.
The hope and faith of the Christian are clothed in the robes of sympathy. There is no other dress for the gospel virtues. Without sympathy every grace is stark and unsightly. With the plainest face is resplendent, the sweetest voice is tender and sweet. The world is dying for self-abandoning love. It needs ourselves rather than our gifts.—Rev. Joseph Wilson, Presbyterian, Philadelphia.

Christ and the Golden Rule.
Many of Christ's sayings were new in form, but they were radiant with new meaning. He did not create a new man, but he revealed in man a new manhood, a new humanity. He did not claim originality for the Golden Rule. "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." But to these words he gave reality; he coined them anew in the mint of his life.—Rev. Percy Stickney Grant, Episcopal, New York.

The Philosophy of God.
God's philosophy of life is very simple. He made the body out of dust. He breathed the soul in from himself. To know the dust is science. To know God is religion. To know the dust is temporal. To know God is life eternal. I confess I do not know how Christ is both human and divine; I do not know how the two natures blend in Him; I do not know how the two wills are welded together; I cannot fathom the infinite; I cannot rise to its height. But better would my life be if I could? But I know Jesus Christ, for when his righteousness had settled upon my soul his sunlight awakened me to a new day, a new life.—Rev. Dr. Gardner F. Eldridge, Methodist, New Haven.

The temperance forces in Essex and King and Queen counties are active in their opposition to liquor licenses. Rev. F. Beale, of Indian Neck, has led the forces in three contests recently, and each time has won a victory.

Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

OBITUARY.

It is sad, indeed, to record the death of a dear friend, who, when last seen by the writer, was in perfect health and vigor, but not so sad as it might be were it not for the blessed words of the dear Jesus, who said, when on earth: "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die."

Maria Antionette the loved and only living child of Fenton and Fannie M. North, of Charlotte county, fell asleep in Jesus about 6 o'clock P. M. on the 26th of June, 1902, and went to join her little brother and sister in that beautiful heavenly home, where parting is no more.

She had been a sufferer from typhoid fever and its after-effects for nine weeks and two days, but was never heard to murmur or complain. Her trained nurse said she had never seen a more beautiful death.

For several days before she died she was deprived of the power of sight and speech, but a few moments before the end a lovely smile overspread her face, and she spoke and said: "Oh, the beautiful children!" and died without a struggle.

In the death of this noble girl the community, the Church and the Sunday school have suffered a serious loss. She will be sorely missed by all; for hers was an influence for good wherever she was known. She was a staunch friend, a faithful church and Sunday school worker, and the stay and comfort of her father and mother in their declining years. May the dear Lord comfort them in this their sad affliction, and give them grace to say, "Thy will be done."

It was beautiful to see the mutual devotion between her and three homely little motherless children whom she had taken to her heart and home. I don't wonder that she had a glimpse of those heavenly beings on her approach to the pearly gates, for all children loved her and seemed to look up to her.

Who knows but that those of her little friends who had gone before now lead the company of angels to bid her welcome to the heavenly home.

She said she was not afraid to die, but prayed to live to take care of her old father and mother. Why one so useful was taken in the prime of life we cannot tell, but God knows best, and does all things well.

May all of us who loved her so live that we may meet her in that better land, where there is no more sorrow nor parting.

A FRIEND.

Rev. R. H. Potts returned home last Friday from Belle Haven, Va., where he spent ten days with his father, Rev. Joseph E. Potts, who was very sick, but is now convalescing.—Suffolk Herald.

Rev. Dr. Newton, pastor of Trinity M. E. church, South, left this week for a three weeks' vacation. Dr. Newton has arranged to have his pulpit filled once each Sunday of his absence.—Salisbury Advertiser.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, D. D., pastor of Washington Street Methodist church, Petersburg, was visiting friends in Norfolk yesterday. He returned home last night.—Pilot.

Rev. E. J. Potts is holding very interesting revival services at Little Trinity church, on the Creighton road. Rev. Mr. Oyler, of Denny Street, preached last night.—Dispatch.

Mr. James E. Schoolfield, the well-known evangelist of Danville, has been ill at his home with the fever for the past three weeks. At this writing, July 31st, he is reported as being in a precarious condition. Let earnest prayers be offered that his valuable life be spared if it be His will.—Danville Methodist.

Rev. R. P. Lumpkin is having a large arbor built in Andrew Chapel churchyard, and will begin a revival there the second Sunday in August. This will be a union meeting of all the churches on the circuit. Rev. C. D. Crawley, of Mathews Circuit, is expected to assist the pastor. All-day services on Sunday.—Northern Neck News.

At the Laurel Street Methodist church Sunday night Miss Alpha Johnson took the place of her father, the Rev. H. E. Johnson, pastor of the church, and preached the sermon for the occasion. Her subject was "The Power of God and of the Holy Ghost," taken from a text in the Psalms of David. After the service many friends from the congregation, which was an unusually large one, gathered around the fair speaker to congratulate her.

Miss Johnson did not enter the pulpit, but stood at the chancel rail, and from the time she made her appearance until the close of the service she was listened to with the closest attention. Miss Johnson has labored as a missionary in the slums of Chicago for many years, but did not in her sermon once allude to her work. She was there to take her father's place, which she filled with entire satisfaction to all present. She preached a spiritual sermon, devoid of any sensation, just as any member of the Methodist Virginia Conference would have done on a similar occasion.—Times.

NEW ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE.

An Anti-Saloon League has been formed at Chesterfield Courthouse with Rev. Mr. Nettles, president, and Mrs. Clements, secretary. A committee of two was appointed to draft a constitution, to be submitted at the next meeting, when the other officers will be appointed. The formation of the League was at noon, when Dr. A. E. Owen, of Berkley, and Rev. W. W. Lear and Rev. Mr. Campbell made addresses.—Dispatch.

THE TENT MEETING.

Rev. George H. Wiley and Rev. James E. Cook have preached every night this week, except Tuesday night in the tent corner of Twentieth and Grace streets.

Rev. F. W. Troy, of Marshall Street Christian church, preached Tuesday night on "The Power of a Holy Life," and every person who heard him is anxious to hear him again. Mr. Troy will be engaged most of the summer out of the city, conducting the quiet hour services at conventions and revival meetings. He will spend a week with one of the leading New York churches during August.

There have been some remarkable conversions during the week. The power of the pure Gospel has changed the lives of a score of men, the church is being greatly strengthened, and the community benefited. One of the most healthful signs of these meetings is that the majority of those being helped into a better life are men of mature years.

Rev. Mr. Cook will preach every night next week.

Rev. J. H. Troy, of the North Baltimore Christian church, will speak at the men's meeting Sunday afternoon on "Christian Patriotism." It is expected that the tent will be crowded to hear this talented young man. Music by a male chorus and orchestra.

During the social half hour following lemonade will be furnished free. This service is in charge of the railroad department of the Young Men's Christian Association.—Dispatch.

PORTSMOUTH DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Portsmouth District Methodist Conference, which had been in session at Ebenezer church, Crittenden, Va., since Monday night, adjourned Thursday evening. There were in attendance something like twenty-eight preachers and thirty-eight lay delegates, aside from the crowd of visitors. The term was a very enjoyable one, and the members' pleasure was added to the hospitable manner in which they were entertained by the good folks thereabouts. Rev. W. C. Vaden was the presiding officer, with Rev. Dan Merritt secretary. Some of the things done were these:

On Tuesday there were reports from all the pastors. These covered the condition of the Sunday schools, the Epworth Leagues and the general state of the charges represented.

Addresses were made by President Blackwell, of Randolph-Macon; President James Cannon, Jr., of Blackstone, and Principal E. Sumter Smith, of Bedford Academy.

Sermons were preached by Rev. W. Crowder, Rev. J. R. Griffith, and Geo. I. McFaden.

LOVE FEAST.

Yesterday morning there was an 8 o'clock love feast. There were strong missionary addresses by Rev. E. H. Rawlings, Rev. V. W. Bargamin and Rev. N. B. Foushee, besides short talks on the same subject by other members.

DELEGATES CHOSEN.

After several ballots the following delegates and alternates were elected to represent the district at the annual Conference in Richmond: Lee Britt, Suffolk; John J. King, Portsmouth; John C. Parker, Franklin; P. G. Gilliam, Ebenezer.

Alternates—George L. Neville, Portsmouth; William D. Wood, Suffolk; J. I. Sebrell, Southampton county.

COMMITTEES NAMED.

The following committeemen were appointed to discuss several pertinent topics: E. H. Rawlings, missions; R. I. Potts, Epworth League; Lee Britt, orphanage; T. O. Edwards, Sunday schools; George L. Neville, finance.

There were sermons by J. L. Latham and W. Asbury Christian.

A prominent delegate said to-night a notable feature of the Conference was the ability shown by the young members of the clerical body.

Ebenezer is said to be one of the prettiest country churches at which the Conference ever met.—Norfolk Pilot.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Lynchburg District Conference, which has held its session here this week, has been the central interest, and attracted large congregations both at the business meetings and religious exercises. Rev. Paul Whitehead, D. D., the presiding elder of the district, presided. Rev. J. W. Stiff, of Memorial church, Lynchburg, was appointed secretary, and Henry C. Pfeiffer, assistant secretary. Many subjects of importance to Church advancement were discussed, of which that of education received the largest amount of consideration. Dr. W. W. Smith, chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system of schools, made a strong appeal for higher education as an equipment for life's duties and conflicts. Prof. Robert Emory Blackwell, the newly chosen president of Randolph-Macon College at Ashland, was present, and in an earnest appeal urged the demand for education in all the avocations of life, and spoke in behalf of the claims upon the Church of the college he represents. He made the statement that probably 75 per cent. of the students of Randolph-Macon College came, thoroughly prepared to enter the college classes, from the Randolph-Macon Academies at Bedford City and Front Royal. The remarkably large average of students of the Academy here, who have taken degrees, literary and professional, at universities and colleges, is a fact worthy of note, and a gratifying indication of the thoroughness of the curriculum and training of the school. The splendid career of the R. M. Woman's College at Lynchburg, the Vassar of the South, was mentioned in glowing terms.

Rev. Dr. J. Wiley Bledsoe made an earnest appeal for the Orphanage.

Very interesting reports from the various churches represented in the district were made, all showing a healthy and flourishing condition of growth. Among other interesting points in the Bedford report was the fact that since the stay of Rev. J. W. Shackford in Bedford circuit, the latter as pastor of the church in Bedford City, two commodious, comfortable and attractive parsonages have been built here through his efforts.

There were five candidates granted license to enter the ministry by the Conference; three—viz.: Henry C. Pfeiffer, J. W. Flizer, J. B. Hudson, were recommended for admission to the Virginia Conference, and two, J. A. Sweeney and W. E. Edwards, Jr., were recommended for license as local preachers.

The opening sermon of the Conference was delivered by Rev. J. B. Askew, of Trinity church, Lynchburg, Tuesday at noon. In the evening, Rev. J. T. Whitley, of Centenary church, Lynchburg, a former much beloved pastor of this church, preached to a large assemblage an earnest, impressive discourse from the text, "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully" or negligently. At the close of the service many friends went forward to greet him and express appreciation for the sermon. Wednesday at mid-day Rev. Dr. T. N. Potts, of Farmville, delivered an inspiring sermon, the theme of which was "Walk in the Light." In the evening every available space in the church was thronged to hear Rev. W. J. Young, D. D., of Court Street church, Lynchburg, who tenderly and eloquently spoke of the peace of God that passes understanding, emphasizing his utterances with forcible illustrations that appealed to every heart. His magnetism and earnestness left a deep impression upon all who heard him, and inspired a desire to attain such peace.

Rev. Tokio Kuquguima, a Japanese minister of the Church, who has been a student of Trinity College, N. C., preached Thursday evening, and the Conference adjourned.

The ministers and lay delegates were entertained by members of the Church and others, and their stay was much enjoyed by their hosts and hostesses.

A certain delegate stated that upon the last day he had found a chicken foot in a conspicuous place at the gate, and considered it a token that the Conference should adjourn incontinently.

Delegates and alternates were elected to represent the district at the Annual Conference in November: Delegates, Messrs. O. C. Rucker, D. J. Evans, W. C. Ivey and Dr. T. E. Moorman; alternates, Messrs. J. W. Elam, H. E. Barrow, D. J. Wilkerson and Prof. B. W. Arnold.—Lynchburg News.

MINISTERS' MEETING.

In the absence of both the president and vice-president, the Methodist preachers' meeting was presided over yesterday by Rev. Graham H. Lambeth, of Lekies Memorial church. Prayer was made by the Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder of the Portsmouth District.

Among the visitors were Rev. John C. Granbery, A. M., D. D., Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, and Rev. R. M. Chandler, formerly of Centenary church, Norfolk, but now pastor of Central church, Manchester, Va.

Bishop Granbery was most cordially received. He was granted the privileges of the floor. The Bishop said it was really a pleasure for him to be with his brethren of the ministry in Norfolk. He spoke most encouragingly of the prospects of the Church at large, and said that the outlook was more hopeful at present than at any period for a number of years in the past. There have been prosperous revivals in many directions within the bounds of the M. E. Church, South, and large numbers had been gathered into the Church through the faithful preaching of the "Word of Life." He said further, that the Church at all points was making an advance movement, and that it is now on a solid and excellent basis. He had the pleasure of listening to two able and exhaustive sermons by Rev. R. H. Bennett at Ashland, Va., Sunday week, which were greatly enjoyed by himself and the congregation. He spoke very tenderly of the death of Captain Richard Irby, late secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, and said that the Church had sustained a heavy loss in the death of this good man. He further said that the board of directors had not as yet elected a successor to Captain Irby, but that they would hold a meeting this week when the matter of electing a successor would claim the attention of the board. He hoped that in the wisdom of that body they would select a man worthy to take up and carry forward the work of the college so ably and successfully managed by Captain Irby. Bishop Granbery preached morning and night to large congregations at Epworth church Sunday and conducted a most delightful communion at the 11 o'clock service. He said his visit to Norfolk was an inspiration to him, and he should long remember the occasion as one of the most pleasant of his life.

Rev. W. C. Vaden gave a most interesting account of the recent Portsmouth District Conference, held at Crittenden, Va. He said that it was the largest Conference that he had attended for years, and a most harmonious session. The reports from the several charges on the district, on education, spiritual state of the Church, home and foreign missions, Bible cause, Epworth Leagues, financial condition of the several charges on the district and the temperance cause were intensely interesting and showed a most encouraging improvement over former years. He stated that three of the largest churches on the district would show an advance of twenty-five per cent. over and above all assessments, and that the several charges on the district will make reports to the Annual Conference that will show the Church up on all lines of Christian enterprise. The sermons delivered during the Conference were of a high order, and greatly edified those who heard them. The Conference was royally entertained by the Methodists at Crittenden. Mr. Vaden preached to large congregations at Main Street church, Suffolk, Sunday morning and night.

Rev. R. M. Chandler gave a very interesting account of the progress of Methodism in Richmond and Manchester. He said in the former city the Church was doing well along all lines and on the advance. He exhibited a handsome photograph of the new Central Methodist church in Manchester, which is completed with the exception of furnishing the auditorium with pews, which will be put in very shortly. The new edifice is one of the handsomest Methodist churches around Richmond, and will cost about $25,000.

Rev. C. L. Bane reported good congregations, to hear him Sunday morning and night at Cumberland Street Methodist church. He received two new members on profession of faith and four by certificate.

Rev. J. N. Latham reported pleasant services at Park View. His congregation at night was unusually large for the summer.

Rev. N. R. Smith held interesting services at Oaklette and Bethel churches. Preaching at the former church in the morning and at the latter in the afternoon. The people turned out well for the weather.

Rev. C. W. Cain preached at Centenary Sunday morning and the pastor, Rev. E. T. Dadmun, occupied the pulpit in the afternoon. There was a good attendance at both services.

Rev. J. B. Merritt conducted his usual services at the Seamen's Bethel and preached at Port Norfolk church at 11 A. M. and conducted the communion service.

Rev. E. J. Dwyer preached at Lamberts Point church at 11 A. M. Sunday and raised the necessary amount, $10, for a missionary library. At night the pastor, Rev. C. H. McGee, held a joint service at the Baptist church, and preached for the pastor, Rev. Geo. W. Cox, who is sick.

Rev. E. K. Odell had interesting services at the meeting held at Huntersville church Sunday.

Rev. W. P. Jordan preached to a fine congregation at McKendree church Sunday morning.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth preached morning and night at Lekies Memorial and conducted a most pleasant service at the morning hour.

Rev. W. T. Greene preached morning and night at Central church, and conducted the communion at the morning service.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt reported an excellent day at Port Norfolk.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian occupied his pulpit at Memorial church, Berkeley, preaching morning and night to large congregations.

Rev. W. R. Crowder preached to a large congregation at Denby's church Sunday morning.

The meeting was dismissed with the benediction by Bishop Granbery.—Virginia Pilot.

Talmage Sermon

Washington. In the following discourse, prepared by Dr. Talmage before his illness, a vivid glimpse of the splendors and glories of heavenly life is presented; text, Revelation viii, 1, "There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."

The busiest place in the universe is heaven. It is the center from which all good influences start; it is the goal at which all good results arrive. The Bible represents it as active with wheels and wings and orchestras and processions mounted or charioted. But my text describes a space when the wheels ceased to roll and the trumpets to sound and the voices to chant. The riders on the white horses reined in their charges. The doxologies were hushed and processions halted. The hand of arrest was upon all the splendors. "Stop, heaven!" cried an omnipotent voice, and it stopped. For thirty minutes everything celestial stood still. "There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."

From all we can learn it is the only time heaven ever stopped. It does not stop as other cities for the night, for there is no night there. It does not stop for a plague, for the inhabitant never says, "I am sick." It does not stop for bankruptcies, for its inhabitants never fail. It does not stop for impassable streets, for there are no fallen snows or sweeping freshets. What, then, stopped it for thirty minutes? Grotius and Professor Stuart think it was at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. Mr. Lord thinks it was in the year 311, between the close of the Diocletian persecution and the beginning of the wars by which Constantine gained the throne. But that was all a guess, though a learned and brilliant guess. I do not know when it was, and I do not care when it was, but of the fact that such an interregnum of sound took place I am certain. "There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."

And, first of all, we learn that God and all heaven then honored silence. The longest and widest dominion that ever existed is that over which stillness was queen. For an eternity there had not been a sound. World making was a later day occupation. For unimaginable ages it was a mute universe. God was the only being, and as there was no one to speak to there was no utterance. But that silence has all been broken up into worlds, and it has become a noisy universe. Worlds in upheaval, worlds in congelation, worlds in conflagration, worlds in revolution.

The Power of Silence.

If geologists are right—and I believe they are—there has not been a moment of silence since this world began its travels, and the crashing and the splitting and the uproar and the hubbub are ever in progress. But when among the supernals a voice cried, "Hush!" and for half an hour heaven was still, silence was honored. The full answer or silence many of us have yet to learn. We are told that when Christ was arraigned "he answered not a word." That silence was louder than any thunder that ever shook the world. Oftentimes when we are assailed and misrepresented the mightiest thing to say is to say nothing and the mightiest thing to do is to do nothing. Those people who are always rushing into print to get themselves set right accomplish nothing but their own chagrin. Silence! Do right and leave the results with God. Among the grandest lessons the world has ever learned are the lessons of patience taught by those who endured uncomplainingly personal or domestic or political injustice. Stronger than any bitter or sarcastic or revengeful answer is the patient silence.

The famous Dr. Morrison of Chelsea achieved as much by his silent patience as by his pen and tongue. He had asthma that for twenty five years brought him out of his couch at 2 o'clock each morning. His four sons and daughters dead, the remaining child by sunstroke made insane, the afflicted man once said, "At this moment there is not an inch of my body that is not filled with agony." Yet he was cheerful, triumphant, silent. Those who were in his presence said they felt as though they were in the gates of heaven. Oh, the power of patient silence! Aeschylus, the immortal poet, was condemned to death for writing something that offended the people. All the pleas in his behalf were of no avail until his brother uncovered the arm of the prisoner and showed that his hand had been shot off at Salamis. That silent plea liberated him. The loudest thing on earth is silence if it be of the right kind and at the right time. There was a quaint old hymn spelled in the old style and once sung in the churches:

The race is not forever got
By him who fastest runs
Nor the Battle by those people
That shoot with the longest guns.

My friends, the tossing sea of Galilee seemed most to offend Christ by the amount of noise it made, for he said to it, "Be still!" Heaven has been crowning kings and queens unto God for many centuries, yet heaven never stopped a moment for any such occurrence, but it stopped thirty minutes for the coronation of silence. "There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."

Heaven an Eventful Place.

Learn also from my text that heaven must be an eventful and active place from the fact that it could afford only thirty minutes of recess. There have been events on earth and in heaven that seemed to demand a whole day or whole week or whole year for celestial consideration. If Grotius was right and this silence occurred at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, that scene was so awful and so prolonged that the inhabitants of heaven could not have done justice to it in many weeks. After fearful besiegement of the two fortresses of Jerusalem, Antonia and Hippicus, had been going on for a long while, a Roman soldier, mounted on the shoulder of another soldier, hurled into the window of the temple a firebrand, and the temple was all aflame, and after covering many sacrifices to the holiness of God the building itself became a sacrifice to the rage of man. The hunger of the people in that city during the besiegement was so great that as some outlaws were passing a doorway and inhaled the odors of food they burst open the door, threatening the mother of the household with death unless she gave them some food, and she took them aside and showed them that it was her own child she was cooking for the gnarled repast. Six thousand priests were destroyed on Mount Zion because, the temple being gone, there was nothing for them to do. Six thousand people in one cloister were consumed. There were 1,100,000 dead according to Josephus. Grotius thinks that this was the cause of silence in heaven for half an hour. If Mr. Lord was right, and this silence was during the Diocletian persecutions, by which 844,000 Christians suffered death from sword and fire and banishment and exposure, why did not heaven listen throughout at least one of those awful years? No! Thirty minutes! The fact is that the celestial programme is so crowded with spectacle that it can afford only one recess in all eternity, and that for a short space. While there are great choruses in which all heaven can join, each soul there has a story of divine mercy peculiar to itself, and it must be a solo. How can heaven get through with all its recitatives, with all its cantatas, with all its grand marches, with all its victories? Eternity is too short to utter all the praise.

In my text heaven spared thirty minutes, but it will never again spare one minute. In worship in earthly churches where there are many to take part we have to counsel brevity, but how will heaven get on rapidly enough to let one hundred and forty-four thousand get through each with his own story and then one hundred and forty-four million and then one hundred and forty-four billion and then one hundred and forty-four trillion? Not only are all the triumphs of the past to be commemorated, but all the triumphs to come. Not only what we now know of God, but what we will know of him after everlasting study of the deific. If my text had said there was silence in heaven for thirty days, I would not have been startled at the announcement, but it indicates thirty minutes. Why, there will be so many friends to hunt up, so many of the greatly good and useful that we will want to see, so many of the inscrutable things of earth we will need explained, so many exciting earthly experiences we will want to talk over, and all the other spirits and all the ages will want the same, that there will be no more opportunity for cessation. How busy we will be kept in having pointed out to us the heroes and heroines that the world never fully appreciated the yellow fever and cholera doctors who died, not flying from their posts; the female nurses who faced pestilence in the lazarettos; the railroad engineers who stayed at their places in order to save the train, though they themselves perished. Hubert Goffin, the master miner, who, landing from the bucket at the bottom of the mine just as he heard the waters rush in and when one jerk of the rope would have lifted him into safety, put in the bucket a blind miner who wanted to go to his sick child and jerked the rope for him to be pulled up, crying, "Tell them the water has burst in and we are probably lost, but we will seek refuge at the other end of the right gallery," and then giving the command to the other miners till they digged themselves so near out that the people from the outside could come to their rescue. The multitudes of men and women who got no crown on earth we will want to see when they get their crown in heaven. I tell you heaven will have no more half hours to spare.

Besides that, heaven is full of children. They are in the vast majority. No child on earth who amounts to anything can be kept quiet half an hour, and how are you going to keep five hundred million of them quiet half an hour? You know heaven is much more of a place than it was when that recess of thirty minutes occurred. Its population has quadrupled, sextupled, centupled. Heaven has more on hand, more of rapture, more of knowledge, more of intercommunication, more of worship. The most thrilling place we have ever been in is stupid compared with that, and, if we now have no time to spare, we will then have no eternity to spare. Silence in heaven only half an hour!

That Immortal Half Hour.

My subject also impresses me with the immortality of a half hour. That half hour mentioned in my text is more widely known than any other period of the calendar of heaven. None of the whole hours of heaven is measured off, none of the years, none of the centuries. Of the millions of ages past and the millions of ages to come not one is especially measured off in the Bible. But the half hour of my text is made immortal. The only part of eternity that was ever measured by earthly timepiece was measured by the minute hand of my text. Oh, the half hour! They decide everything. I am not asking what you will do with the years or months or days of your life, but what of the half hours? Tell me the history of your half hours and I will tell you the story of your whole life on earth and the story of your whole life in eternity. The right or wrong things you can think in thirty minutes, the right or wrong things you can say in thirty minutes, the right or wrong things you can do in thirty minutes are glorious or baleful, inspiring or desperate.

Look out for the fragments of time. They are pieces of eternity. It was the half hours between shoeing horses that made Elihu Burritt the learned blacksmith, the half hours between professional calls as a physician that made Abercrombie the Christian philosopher, the half hours between his duties as schoolmaster that made Simon P. Chase chief justice, the half hours between shoe lasts that made Henry Wilson vice president of the United States, the half hours between canalboats that made James A. Garfield president. The half hour a day for good books or bad books, the half hour a day for prayer or indolence, the half hour a day for helping others or blasting others, the half hour before you go to business and the half hour after you return from business—these make the difference between the scholar and the ignoramus, between the Christian and the infidel, between the saint and the demon, between triumph and catastrophe, between heaven and hell. The most tremendous things of your life and mine were certain half hours. The half hour when in the personage of a country minister I resolved to become a Christian then and there, the half hour when I decided to become a preacher of the gospel, the half hour when I first realized that my son was dead, the half hour when I stood on the top of my house in Oxford street and saw our church burn, the half hour in which I entered Jerusalem, the half hour in which I stopped on Mount Calvary, the half hour in which I stood on Mars hill and about ten or fifteen other half hours are the chief times of my life. You may forget the name of the exact year or most of the important events of your existence, but those half hours like the half hour of my text, will be immortal. I do not query what you will do with the twentieth century, do not query what you will do with this year, but what will you do with the next half hour? Upon that hinge your destiny, and during that some of you will receive the gospel and make complete surrender, and during that others of you will make final and full

WASHINGTON LETTER.

From Our Regular Correspondent.
July 31, 1902.

Acting under the provisions of the last military appropriation bill, the Secretary of War has issued instructions for the organization of a board of army officers to determine on the locations and plans for the new army canteens, for which purpose $500,000 is set aside. Present plans contemplate that these "canteens" shall contain reading and amusement rooms, a library and a gymnasium and a lunch room. Their object is to afford the enlisted men every opportunity for innocent amusement and self-culture. Laudable as these purposes are, there is manifest a spirit of dissatisfaction among the army officers at the War Department because of the provision that no liquor shall be sold in the canteens. However, General Ludington assured your correspondent that substantial buildings would be erected and everything possible would be done to make the canteens attractive. With the funds at hand there is no reason why they cannot fulfill every purpose for which they are intended, and failure to make them do so will be due to the half-hearted spirit with which certain officers are inclined to view the "temperance canteen."

Some recent rioting at a little town called Rosslyn, in which the soldiers from Fort Myer and the tough element of the town were involved, has been made the text for many denunciations of the army canteens as now conducted. With a view to ascertaining the facts your correspondent visited Rosslyn, which is a suburb lying between Washington and Fort Myer, Va. The town, being just beyond the jurisdiction of the Washington police, is a hot-bed of disorder. It is made up of a brewery, saloons and gambling dens. The soldiers are obliged to pass through this town in order to get to Washington, but there was no evidence that the saloons had increased since the old-fashioned canteen at the fort was abolished. In fact, one saloon keeper has gone out of business since that event, and all of them, not knowing the purpose of your correspondent's inquiries, stated that they had never known business to be so dull. The occasion of the riot referred to proved to have been the refusal of a certain dance hall proprietor to admit the soldiers to a dance, which precipitated a fight, during which a soldier was shot. Later the soldiers returned to Rosslyn and wrecked the saloon and hall. No evidence could be found to warrant the assertion that the trouble might have been avoided had the old-fashioned canteen still been in existence.

The officers of the Army Department of the Y. M. C. A. are rejoicing over a donation of $15,000 received from Mr. T. S. Gladding, of New York, for the erection of a Y. M. C. A. building at the army post at Sandy Hook, N. J. In addition to the erection of a handsome building, the fund will enable the Association to pursue a comparatively new line of work, which consists of encouraging the enlisted men to study with a view to taking examinations for commissions. Every assistance will be rendered those men who are sufficiently ambitious to pursue the necessary course of study. Secretary Root has also ordered the tearing down of the Hygeia Hotel, at Old Point Comfort, which stands on the Fort Monroe reservation, and sufficient ground on the present site of the hotel will be set aside to permit of the erection of a Y. M. C. A. building for similar purposes at that post. The funds for the Fort Monroe building were donated some time ago by Miss Helen Gould, but no space could be allotted for the building until the order for the destruction of the hotel was issued. The good results which will be effected by this class of institutions are incalculable.

The most appalling reports are reaching Washington in regard to the opium traffic in Hawaii. According to these reports, the laws governing the traffic became obsolete with annexation to the United States, and, as a result, the evil has grown apace. Opium is for sale everywhere, and the smoking shows a fearful increase. It is said that the amount of opium being imported into Hawaii will very nearly equal the total importation into the United States. The members of the Anti-Saloon League in Hawaii are trying to discover means by which they can at least curtail the traffic, but are working against great odds. Special legislation is needed, and the trade in the drug is so profitable that such legislation is hard to secure. It is a lamentable fact that most of the opium imported comes from the United States, where it is received from the Orient, and then refined and put into mercantile form. If any practicable means of eliminating the evil can be discovered the Anti-Saloon League in Washington and the Reform Bureau will lend all possible assistance in the movement.

Considerable adverse comment has appeared in the daily papers on the order issued by the Post-Office Department requiring the opening on Sunday of the post-office at Oyster Bay. Secretary Cortelyou, who is now in Washington, tells your correspondent that Mr. Roosevelt had nothing to do with this, and, in fact, knew nothing about it until after the order went into effect. The order was issued at the earnest solicitation of the newspaper correspondents stationed at that place. The office, by the provisions of the order, is open for one hour after services in the churches are concluded.

The non-contiguous territory of the United States now furnishes a market for $50,000,000 worth of the products of her people. A statement just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics shows that the shipments from the United States to its non-contiguous territory during the fiscal year just ended have been, in round terms, as follows:

To the Hawaiian Islands	$20,000,000
To Alaska	15,000,000
To Porto Rico	10,000,000
To the Philippines	5,000,000

This is practically five times as much as the exports to those territories in 1897, when one of them, except Alaska, was under the American flag. The exports to Porto Rico in the fiscal year 1897, for example, were $1,988,888, and in the fiscal year 1902 they were over $10,000,000, the exact figures for eleven months being more than $9,500,000; and while the figures for the twelfth month have not been received, it is certain that the total will exceed $10,000,000. To Hawaii our exports in the fiscal year 1897 were $4,690,075, and for the fiscal year 1902 the best estimate of the customs authorities is, in round terms, $20,000,000. Exact figures of the shipments to Hawaii are not at present available, but it is known that the shipments from Hawaii to the United States during the year will amount to about $23,000,000, and it is believed that the estimate of $20,000,000 for our shipments to the Hawaiian Islands is a conservative one. To the Philippine Islands our exports in the fiscal year 1897 were $94,597, and in the fiscal year 1902 will be over $5,000,000, exclusive of shipments made by the government for use of its troops or other officers in the islands. To Alaska, the best estimate obtainable of the shipments in 1897 is $3,924,000, while those for the fiscal year just ended are estimated by the customs authorities at $15,000,000. This would make the grand total of shipments from the United States to its non-contiguous territory $50,000,000, exclusive of goods sent by the Government for use of the army or of its officials.

In imports from the islands the increase has not been as great as that in exports. The total value of our imports from Porto Rico in the fiscal year 1897 was $2,181,024, and in 1902 will be about $8,000,000. From the Hawaiian Islands the imports in the fiscal year 1897 were $13,687,799, and the total for 1902 will be about $23,000,000. From the Philippines the imports in the fiscal year 1897 were $4,383,740, and for 1902 the total will be over $7,000,000. The value of merchandise, including gold and silver, received from Alaska in 1897 is estimated at $5,000,000, and for 1902 about $15,000,000, making the total imports of 1897 from Porto Rico, Hawaii, the Philippines and Alaska about $25,000,000, while the total for the year 1902 will be about $50,000,000.

The Bureau of Statistics has just received its first record, under the new law, of shipments to Alaska. Formerly no statistical record was made of the shipments to and from Alaska, which was a customs district of the United States, and treated as such in the commercial reports of the custom houses. During the last session of Congress, however, a law was enacted applying to trade between the United States and its non-contiguous territory, the provisions of the law relating to the collection of statistics of foreign commerce, and this will enable a complete record of the movements of merchandise between the United States and its non-contiguous territory. It is in compliance with this law that the first record of the shipments to Alaska is now in the hands of the Bureau of Statistics. The shipments from Seattle alone during the month of June amounted to $774,000. Among the more important articles shipped from the United States to Alaska were cattle, horses, flour, oats, railway cars, coal, eggs, gunpowder, hay, builders' hardware, machinery, fresh beef, milk, refined sugar, and vegetables.

THE CHAUTAUQUA.

Chautauqua, N. Y., July 26, 1902.

Chautauqua is enjoying a season of great prosperity. As the August programme approaches thousands of visitors are crowding in to the famous summer town. Almost every State is represented, and the attendance is pressing close to the highwater mark of "Pan-American" year. The two thousand students in the summer schools are busily engrossed in class work, while the New York State Institute records the largest enrollment in its history.

It is rare that a speaker is received with more enthusiasm than Booker T. Washington was accorded in the great Chautauqua amphitheatre. His voice was at first quite indistinct, and the whole audience leaned forward to catch his words, but soon he filled all the corners of the amphitheatre and there was no difficulty. It was impossible to overlook the wonderful tact of the man and the reasonableness of his plea. There was no bitterness in his references to the past. He rather strove to show how by uplifting his own race the white race would be benefited as well.

The great choir at Chautauqua has been doing excellent work under the direction of Mr. Alfred Hallam, of New York city. Mr. Hallam has succeeded in bringing out all the power of the chorus, and developing in a wonderfully short time all the resources of his singers. As all speakers and singers know, the amphitheatre is a great test of power and carrying quality, and the way in which Mr. Hallam has surmounted these natural difficulties is quite unusual.

The crowded tiers of seats at the grand concert Wednesday afternoon was ample proof of the popularity these entertainments enjoy. Mr. Bowman, tenor, and Mr. Speaks, basso, both did very satisfactory work. Mrs. Sheffield, of Chicago, the soprano, has a voice which adequately fills the amphitheatre, and its quality is pleasantly characteristic. Mrs. Eggleston, the contralto, seems especially fortunate in her choice of songs, her ballads especially suiting to the tastes of her audience. Mr. Sherwood played the Chopin Ballade in A flat, with all the fury and poesy of the Pole himself, while the work of Mr. Marcossou called forth the usual enthusiasm.

Friday's concert comprised exclusively American compositions. Among the other numbers was the "Thanksgiving Chorus," written at the close of the Spanish-American war by F. W. Surrence, of Philadelphia. It closes with the national anthem, accompanied with a stately octave passage in the bass, and aroused so much enthusiasm at its last performance that it will be repeated.

The children's chorus gave a short prelude Tuesday night. The girls predominate in this, and one loses much of the electric quality of young boy's voices, but this is made up by Mr. Hallam's perfect control of their performance. The amount of tone produced by the children's voices was quite astonishing, and due, largely, to their judicious direction. They sang, among other things, an exquisite bit of melody called "The Star."

The Sunday music will be of especial excellence. Among the choruses prepared are "From Thy Love As a Father," from Gunod's Redemption; "Gloria Patri," a choral march, and Barnby's "The Lord is King." The soloists will be Mrs. Sheffield, soprano; Mrs. Eggleston, contralto; Mr. Bowman, tenor, and Mr. Speaks, basso.

All Chautauqua is looking forward with much interest to the production of Mr. Henry B. Vincent's new oratorio, "The Prodigal Son," which, being one of the first performances of that work, will be the musical event of the season. Meanwhile chorus and orchestra are rehearsing daily, and are quite enthusiastic over the work.

Among the special features of the programme of Chautauqua for August is a week to be devoted to the special discussion of the advance of the Labor Movement throughout the United States. The Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, will preside at a series of conferences to be conducted in the afternoon of each day. There have been invited to be present representative employers and employees of New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio. Prominent employers and strong representatives of the Labor Movement, as well as men making a thorough study of the social questions involved, will be present at these conferences and deliver addresses throughout the week.

August 5th President Wm. R. Harper, of the University of Chicago, will discuss Industrial Education and the University.

August 6th the Hon. Frank P. Sargent, Commissioner of Immigration and late Grand Master of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, will talk on the labor movement. Mr. John Mitchell, President of the United Mine Workers of America, will deliver an address on organized labor on August 7th. Col. Wright will conduct a symposium and general discussion on August 8th. The co-operation of the national leaders in the movement for arbitration and settlement of strikes has been secured. All of the discussions will be interesting and helpful to those who are fortunate enough to be present at that time.

an rejection of the past and a new and urgent and impassioned of life eternal. Oh, that the next half hour might be the most glorious thirty minutes of your earthly existence!

Far back in history a great geographer stood with a sailor looking at a globe that represented our planet, and he pointed to a place on the globe where he thought there was an undiscovered continent. The undiscovered continent was America. The geographer who pointed where he thought there was a new world was Martin Behaim and the sailor to whom he showed it was Columbus. This last was not satisfied till he had picked that gem out of the sea and set it in the crown of the world's geography. O ye who have been sailing up and down the rough seas of sorrow and sin, let me point out to you another continent—yea, another world—that you may yourself find, a rapturous world, and that is the world a half hour of which we now study! Oh, set sail for it! Here is the ship and here are the compasses. In other words, make this half hour the grandest half hour of your life and become a Christian. Pray for a regenerated spirit. Louis XIV., while walking in the garden at Versailles, met Mansard, the great architect, and the architect took off his hat before the king. "Put on your hat," said the king, "for the evening is damp and cold." And Mansard, the architect, the rest of the evening kept on his hat. The dukes and marquises, standing with bare heads before the king, expressed their surprise at Mansard, but the king said, "I can make a duke or a marquis, but only God can make a Mansard." And I say to you, my hearers, only God by his convicting and converting grace can make a Christian, but he is ready this very half hour to accomplish it.

"Forever and Ever."

Again, my text suggests a way of studying heaven so that we can better understand it. The word "eternity" that we can handle so much is an immeasurable world. Knowing that we could not understand that word, the Bible uses it only once. We say "forever and ever." But how long is "forever and ever?" I am glad that my text puts under our eye heaven for thirty minutes. As when you see a great picture, you put a sheet of paper into a scroll and look through it or join your forefinger to your thumb and look through the circle between, and the picture becomes more intense so this masterpiece of heaven by St. John is more impressive when we take only thirty minutes of it at a time. Now, we have something that we can come nearer to grasping, and it is a quiet heaven. When we discourse about the multitudes of heaven, it must be almost a nervous shock to those who have all their lives been crowded by many people and who want a quiet heaven. For the last thirty-five years I have been much of the time in crowds and under public scrutiny and amid excitements, and I have sometimes thought for a few weeks after I reach heaven I would like to go down in some quiet part of the realm, with a few friends, and for a little while try comparative solitude. Then there are those whose hearing is so delicate that they get no satisfaction when you describe the crash of the eternal orchestra, and they feel like saying, as a good woman in Hudson, N. Y., said after hearing me speak of the mighty chorus of heaven, "That must be a great heaven, but what will become of my poor head?" Yes, this half hour of my text is a still experience. "There was silence in heaven for half an hour."

A Glimpse of the King's Palace.

You will find the inhabitants all at home. Enter the King's palace and take only a glimpse, for we have only thirty minutes for all heaven. "Is that Jesus?" "Yes." Just under the hair along his forehead is the mark of a wound made by a bunch of twisted brambles, and his foot on the throne has on the round of his instep another mark of a wound made by a spike, and a scar on the palm of the right hand and a scar on the palm of the left hand. But what a countenance! What a smile! What a grandeur! What a loveliness! What an overwhelming look of kindness and grace! Why, he looks as if he had redeemed a world! But come on, for our time is short. Do you see that row of palaces? That is the Apostolic row. Do you see that long reach of architectural glories? That is Martyr row. Do you see that immense structure? That is the biggest house in heaven; that is "the house of many mansions." Do you see that wall? Shade your eyes against its burning splendor, for that is the wall of heaven, jasper at the bottom and amethyst at the top. See this river rolling through the heart of the great metropolis? That is the river concerning which those who once lived on the banks of the Hudson or the Alabama or the Rhine or the Shannon say, "We never saw the like of this for clarity and sheen." That is the chief river of heaven—so bright, so wide, so deep. But you ask, "Where are the asylums for the old?" I answer, "The inhabitants are all young." "Where are the hospitals for the lame?" "They are all agile." "Where are the infirmaries for the blind and deaf?" "They all see and hear." "Where are the almshouses for the poor?" "They are all multimillionaires." "Where are the inebriate asylums?" "Why, there are no saloons." "Where are the graveyards?" "Why, they never die." Pass down those boulevards of gold and amber and sapphire and see those interminable streets built by the Architect of the universe into homes, over the threshold of which sorrow never steps and out of whose windows faces, once pale with earthly sickness, now look rubicund with immortal health.

"Oh, let me go in and see them!" you say. No, you cannot go in. There are those who would never consent to let you come out again. You say, "Let me stay here in this place where they never sin, where they never suffer, where they never part." No, no! Our time is short, our thirty minutes are almost gone. Come on! We must get back to earth before this half hour of heavenly silence breaks up, for in your mortal state you cannot endure the pomp and splendor and resonance when this half hour of silence is ended. The day will come when you can see heaven in full blast, but not now. I am now only showing you heaven at the duldest half hour of all the eternities. Come on! There is something in the celestial appearance which makes me think that the half hour of silence will soon be over. Yonder are the white horses being hitched to chariots, and yonder are seraphs fingering harps as if about to strike them into symphony, and yonder are conquerors taking down from the blue halls of heaven the trumpets of victory. Remember we are mortal yet and cannot endure the full roll of heavenly harmonies and cannot endure even the silent heaven for more than half an hour. Hark! The clock in the tower of heaven begins to strike, and the half hour is ended. Descend! Come back! Come down till your work is done. Shoulders a little longer your burdens. Fight a little longer your battles. Weep a little longer your griefs.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more help-ful

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Editorial.

Rev. W. B. Holcomb will be at the Amissville camp-meeting August 8th-20th, and will go from there to the Madison camp for the latter part of the meeting.

The Executive Committee of Randolph-Macon elected Dr. B. F. Lipscomb as secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Captain Richard Irby. Dr. Lipscomb at first declined to accept the position, but the committee met again and were so impressed by his eminent qualifications for the position, that they refused to accept his answer as final, and pressed upon him so strongly the reason for their choice, that he accepted, and will enter upon his duties at once.

It is not necessary to say anything as to the wisdom of this selection. It has been received with great satisfaction all over the Conference. Dr. Lipscomb has the confidence of his brethren, and will receive their cordial and united support.

J. E. SCHOOLFIELD.

The death of Bro. James E. Schoolfield last week was a shock to the Church. He had just reached the prime of life, being only 52 years, and his best days seemed to be before him. He sincerely mourned by thousands of our people, who had listened to his earnest appeals for a higher and more consecrated life. The editor was thrown with Bro. Schoolfield a number of times, and attended several revival meetings conducted by him. He was a man who entered upon the work because he felt assured that God had given him a message. He preached therefore with great confidence in the blessing of God upon his work. The fact that he gave up in large measure his secular business to preach and do the work of an evangelist made him an interesting figure to the people, and they came to hear him somewhat on that account at first. But his earnestness and sincerity soon made their impression, and the numbers attending upon his preaching increased from day to day, until in many communities where he held meetings business was suspended and virtually the whole community went to hear the preaching of the Word. The great thought in all his preaching was "Applied Christianity." Not saying, but doing; not profession, but conduct, to show men that you were a follower of Jesus, not by words, but by deeds—this was the thought that he pressed home upon his hearers. He did not fail to stress repentance, faith, pardon and assurance of personal salvation. He was a good evangelist, who wrought well for his day and generation. He was highly esteemed by his fellow-townsmen, and a great crowd attended the funeral services, which were held at Main-Street church, Danville, of which he had been a useful member for many years.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

It is understood in all quarters that E. H. Stahlman has sued the Nashville Daily News for libel. What the News has been saying about the Major, I know not. The Major having made one hundred thousand dollars by lobbying the claim of the M. E. Church, South, through Congress, has money to law with; and since the meeting of our General Conference and its action he feels that he deserves some consideration at the hands of newspaper scribblers. The Major has character that is worth taking care of. He has neatly outwitted the United States Senate; he is a member of the M. E. Church, South, in good standing; he is an honored member of McKenree church, Nashville; he is one of the four hundred; and you might as well touch a live wire as to join issue with him. Instead of being abused, he ought to be held up as a model to be imitated by our boys and young men. The News is not to be pitied. It will get no sympathy from us Southern Methodists; it has touched the apple of our eye. Amen, higgaiion, selah!

Dr. Steel speaks kindly of Dr. Hoss. This is magnanimous, as Dr. Hoss and Dr. Steel have been on different sides of several questions; and as they represent different elements in the Church. Steel is decidedly democratic and plebian in his instincts and sentiments. If he had trained with the aristocratic element, he might have gone to the top, he might have been anything he wished. With his genius, and with sufficient policy, his success would have been assured. Dr. Hoss has belonged to the aristocratic element, so to speak, and yet a kinder and more generous man you seldom see. I know of no man of whom I could ask a favor with greater certainty of receiving it. Dr. Hoss is in full sympathy with the Methodist Episcopal system. He is a sample of what mountain-bred brain, much reading, with a prodigious memory, prayer and a will for work can do for a man. He can read more, think more, enjoy society more than any man I know of. From his social habits you would infer that he never reads; from his attainments, you would infer that he is recluse. He is wonderfully versatile.

Where Bishop Hoss will locate, I know not; but a Bishop should locate in a city, and one that is a railroad centre. He would be heartily welcomed in Knoxville or Chattanooga. I wish him a long and useful official career.

Talking of democracy and aristocracy in the Church reminds me we have these things in the American politics. Jefferson was a democrat, John Q. Adams was an aristocrat. We have had two political parties in the country from the adoption of the Federal Constitution to the present. The aristocratic party is the party of money, of the banks, of the syndicates, of the trusts. The democratic party is the party of the people. I do not mean the Democratic party; for the organized parties are not always what their names would indicate. There are men in the so-called Democratic party that have nothing in common with the people; and there are men in the Republican party who are as imperialistic as the Czar of Russia.

A poor man said to me the other day: "Doctor, the legislation of the country is all in the interest of the rich and against the poor." I think I replied correctly when I said: "Sir, the poor are largely in the majority. Then, why don't they run the country? Why don't they elect the legislators and secure such laws as they desire? If the poor men of the country would inform themselves, act in concert, and quit selling out to the rich, they could have things their own way. But as long as poor men sell their votes at a dollar a head, they will be the mere serfs of the rich."

If the masses were intelligent, incorruptible and patriotic, there would be no syndicates, trusts and billionaires in the country; and no slums, no squalor, and no lazzaroni. Votes would not be bought and sold, legislators and courts would not be bought and sold.

The men that befriend the people get little or no thanks from them. Jesus was a friend of the people, the friend of sinners; and yet they joined in the cry: "Crucify Him!" The commoner, Henry Clay, could not secure enough votes to place him in the Presidential chair. Bryan will never be President. The bosses will not forgive him, and the masses have no true appreciation of their friends and advocates.

He that espouses the cause of the masses, must look for his reward in a good conscience and the well-done of God.

Morristown, Tenn., August 5, 1902.

FROM BRO. HOBDAY.

I want to thank you for your issue of the 10th instant. It is the first plain statement of the Presiding Elder question I have seen. Was more than glad to see the report of the speeches of Bros. Reed and Lipscomb, and that the Church at large is at last hearing the Virginia Conference is being improved upon. I quoted your article: "Men who voted to make no change in the law expressed astonishment and decided disapproval when told that in our Conference men were appointed twelve, sixteen and twenty years, but said that they did not think a law should be made for a few Conferences. That the Conference itself should take it in hand, and express itself in such a way that no preacher would be willing to receive the appointment, unless compelled to do by the Bishop." I do not see how we can give plainer expression to our wishes than we have. These have been, and are being disregarded. But the above quotation suggests a new way. While they do not think a law should be made for a few Conferences, will it not be well at the next General Conference to enact a law permitting each Annual Conference to adjust its internal affairs to suit itself? We can easily do this, and not infringe upon any one's rights. Congress has its statute on interstate traffic, and under this the States can and do arrange this matter for their good, as they see it. So we can let the appointing power remain with the Bishop, but let each Conference say how long the same men may be appointed. Surely no sensible person will claim that the forbidding the appointment of ten or twelve men, but of more than two hundred, is a limitation of power, that will hamper the presiding officer, or injure the interests of the Church. Since the adjournment of the General Conference I have seen in

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

Craig took the violin, and at the first note I knew he was no ordinary player. I did not recognize the music, but it was soft and thrilling and got in by the heart till every one was thinking his tenderest and saddest thoughts.

After he had played two or three exquisite bits he gave Campbell his violin, saying, "Now, 'Lochaber,' Lachlan."

Without a word Lachlan began, not "Lochaber"—he was not ready for that yet—but "The Flowers o' the Forest" and from that wandered through "Auld Robin Gray" and "The Land o' the Leal," and so got at last to that most soul subduing of Scottish laments, "Lochaber No More." At the first strain his brother, who had thrown himself on some blankets behind the fire, turned over on his face, feigning sleep. Sandy McNaughton took his pipe out of his mouth and sat up straight and stiff, staring into vacancy, and Graeme, beyond the fire, drew a short, sharp breath. We had often sat, Graeme and I, in our student days, in the drawing room at home, listening to his father waiting out "Lochaber" upon the pipes, and I well knew that the awful minor strains were now eating their way into his soul.

Over and over again the highlander played his lament. He had long since forgotten us and was seeing visions of the hills and lochs and glens of his far-away native land and making us, too, see strange things out of the dim past. I glanced at old man Nelson and was startled at the eager, almost piteous, look in his eyes, and I wished Campbell would stop. Mr. Craig caught my eye and, stepping over to Campbell, held out his hand for the violin. Lingeringly and lovingly the highlander drew out the last strain and silently gave the minister his instrument.

Without a moment's pause and while the spell of "Lochaber" was still upon us the minister, with exquisite skill, fell into the refrain of that simple and beautiful camp meeting hymn, "The Sweet By and By." After playing the verse through once he sang softly the refrain. After the first verse the men joined in the chorus, at first timidly, but by the time the third verse was reached they were shouting with throats full open, "We shall meet on that beautiful shore." When I looked at Nelson, the eager light had gone out of his eyes, and in its place was a kind of determined hopelessness, as if in this new music he had no part.

After the voices had ceased Mr. Craig played again the refrain, more and more softly and slowly. Then, laying the violin on Campbell's knees, he drew from his pocket his little Bible and said:

"Men, with Mr. Graeme's permission, I want to read you something this Christmas eve. You will all have heard it before, but you will like it none the less for that."

His voice was soft, but clear and penetrating, as he read the eternal story of the angels and the shepherds and the wise, and as he read a slight motion of the hand or a glance of an eye made us see, as he was seeing, that whole radiant drama. The wonder, the timid joy, the tenderness, the mystery of it all, were borne in upon us with overpowering effect. He closed the book and in the same low, clear voice went on to tell us how, in his home years ago, he used to stand on Christmas eve listening in thrilling delight to his mother telling him the story, and how she used to make him see the shepherds and hear the sheep bleating near by, and how the sudden burst of glory used to make his heart jump.

"I used to be a little afraid of the angels, because a boy told me they were ghosts, but my mother told me better, and I didn't fear them any more. And the Baby, the dear little Baby—we all love a baby."

There was a quick, dry sob. It was from Nelson.

"I used to peek through under to see the little one in the straw and wonder what things swaddling clothes were. Oh, it was all so real and beautiful!"

He paused, and I could hear the men breathing.

"But on Christmas eve," he went on in a lower, sweeter tone, "there was no one to tell me the story, and I grew to forget it and went away to college and learned to think that it was only a child's tale and was not for men. Then bad days came to me, and worse, and I began to lose my grip of myself, of life, of hope, of goodness, till one black Christmas, in the slums of a far-away city, when I had given up all and the devil's arms were about me, I heard the story again, and as I listened, with a bitter ache in my heart, for I had put it all behind me, I suddenly found myself peeking under the shepherd's arms with a child's wonder at the Baby in the straw. Then it came over me like great waves that his name was Jesus, because it was he that should save men from their sins. Save! Save! The waves kept beating upon my ears, and before I knew I had called out, 'Oh, can he save me?' It was in a little mission meeting on one of the side streets, and they seemed to be used to that sort of thing there, for no one was surprised, and a young fellow leaned across the aisle to me and said, 'Why, you just bet he can!' His surprise that I should doubt, his bright face and confident tone, gave me hope that perhaps it might be so. I held to that hope with all my soul, and, stretching up his arms and with a quick glow in his face and a little break in his voice, 'he hasn't failed me yet, not once, not once!'"

He stopped short, and I felt a good deal like making a fool of myself, for in those days I had not made up my mind about these things. Graeme, poor old chap, was gazing at him with a sad yearning in his dark eyes; big Sandy was sitting very stiff and staring harder than ever into the fire; Baptiste was trembling with excitement; Blaney was openly wiping the tears away. But the face that held my eyes was that of old man Nelson. It was white, nerve, hungry looking, his sunken eyes burning, his lips parted as if to cry.

The minister went on. "I didn't mean to tell you this, men. It all came over me with a rush. But it is true, every word, and not a word will I take back. And, what's more, I can tell you this—what he did for me he can do for any man, and it doesn't make any difference what's behind him, and," leaning slightly forward and with a little thrill of pathos vibrating in his voice, "oh, boys, why don't you give him a chance at you? Without him you'll never be the men you want to be, and you'll never get the better of that that's keeping some of you now from going back home. You know you'll never go back till you're the men you want to be." Then, lifting up his face and throwing back his head, he said, as if to himself, "Jesus—he shall save his people from their sins," and then, "Let us pray."

Graeme leaned forward with his face in his hands; Baptiste and Blaney dropped on their knees; Sandy, the Campbells and some others stood up. Old man Nelson held his eyes steadily on the minister.

Only once before had I seen that look on a human face. A young fellow had broken through the ice on the river at home, and as the black water was dragging his fingers one by one from the slippery edges there came over his face that same look. I used to wake up for many a night after in a sweat of horror, seeing the white face with its parting lips and its piteous, dumb appeal and the black water slowly sucking it down.

Nelson's face brought it all back, but during the prayer the face changed and seemed to settle into resolve of some sort, stern, almost gloomy, as of a man with his last chance before him.

After the prayer Mr. Craig invited the men to a Christmas dinner next day in Black Rock. "And because you are an independent lot we'll charge you half a dollar for dinner and the evening show." Then, leaving a bundle of magazines and illustrated papers on the table, a godsend to the men, he said goodby and went out.

I was to go with the minister, so I jumped into the sleigh first and waited while he said goodby to Graeme, who had been hard hit by the whole service and seemed to want to say something. I heard Mr. Craig say cheerfully and confidently: "It's a true bill. Try him."

Sandy, who had been steadying Dandy while that interesting broncho was attempting with great success to balance himself on his hind legs, came to say goodby.

"Come and see me first thing, Sandy."

"Aye, I know. I'll see you, Mr. Craig," said Sandy earnestly as Dandy dashed off at a full gallop across the clearing and over the bridge, steadying down when he reached the hill.

"Steady, you idiot!"

This was to Dandy, who had taken a sudden side spring into the deep snow, almost upsetting us. A man stepped out from the shadow. It was old man Nelson. He came straight to the sleigh and, ignoring my presence completely, said:

"Mr. Craig, are you dead sure of this? Will it work?"

"Do you mean," said Craig, taking him up promptly, "can Jesus Christ save you from your sins and make a man of you?"

The old man nodded, keeping his hungry eyes on the other's face.

"Well, here's his message to you: 'The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which is lost.'"

"To me? To me?" said the old man eagerly.

"Listen. This, too, is his word: 'Him that cometh unto me I will in nowise cast out.' That's for you, for here you are, coming."

"You don't know me, Mr. Craig. I left my baby fifteen years ago because—"

"Stop!" said the minister. "Don't tell me—at least not tonight, perhaps never. Tell him who knows it all now and who never betrays a secret. Have it out with him. Don't be afraid to trust him."

Nelson looked at him, with his face quivering, and said in a husky voice:

"If this is no good, it's hell for me."

"If it's no good," replied Craig, almost sternly, "it's hell for all of us."

The old man straightened himself up, looked up at the stars, then back at Mr. Craig, then at me and, drawing a deep breath, said:

"I'll try him."

As he was turning away the minister touched him on the arm and said quietly:

"Keep an eye on Sandy tomorrow."

Nelson nodded, and we went on, but before we took the next turn I looked back and saw what brought a lump into my throat. It was old man Nelson on his knees in the snow, with his hands spread upward to the stars, and I wondered if there was any one above the stars and nearer than the stars who could see. And then the trees hid him from my sight.

CHAPTER II.

THE BLACK ROCK CHRISTMAS.

MANY strange Christmas days have I seen, but that wild Black Rock Christmas stands out strangest of all. While I was reveling in my delicious second morning sleep, just awake enough to enjoy it, Mr. Craig came abruptly, announcing breakfast and adding:

"Hope you are in good shape, for we have our work before us this day."

"Hello!" I replied, still half asleep and anxious to hide from the minister that I was trying to gain a few more moments of snoozing delight. "What's abroad?"

"The devil," he answered shortly and with such emphasis that I sat bolt upright, looking anxiously about.

"Oh, no need for alarm! He's not after you particularly—at least not today," said Craig, with a shadow of a smile. "But he is going about in good style, I can tell you."

By this time I was quite awake. "Well, what particular style does his majesty affect this morning?"

He pulled out a showbill. "Peculiarly gaudy and effective, is it not?"

The items announced were sufficiently attractive. The Frisco Opera company was to produce the "screaming farce," "The Gay and Giddy Dude," after which there was to be a grand ball, during which the "Kalifornia Female Kickers" were to do some fancy figures, the whole to be followed by a "big supper," with "two free drinks to every man and one to the lady," and all for the insignificant sum of $2.

"Can't you go one better?" I said.

He looked inquiringly and a little disgustfully at me.

"What can you do against free drinks and a dance, not to speak of the high kickers?" he groaned. "No," he continued. "It's a clean beat for us today. The miners and lumbermen will have in their pockets $10,000 and every dollar burning a hole, and Slavin and his gang will get most of it. But," he added, "you must have breakfast. You'll find a tub in the kitchen. Don't be afraid to splash. It is the best I have to offer you."

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

print, and heard in speech, "the presiding elder question is settled for four years at least; now let us have peace." I have thought as I read the one and heard the other, "The wish is father to the thought." The declaration is incorrect. Nothing is settled until it is settled right. The question as it now stands has been taken from the legal and placed purely upon the moral plane. The question for the next four years with us is not the measure, but the men. And that question cannot be settled by us as a body, but by the parties themselves. We as a body have spoken, and so plainly that none can misunderstand. Look back for a moment. At the Conference at Danville 133 of a total of 142 votes asked for a change. The cry was raised that it was "snap judgment." That "the vote was taken in the closing hours of the session, and that it was not a fair expression of views." We who wished for a change quietly waited for four years. At our last session, after free and full discussion, the vote in favor of the change lacked only six of being a full two-thirds majority. Now the question meets us in this form, and I do not mean any disrespect to any one: Can the presiding officer of our next Conference afford, for his own sake, to put the matter no higher, to appoint these brethren to this office whom we have twice declared, as a body, that we do not wish to be in it? Or, if he does, can the men themselves afford to accept the office in the face of these protests? This view of the matter takes it out of the general and puts it upon the particular plane. It is not for us as a body but for the men themselves to say in what light they shall stand to us in the future. We, as a body, can do nothing until the session of our Conference preceding the next General Conference. But these brethren, as individuals, will fix their own status, and upon their action depend their relation, both to the Church and the world—at least that part of the world that looks to the M. E. Church, South, as the exponent of principle and purity.

CITY MISSION WORK.

Dear Bro. Cannon,—The following article from the Richmond Times may not only interest some of your readers, but possibly lead to some work on this line. It seems to me that in every city of our Conference there is a great need for city mission work.

REV. GEO. H. WILEY TELLS OF HIS TRIP.

The Rev. George H. Wiley, superintendent of the Methodist Institute on east Main street, has just returned home from an extended tour of the West.

While away Mr. Wiley visited many places, primarily with a view to getting suggestions as to mission work, and it is expected that as a result of his observations he will institute some changes at the Institute, which has grown into one of the most important religious works of the city. When asked for an account of his trip and of the incidents he noted on the way, Mr. Wiley prepared the following:

"You desire me to write of impressions made about mission work during my recent trip west and how far the plans I investigated may be followed in Richmond?

"Before I attempt an answer to the above, let me say this, that whenever I stopped at a place where mission work or subjects for mission work could be found, I invariably tried to learn something about such folks or such work before I visited wonders in nature.

"I stopped at Colorado Springs, and while there visited Ceyune Canon, Garden of the Gods, Cripple Creek, Pike's Peak, etc., etc., but before I went to see them I had been in twenty of the many religious services going on among the masses in that city of all nations.

"As I expected, I learned of some new wrinkles and departures in mission work, and while I received some valuable suggestions, I doubt if I have in mind a single feature of such work that I would ask our committee to inaugurate just as I found it, for this reason, that there is such a radical difference in the people we have to work upon.

GENERAL CONDITIONS.

"Of course, there are some features which are found in every broad and intelligently conducted mission in our cities; there is also much important work to be done, which in each mission community is peculiar to that place and must be done by means adapted to the needs of that particular section.

"An illustration in an article I read yesterday from one of our magazines reveals this fact strongly. In the busiest part of New York, under some of the great 'sky scrapers,' there are women who have not been out in God's sunlight for so long that their babies are often born blind. On the top of the same houses may be found children of the janitors, six years old, whose feet have never trod the earth. These things are matters of pathetic interest, but certainly not of study by Richmond mission workers as to how the women might be gotten out of the cellars or the children from the roof.

"Two things I would mention that have been brought home to me very strongly. The first is, that if we are to do the best work for the souls of men we have got to help them in body and mind if they need it; in other words, the only places I found eminently successful spiritually were those missions that were eminently practical in their efforts, where the night schools and the lodging room and the dispensary were looked upon as the work of Almighty God and as means—yes, as necessary means—in city missions for saving souls.

OUT-DOOR WORK.

"Another thing very manifest (and that I believe we should do more of in Richmond) is the rapid increase of outdoor work in the past ten or twelve years in the portions of the West I visited at that time. Tent work and street-corner work; services on vacant lots and at the markets, not conducted by wanderers and people without influence, but by the very first people in the place. I saw in one town, within one hour, three open-air services going on at different points in a city of 25,000 inhabitants, with a climate no better than Richmond for such work and with needs not so great. After a short and vigorous service on the street corner, cultured men and women marched behind a bass drum to the meeting hall, where a crowd invariably followed.

"I am engaged in tent work now, and expect to be in it for two months, trying to save the souls of men. I love revival work, and for twenty years have engaged in it, but if you ask me what we need most in Richmond's mission field now for the glory of God, I do not hesitate to say that we need baths more than we need Bibles; that we need wisely organized boys' and girls' clubs more than we need an increase in prayer-meeting; that we need gymnasiums and instructions about the food we eat and the stomach it goes through more than we need tracts. I know that some people will say that it is wicked to write in this way, but I believe it with all of my heart, and am willing for it to be read in the light of eternity. I find better support for such a position in the Pentateuch than in the missions of Chicago, where God gave face to face instructions about washing the body and what to eat.

"Of course, no sensible person will suppose that I think anything so important as the work of God. I speak of the comparative worth of an increase of Bibles among the people or more public baths. I long to see them in our mission.

PREACHING ON THE STREET.

"In the second place, I believe we need and will come to more preaching in the parks and streets—out of doors, in God's Temple, as I never felt it before. I think we need this a thousand times more than we need greater church buildings. I know your objections. You say: 'Has it not been going on here for years and see what meagre results?' Yes, the results will continue meagre as long as such work is left so largely to dreamers and cranks. Results were not meagre when Mr. Wesley spoke from tombstones and hillsides, and George Whitfield stood in market carts and on court-house steps to proclaim Christ."

I want to sustain my position with the following article from the Richmond Leader:

"FIFTEEN THOUSAND—IMMENSE NUMBER AT WEST END PARK YESTERDAY.

"A conservative estimate of the attendance at West End Electric Park yesterday evening, during the hours that the band played, gives the figures at 15,000. At the end of the concert every car on both branches of the street railway was lined up to take the crowd home, but the service was not equal to the demand."

This crowd of 15,000 went out on Sunday night.

GEORGE H. WILEY.

On July 12th the Anti-Saloon League of Rogersville, Tenn., in an election held on that date, won a glorious victory over the saloon. Next day the Anti-Saloon League of Bristol held a meeting and passed resolutions congratulating the Rogersville League on what it had accomplished.

RANDOLPH-MACON COLLEGE SYSTEM.

THE PRINCIPLES OF MODERN CORPORATION APPLIED TO THE CHRISTIAN EDUCATION OF VIRGINIA, RESULTING IN THE FINEST EDUCATIONAL PLANTS AND SYSTEM IN THE SOUTH.

(Alkabeth Magazine, Atlanta.)

It is difficult for the generation that has grown up in the South since the event, as also for the man who has contemporaneously in the contrast conditions of war—stimulated enterprise north of the Potomac, to realize the state of absolute and hopeless collapse of the ante-bellum business undertakings in the South at the close of the civil war. The military draft, extended from time to time as the exigencies of the Confederacy demanded, has finally swept into the ranks of the army all from 16 to 60 who were able to bear arms and had not already volunteered. No vigorous workers were left for business pursuits; and were in the field, ranked not among the producers, not even simply as consumers, but often as actual destroyers of the agencies of trade.

In Virginia, especially, as the arena of the conflict swept from point to point, from the Piedmont and the Valley to the James and the southside with ever-narrowing area, the bridges were burned, the roads destroyed and it became the settled policy of the stubborn defenders, unmindful of the future, to destroy what they could not utilize to protect. The foe completed the devastation of the sections that fell in their hands. No manufacturing plant was left. Even farm houses and barns were burned and universal desolation reigned. With the collapse of the Confederacy the entire currency of the country became waste paper in the hands of the holders, and people were reduced to immediate and absolute poverty.

Under such circumstances the primary question of food and clothing and shelter engrossed attention, and it was no matter of surprise that schools and colleges were for some time neglected. Among the first to struggle to its feet was the well-known Randolph-Macon College, which, since 1833, had been conducted at Boydton, Va. The fees of this college having saved some $20,000 from the wreck of its endowment, determined to remove the college to Ashland, Va., seventeen miles from Richmond, and there, in 1868, began anew the work of education.

The struggle for existence for the next eighteen years was of heroic character. For ten years the great James A. Duncan was the leader, and when, exhausted by the labor, he fell from the harness, a courageous successor was found in Dr. Wm. Wallace Bennett. With untiring toil finally succeeded in freeing the college from debt only to find his life-force so spent to be compelled to resign the presidency. A year later he died.

So adverse had been the conditions so real and pressing the poverty of people, that all this labor had only resulted in accumulating a net property of $69,000.

The year before Dr. Bennett died the trustees had called upon a young professor of the college to undertake conduct a canvass for an endowment of $100,000. It seemed a hopeless and as a Herculean task, but courage and with finally won, and in 1886 the fund was completed. In that year, with the resignation of Dr. Bennett, this professor, Wm. Waugh Smith, was made president. President—now Chancellor—Smith, is the son of Richard M. Smith, editor of the Richmond Enquirer, and a close friend of President Davis during the war, and a grandson of Colonel Wm. R. Smith, of the war of 1812. The military spirit of his grandfather descended to the son, and in 1862, when seventeen years old, he volunteered as a private in the Forty-ninth Virginia Infantry, then commanded by his cousin, ex-Governor Wm. Smith, of Virginia. He served to the surrender at Appomattox, being twice wounded—the second time being fit for dying on the field of Gettysburg. After the surrender he went into business for two years. In 1867 he attended the University of Virginia, and in 1868-1871 Randolph-Macon College, where he took the A. M. degree. He won the highest honors as a student while at college, although he supported himself, by teaching and other business. It is asserted that his college education cost his parents $50 and a sack of oats.

EXPANSION.

Soon after President Smith entered upon the duties of his office he set on foot a movement to raise the standard of the college and improve its work by establishing an academy, where all preparatory work should be done under discipline suited to the immaturity of high students. This was a bold step, threatening the reduction of the attendance one-half and a radical requirement for admission not then ventured by any college or university in Virginia, but Dr. Smith pressed it upon the trustees, declaring that it was wrong to the boy, to the college, and to the cause of education to admit untrained youths to the freedom of college life. By earnest and enthusiastic effort he secured gifts of land and money, and in 1890 opened the great Randolph-Macon Academy at Bedford City, with 158 students in the best equipped school plant in the South. The cost of the plant was $99,500. Its principal is Mr. E. Sumter Smith. The success of this undertaking and the growing reputation of Dr. Smith as an educator opens the way to other opportunities. In 1891, after a canvass of six days, the citizens of Front Royal, Va., subscribed $65,000 to secure a duplicate of the Bedford Academy. Other funds were added, $10,000 by Dr. Smith himself, made by giving expert advice and service to other educational enterprises, and in 1892 the Randolph-Macon Academy No. 2 was opened at Front Royal, the plant costing $101,000. Its principal is Mr. C. L. Melton. This second success opened the way to a still larger enterprise. There was an endowed college for women in Virginia, and Dr. Smith having suggested some prominent citizens of Lynchburg the value, importance and feasibility of establishing such an institution in that city, was invited to present the matter to the people. After a tremendous canvass of ninety-four days the sum of $225,000 was subscribed, and the Randolph-Macon Woman's College was the result.

It was opened in 1893, organized as a college equal to the best colleges for men in the State. It is ranked by the United States Commissioner of Education as one of the thirteen great colleges of the United States for women in "Division A"—the only one South of the Potomac so classed. Dr. J. L. M. Curry says of its work: "The Randolph-Macon Woman's College curriculum is in no whit inferior to the best for men in the State nor for women in the United States"; and the Dean of the academic faculty of the University of Virginia says: "The A. B. degree of this college represents an education at least as broad and deep as that represented by the A. B. degree of any one of the excellent colleges in this State. The college is doing a work of the utmost value to the South." Chancellor Smith acts as president.

This college has prospered from its opening day and for two years past has had more applications from students than it could accommodate.

A logical extension of the system was made in 1897, when liberal minded citizens of Danville presented to the Randolph-Macon Board the Danville College for Young Ladies, to be conducted as a high-grade school to prepare students for the Woman's College. This plant has cost $41,000, and as Randolph-Macon Institute the school has won an enviable reputation. Its boarders are limited to forty. Mr. W. H. Davis is principal.

A larger training school for the Woman's College is the Blackstone Female Institute, under Rev. James Cannon, Jr., where 250 students are accommodated.

In 1890 the trustees created the office of Chancellor of the Randolph-Macon system, and elected Dr. Smith to the position. His abilities and his services to the cause of education have also been recognized by the honorary degree of LL. D. from Wesleyan University, Connecticut, and by membership in several learned societies.

THE SYSTEM.

It will be seen from this brief history that the Randolph-Macon system is a growth—a growth along natural and harmonious lines. By the method adopted the work of education is conducted from the end of the grammar school grades to the college A. M. degree, according to a well defined plan and under experienced supervision.

The work is entirely benevolent. There are no stockholders, nor are the executive officers financially interested. The funds contributed for the purpose are applied to the best advantage for the making of noble men and women, and not to make money for any one. Any surplus of receipts is at once applied to improving the facilities or enlarging the corps of instructors. At present about $43,000 are annually added from outside benevolence to what patrons pay.

The organization of these separate institutions into one system is designed to secure certain definite advantages.

First, the close correlation of the courses of the academies with those of the College and of the Institute with those of the Woman's College results in a distinct economy of time, and hence of expense, to the student. School and college working in thorough harmony with each other, belonging indeed to one board and under the supervision of one general officer, more certainly make their work continuous and apply labor with less waste than where separate ends and ideals are proposed and independent courses are offered.

Secondly, the combination of resources resulting from the ownership of the five institutions by one board secures abundant financial facilities, commanding the best prices and largest discounts. The responsibility of the board as a chartered corporation being undoubted, and the permanence of its general work being assured, confidence follows all its undertakings and strength is given each institution. In educational work it is especially desirable that parents and students be assured of the permanence of the institutions which they are invited to patronize, and whose influence may become important to them.

Thirdly, for the preceding reasons and others which might be named, positions in the system are specially attractive to teachers, and choice men are at all times available for the teaching corps. In most cases of teachers selected for the academies and institute, those chosen have been for years under the instruction of the college faculties and are known to them personally and intimately. Testimonials are proverbially of little worth, and nothing less than constant and long continued contact with the developing student will enable one to select with certainty the capable teacher.

Fourthly, experienced supervision is secured in having a board in charge that has conducted such work for nearly seventy years, and from the continuous counsel and supervision of the Chancellor of the system and his special services for the special need of any institution.

The manifest force of the argument for combination in the educational as in the industrial world and the success of the Randolph-Macon System in commanding public confidence have led to similar plans in other parts of the South, which are now proposed or in process of execution, but as yet the Randolph-Macon System stands as the pioneer and exemplar of wise educational organization in the South. Lynchburg, Va., the headquarters of Chancellor Smith, is a most interesting centre of educational ideas.

TRUTH AND PROOF.

Most of the papers that have commented upon the conduct of Judge Campbell, while condemning him unsparingly, have been non-committal concerning the article in The Christian Federation, which first aroused his wrath. The few who have defended it were, so far as we know, papers edited by men who had opportunity to know the truth. It was right and proper that those who had not this opportunity should refrain from giving judgment. There have, however, been one or two exceptions to this, notably one of the religious papers of this city.

This paper, while, of course, condemning Judge Campbell for his act, says: "The charge made by Mr. Crawford against Judge Campbell was offensive and injurious, whether he believed it to be true or not, and should not have been made without the purpose and means of proving its truth." The inference from this would be that something had been said in The Christian Federation which could not be proved. This is not the case. Let it be noted that The Christian Federation never said, as Judge Campbell persistently interpreted it to have said, that he had been bribed. What we did say was that "Such rulings set people to wondering which had been doctored most, the whiskey or the judge." This is a simple statement of a well-known fact, though the statement is made in our own language. Hundreds of people in Amherst county were wondering what could be the matter with the judge, what could be his motives, what influences could have been brought to bear upon him to induce him to make such a ruling, and The Christian Federation has abundant means to prove that this is so, and we would gladly have proved it long ago had we ever been given an opportunity to do so. All who have kept informed concerning the proceedings must have noted that in the trial for contempt no opportunity was given to prove the truth of the assertions made. Furthermore, that when we stated in open court that we believed the assertion to be true as we interpreted it, but possibly not as the Judge interpreted it, no opportunity was given for explanation. The retraction required by Judge Campbell would have been willingly made but for the fact that what we had said was true, and could be proved.—Christian Federation.

WAITING.

Do you remember, dear, how in old days,
When in the woods we spent long golden hours;
I used to loiter in the shady ways,
While you were lured to leave me by the flowers:

And sometimes went so far in gathering these,
You passed beyond the bend or out of view;
And I would hurry after, through the trees,
All woodland beauty missed, for missing you.

And I would find you, with that winsome face
Pretending patience, by the pasture bars.
Love, you have left me so—a little space:
And so you wait for me, beyond the stars.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON VIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 24.

Text of the Lesson. Num. xiii, 1-3, 25-33 and xiv, 1-1—Memory Verses, 30-33—Golden Text, Ps. xl, 4—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

1-3. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Send thou men that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel.

When they came to the borders of the land which God had promised to them (for it was only eleven days' journey from Horeb to Kadesh-barnea), Moses said: "Behold, the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee. Go up and possess it, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath said unto thee. Fear not, neither be discouraged." But the people came to Moses and asked that men be sent to search out the land and bring back word as to the way to go and what cities to enter (Deut. 1, 2, 21-23). The idea of spies therefore originated with Israel, and the Lord gave commandment to have it so, because they wanted it so, just as afterward the Lord commanded Samuel to give them a king because they insisted on having a king like other nations (1 Sam. viii, 4-9, 19-22). Read Ex. iii, 7, 8; vi, 6-8, and consider it well and say in the face of such assurances if the people's request for spies was not simply a lack of faith in God.

25-29. And they returned from searching of the land after forty days.

They could not but testify that it was as God had said, a land flowing with milk and honey (Ex. iii, 8; xxxiii, 3), but they had been using their natural eyes more than the eyes of their hearts (Eph. i, 18, R. V.), and instead of seeing only God and His goodness and His promises they saw difficulties which seemed to them insurmountable, for they forgot the deliverance from Egypt, and the dividing of the Red sea, and the quails and the manna so wondrously given, and so they talk of walled cities and giants and a strong people, and they seem not to reckon upon God at all. They believed not His word (Ps. cvi, 21, 22, 24).

30. And Caleb still'd the people before Moses and said, Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it.

This was no vain boast or reliance upon themselves, but words uttered from a heart stayed upon Jehovah. Hear Caleb and Joshua in chapter xiv, 6-9: "If the Lord delight in us, then He will bring us into this land and give it us; * * * only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land; * * * the Lord is with us. Fear them not." Listen to this same Caleb forty-five years later when he asked Joshua for the mountain where the giants were, "And now, behold, the Lord hath kept me alive, as He said, these forty and five years. * * * if so be the Lord will be with me, then I shall be able to drive them out, as the Lord said" (Josh. xiv, 10-12). He wholly followed the Lord and relied upon Him.

31-33. But the men that went up with him said, We be not able to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we.

Thus they brought up an evil report of the land, a slander upon the land (xiv, 36). They saw the giants, and they saw themselves as grasshoppers. It was a case of "we" and "they," but not a word about God. They are stronger than we. We were in their sight as grasshoppers. In our conflicts with the enemy as we pass through this wilderness or sojourn in the pleasant land everything depends upon our point of vision. If we see things from our standpoint, the giants and walled cities will seem very real, but if, like Caleb and Joshua, we stand with God all difficulties will seem as nothing. When David went to meet Goliath, he did not consider his own weakness.

xiv, 1. And all the congregation lifted up their voice and cried, and the people wept that night.

No wonder they acted thus when they were so unbelieving and rebellious against God. They were within sight and reach of the good land, but occupied with themselves and despising the promises of God and even God Himself. See the record of a previous weeping in Num. xi, 4, 10, 13, 18, 20, and a later one in Num. xxv, 6, and note that it was all because of unbelief, as was the weeping of Mary Magdalene at the tomb on the resurrection morning. Joy and peace come by believing, but in no other way (Rom. xv, 13; John xiv, 1, 27; xx, 27-29).

2, 3. And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron.

They even wished they were dead or might die in the wilderness, and many of them got their wish. Their thought was to get rid of their trouble. They had no thought or desire that God might be glorified in their death. Contrast John xxi, 19; Phil. i, 20. See records of other murmurings in Ex. xv, 24; xvi, 2; xvii, 3. Num. xvi, 11, 41. They did not consider that their weeping was in the ears of the Lord and their murmurings against Him (Num. xi, 18; xiv, 26, 27; Ex. xvi, 8), nor that when they complained it displeased the Lord (Num. xi, 1).

4. And they said one to another, Let us make a captain and let us return into Egypt.

The Lord Himself was their captain, as He also is ours (Josh. v, 14; 11 Chron. xiii, 2; Heb. ii, 10), but they wanted no more of Him. Stephen says that in their hearts they turned back again into Egypt, and Nehemiah says that in their rebellion they appointed a captain to return to their bondage (Acts vii, 39; Neh. ix, 17). Let us consider what is written about looking back in Gen. xix, 26; Luke ix, 62; xvii, 32, and contrast looking forward and upward in Prov. iv, 25; Heb. xii, 2; Phil. iii, 20.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic for the Week Beginning Aug. 24, "Freedom For Service"—Text, II Tim. ii, 4; Gal. v, 1; Heb. xii, 1, 2.

It is a matter of common remark that many Christians do not live up to their duty. They neither enjoy nor increase in efficiency nor do much of any distinctively Christian work. The unconverted see little difference between themselves and such Christians and have little respect for such piety or attraction toward it.

The difficulty is that these Christians are in bondage. They may be unwilling to acknowledge the fact, but, however it may be disguised, it is still true that they lack freedom in God's service.

This has been one of the difficulties which the followers of Christ have met from the first and probably will meet until the end. It is not an easy task to give the life completely up to the service of God. Many prefer to serve in the militia rather than in the regular army. There is an attractiveness in volunteer service, a sense of independence which does not attach to the other. Some chafe under the sense of pledged responsibility and feel a constraint in being held closely to duty. They wish to be free, as they express it. The root of the trouble lies in the lack of the early discipline of obedience and self control. Instead of getting a real freedom, they are always chafing under restraint and never settle their shoulders into the yoke to pull the load.

Freedom for service comes first from a willing mind determined to fulfill all needful conditions and to compel success. It is willing to work hard if by such effort the results can be reached.

It wants to be a good soldier. So it enlists and settles down to study military science and to practice the soldierly arts. It is not content with playing soldier and an occasional drill in the evening after the day's work is done and one week's encampment a year with home comforts. The one who really wishes to be a soldier of Jesus Christ is ready to lay aside the worldly lusts and entanglements and settle down to serious work.

Indolence is one of the most serious hindrances to all progress. No one gets ability to speak or pray without effort if the speaking and praying really amount to anything. Knowledge of the nature of the Christian life does not come spontaneously to any one. Some never master it because they will not apply themselves. The practice of the virtues of Christian speech and Christian activity is less common than it should be because of the dislike to get down to earnest application. It is hard routine to drill the lips to speak the truth and only kind words. It is irksome to many to cut off the questionable and frivolous reading, amusements and companionship. It is so much easier to drift down stream than to row against the current that many drift, but that is not freedom, nor is it permanently enjoyable.

Our enjoyment and sense of worthiness can be satisfied only as we put forth our best powers. Freedom is in the full exercise of all faculties. In the full swing of power comes keen joy. In time of battle we get results for all the long drill and are satisfied as we win.

How God Helps Us.

"God is my helper" is a truth as old as the Bible and confirmed by myriads of human experiences. But it is important for us to know how our loving Father helps us, for we may expect things that He never grants and lose things that He offers to give us. There are a right way and a wrong way of looking at God's dealings; the one sets us to murmuring and complaining, the other gives us a wonderful uplift. If we looked at God as always wise and always loving and always holy, we should know, in the first place, that He often helps us by a sharp discipline that tries us most terribly. It helps the grass on my lawn in summer to put the mower over it, and it helps my grapevines to apply the pruning knife. As head winds make a steamer's fires burn more briskly under the boilers, so adversity often drives a true Christian ahead in his spiritual life. Everything that makes you and me purer, humbler, braver, stronger or holier is a mighty help, and if we keep the eye of faith open we shall see a loving God behind the pruning knife and behind the furnace of affliction.—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler in Evangelist.

Vacant Churches.

We have a distressing way of talking about "vacant" pulpits and "vacant" churches. It is an unfortunate part of our overemphasis of the place of a minister in our various systems of church polity. It is of a piece with the talk about "Dr. Blank's church."

A church is not vacant until the Holy Spirit has left it. As long as through humble hearts there is evidence of the divine indwelling a church is great and rich. A log cabin with a simple hearted layman's prayer and exposition of the word of God may rise to the dignity and glory of a temple, while a gorgeous architectural pile with a superb organ and an intellectually gifted preacher may be "vacant" indeed.—Congregationalist.

The Big Rewards of Life.

The man who sees in life the opportunity to express himself in the largest terms, who after ascertaining what faculties he has determines to develop them to the highest possible efficiency, who is capable of seeing the sweetness and joy that lie all about him, who, being proud, does not allow his body or mind to be defiled—he is the one who obtains the big rewards, the big successes.—Oppenheim, "Mental Growth and Control."

WHAT NOT TO DO.

Some Good Advice In a Christian Standard Editorial.

The Christian Standard (Cincinnati), the leading organ of the Church of Christ (Disciples), has an editorial resume of recently published European statistics telling the proportion of poverty due to drink and effective comment thereon. Careful investigation of conditions in York and London, England, made by prominent sociologists reveal the hideous fact that approximately one-third of the entire population of those cities are paupers. The Standard quotes other incontestable data to show that the dominant reason for this appalling condition is drink. It then proceeds:

Here, then, is the situation: Drink is the chief cause of the vast and shameful amount of pauperism, disease, insanity and crime with which we are afflicted. Both the cause and its evil results are rapidly increasing, involving the destruction of our industrial supremacy. In view of this situation what should be done? The only sane answer is to remove the cause as far as human power can do so. That the prohibition of the sale of liquor as a beverage would practically remove this cause and that nothing else will is a proposition almost axiomatic. That the prohibition of this sale is practicable is only denied by those who either are advocates of the traffic for the sake of selfish ends or those who have allowed themselves to be deceived by those advocates.

But, whatever dispute may be possible as to the best thing to do to limit and minimize and put "in the way of ultimate extinction" this evil traffic, there is one thing not to be done by any lover of righteousness or of mankind. That one thing is the encouragement of drinking or the promotion of it in any way. When the president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology presides at a feast among the students at which beer drinking is put on the programme, he is encouraging the thing which causes more than half the pauperism and crime in Christendom. He is known to be doing so by all liquor sellers and is counted by them as on their side. He is putting an answer in the mouth of every boy who is going wrong against the advice and entreaties of parents. Nay, he is putting in such a one's mouth a deadly fang to pierce a parent's heart. No matter how speciously the president of that institution may explain his conduct, the common sense of men will count him as an encourager of drinking, and this is the chief cause of the vast mass of human pauperism and crime and the sole cause of most of it.

Religious News.

Rev. Dr. J. C. C. Newton is spending a week in this city. He was warmly welcomed by his old friends.—Pilot.

The revival services under the tent have been going on for five weeks. The crowds have been large and the interest continues unabated. There have been conversions every night until several scores have handed in their names for membership in the different churches. For three nights next week there will be no services. This is to allow those who attend regularly an opportunity to rest. On Thursday night of next week the tent will be again opened and preliminary services of the Alliance Convention will be conducted for several nights by a clergyman of New York. Rev. George H. Wiley preached in the tent last night. The service on next Sunday night will be moved to Trinity church, half a block from the tent. The Rev. J. E. Cook will preach on that occasion.—Times.

METHODISTS ASK $5,000,000.

Nashville, Tenn. (Special).—At a meeting of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it has been decided to endeavor to raise a $5,000,000 endowment, the interest of which is to go to superannuated ministers' widows and orphans.—News.

BIG TENT MEETING.

The big Y. M. C. A. tent at Twentieth and Grace streets was crowded at the service Sunday afternoon. Secretary Thomas had charge of the very interesting service, and Rev. George H. Spooner delivered a splendid address. Much interest was manifested. A novel feature of the meetings is that lemonade is served to those who attend.

Rev. John Robertson, of Glasgow, Scotland, will preach next Sunday afternoon.

RETURN OF REV. R. H. BENNETT.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, pastor of Epworth Methodist church, having returned to the city from his two weeks' vacation at Ashland and Charlottesville, Va., will occupy his pulpit Sunday. His morning theme will be "Three Score Years and Ten," a sermon to elderly persons. At night his subject will be, "The Land Where Our Dreams Come True."—Virginian-Pilot.

DEATH OF BRO. SCHOOLFIELD.

Danville, Va., August 6.—Mr. James E. Schoolfield, widely known as an evangelist, died here at 12:30 o'clock this morning. He had been ill for some weeks with typhoid fever, which became complicated with other ailments.

He was prominent in this city, where he was identified with important industrial developments and enjoyed the esteem and unbounded confidence of all classes. He was a prominent Mason, and was at one time an officer of the Grand Commandry, Knights Templar of Virginia.

Mr. Schoolfield was the founder of the Riverside Cotton Mills, of this city, and was for years engaged in the hardware business. He was fifty-two years old. He was one of the wealthiest citizens of Danville.

Mr. Schoolfield retired from business several years ago, and had ever since that time devoted himself to his evangelistic labors, travelling all over the country and preaching to thousands.

Mr. Schoolfield is a brother of Mr. John H. Schoolfield and of Mr. R. A. Schoolfield, both of this city, and had spent the greater part of his life here, coming in boyhood from Lynchburg, Va. He was connected with the Main Street Methodist church. His wife and several children survive him.—Dispatch.

WACHAPREAGUE.

The new Methodist church, which will be one of the handsomest places of public worship on the shore, is rapidly nearing completion.

Revs. R. T. Waterfield and T. J. C. Heath, both natives of Accomac, are spending their vacation in our town, at the home of Mr. Jas. C. Heath. On last Sunday Mr. Waterfield preached for us in the Methodist church. The sermon showed thought and study, and was much enjoyed by a large congregation. Mr. Heath will preach in the Methodist church next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock. Rev. J. J. Bradford will preach at Smith's chapel at 3:30 P. M.—Peninsula Enterprise.

A CHURCH FOR GHENT.

The Methodists of Ghent have been determined for some time to erect a church in that part of the city where they can worship without the inconvenience of coming over to the city proper.

Those who are at the head of the movement have organized a finance and building committee and are preparing for the final organization of a congregation.

A large lot has been purchased near the Stockley Gardens, and it is said that a Sunday school will be erected in a very short while. Until the church is finished the Sunday school will be used for all purposes.

It is said that the new house of worship will be called the Ghent Methodist church.—Landmark.

TO SUCCEED CAPTAIN IRBY.

The Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, D. D., pastor of the Washington-Street Methodist church, of Petersburg, has been elected to succeed the late Captain Richard Irby as secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College.

Final action in the matter was taken at a special meeting of the Executive Committee of the College last week. Dr. Lipscomb was not a candidate for the position, but he was unanimously elected. He took the matter under careful consideration, and made known to the committee that he declined to accept.

HE ACCEPTED.

But the body being impressed with his eminent qualifications urged him to withdraw his declination, and after long and careful discussion of all the matters involved he accepted the offer and was clothed by the committee with full authority in the management of the finances of the school. There will need for further action by the Board of Trustees. Dr. Lipscomb will enter at once upon his duties, but will continue to supply the Washington-Street church, of Petersburg, until satisfactory arrangements can be made for filling the pulpit. His permanent residence will be in Ashland.

A BRIEF SKETCH.

Dr. Lipscomb is a native of this city. He was educated at the Jefferson Male Academy and at Randolph-Macon. As a result of ill-health he left school at an early age and engaged in mercantile pursuits, becoming at one time bookkeeper in the State Bank of Virginia. He later decided to enter the ministry, and was licensed to preach in 1874. He then he has served at Charlottesville, Berkeley, Danville, Mt. Vernon, Export News and Petersburg. He has been in the last-named place for the last three years.—Times.

MUST GET NEW PASTOR.

Petersburg, Va., August 11.—The Board of Stewards of Washington-Street Methodist Episcopal church, which was in session until a late hour last night, received and accepted the resignation of Rev. B. F. Lipscomb as pastor of the church, and a committee consisting of Presiding Elder R. T. Wason and Prof. Arthur K. Davis was appointed to wait on Rev. W. G. Starr, D. D., of Ashland, Va., and request him to become Mr. Lipscomb's successor.

Dr. Lipscomb has accepted the office of secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College. Dr. Starr is a former pastor of Washington-Street church.—Baltimore Sun.

MARVIN GROVE CAMP.

Again are the people of God gathered together in good works on the old campus, and Marvin Grove is sustaining its old reputation as a place attractive to both saint and sinner, and from which the saint returns refreshed and the sinner benefited. At no time in its history has the camp been better equipped, both from a spiritual and temporal standpoint, and at no time have the promises of good results been more encouraging. Large crowds have assembled and goodly discourses have entered the people—in fact, it is concluded that the preaching was never of higher or better order, whilst the order and quiet of the grounds has been phenomenal.

Up to Wednesday evening most of the preaching was done by Rev. C. D. Lawley, an earnest and consecrated man of God, and the impressions formed are far-reaching. Presiding Elder W. J. H. Amiss, Dr. Rosbro, of the Presbyterian Church, and Revs. Garret, Lumkin, Bently, Williams and others have each filled the pulpit, delivering able and soul-stirring sermons. The meeting is in charge of the Presiding Elder, who has never been more earnest or zealous in any cause, seeming never to tire, always on the alert, catching every detail.

Mr. T. A. Jett, who for a number of years has served so acceptably as the leader of the singing, is again in charge to the gratification of all lovers of good singing. Misses Susie Rock, one Haynie, Fannie Courtney and Virgie Walker are lending their aid as organists.

The weather has been all that could be wished for, and whilst the attendance has not been as large as was the case fifteen years ago, the congregations have been fully up to what they have been in late years. On the circle there are more vacant tents than usual, while those on the avenues, with few exceptions, are occupied. On Sunday the crowd was estimated to be fully 3,000. At the afternoon service Miss Sadie Thomas, of Baltimore, sang a touching solo, which added much to the impressiveness of the occasion. Rev. Dr. John Hannon of Richmond, a pulpit orator of exceptional ability, was expected to arrive, but did not do so. A telegram from his wife on Wednesday brought the gratifying intelligence that Dr. Hannon had left that morning for Marvin Grove, and those who attend from now until the close of the present meeting will have the pleasure of hearing this eloquent preacher.

It is universally regretted that Mr. L. Cockrell, chairman of the Marvin Grove Committee, is unable to be in attendance owing to his continued feeble health. Since the foundation of the encampment he has always taken an active interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the camp, and his associates on the committee, as well as his large circle of friends, who are now tenting on the grounds, greatly miss him, and express the sincere hope that at no distant day his health will be fully restored and that once more his familiar face may be seen at Marvin Grove, where he has for the past twenty-five years annually worshipped.—Northern Neck News.

DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

According to appointment the District Conference convened at Mt. Zion church on Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock, July 29th, and the Lion of Hesthood arose to meet the imaginary elephant that was to come with lank-side on its journey and wandering from the various points underlying the shadows of the peaks of the Blue Ridge. Like the king of the forest, the hosts were more than equal to the occasion, and many full baskets, in which there were more than fragments, were hauled back to homes. Carriages brought out for guests had to return empty, and the quilt and beds of comfortable homes remained unbroken and undisturbed, and instead of the burden and bustle, there was only enjoyment and an outcry for more. The lion lays down to rest without drawing a long breath and with a flowing mane and sleek cast, rejoicing that his anticipated difficulty was entirely a pleasure, and we hope a blessing. The only regret we have is that we did not have better order, but like the little child, we promise to do better next time.

The weather was characteristic of Methodism, it just poured down, and while our hearts rejoiced and our minds and bodies were feasting enrapturously there were some drooping plumes and draggled dresses, and also some wet shoes and perhaps feet.

The Conference as a body was very well attended, and those who were absent realized their loss, and sent up the best excuse or rather reasons for absence, among which we may mention the case of Rev. R. W. Watts, former pastor of this circuit, who was hindered by the infirmities of age, and Rev. Thomas Campbell, who was in the midst of a grand revival. Our hearts go out to these brethren in all fullness.

The discussions on the different topics were able and interesting, and the floor was dually occupied most of the time. The crowd all the time and the delegate with but little intermission, with an occasional cry for recognition. Among the discussions we will mention among the most interesting those on Sunday schools and missions, which were fully and ably discussed.

The presiding officer filled the chair with ability and to the entire satisfaction of all, and to his ability he added a large installment of patience. We think him fully equipped for the demands of the future.

Among the visitors we mention with pleasure Rev. J. F. Martin, who presented the cause of the Orphanage, and took a collection for the support of some who had already been taken.

Prof. R. B. Blackwell ably represented Randolph-Macon College, as did Rev. James Cannon, Jr., the Blackstone Female Institute; Rev. J. M. Burton, the Charlottesville District Institute at Culpeper; Prof. Sumter Smith, Bedford Academy, and others spoke in behalf of the Rock Spring and the Oak Park Institutes at brevity, but to the point.

After this the Conference adjourned sine die.

Religious services were held daily and were very well attended. Rev. W. H. Edwards preached the opening sermon according to appointment, and greatly to our edification.—Madison News.

METHODIST PREACHERS.

Owing to a number of the Methodist preachers being away on their vacation, there was only a small attendance at the ministers' Conference yesterday morning.

The session was called to order by the vice-president, Rev. R. H. Bennett, and prayer was offered by Rev. J. W. Crider.

On the call of the churches reports were heard from the following:

Rev. C. W. Cain preached at 11 A. M. Sunday at McKendree church to a fine congregation, baptized an infant in the afternoon, and preached at Wright Memorial Sunday night.

Rev. J. W. Crider worshipped at Wright Memorial Sunday, and heard an excellent discourse from Rev. Mr. Wray. At night he attended the service at Cumberland Street church.

Rev. C. H. McGee reported a good Sunday school and a good congregation at Lamberts Point Sunday morning. No service at night.

The congregations at Memorial church were unusually large for the summer. The pastor, Rev. W. Asbury Christian, preached both morning and night. The young men's Sunday afternoon meetings are fairly well attended and the mission school doing well.

Rev. E. K. Odell had good congregations at Huntersville to hear him at both services. He took up his Center-ence collection, and will realize the full amount assessed against the church. Mr. Odell has been assisting Rev. D. J. Traynham in a protracted meeting at Beach Grove. He reported the outlook encouraging.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt attended fine services Sunday at Port Norfolk. He preached to a very large congregation at 11 A. M., there being quite a number of visitors present from various parts of the State. He attended the Epworth League at Pinner's Point in the afternoon, and made an address. He preached again at night at Port Norfolk.

Rev. C. L. Bane had very encouraging congregations at Cumberland Street church and profitable services.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun occupied his pulpit at Centenary church Sunday at 11 A. M. and 6 P. M. and preached to good summer congregations.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached morning and night at Epworth to fine congregations, considering the weather. Rev. E. J. Dryer was with him at the morning service, and also at the Sunday school. He secured a number of subscriptions to the missionary journal "Go Forward," and spoke in behalf of the Bible study literary.

Rev. J. N. Latham held his regular services at Park View, and preached to a very large congregation at night.

The meeting adjourned with the benediction by Rev. C. W. Cain.—Virginian-Pilot.

PROFESSOR SLEDD.

Atlanta, Ga., August 8. (Special.)—Andrew Sledd, Professor of Latin in Emory College, to-day tendered his resignation to the president of the institution, Rev. James E. Dickey, as a result of bitter attacks made on him on account of an article in the July issue of the Atlantic Monthly on the negro problem, in which he made certain statements which have been construed as attacks on the South. The article was first brought to public attention by a card from Mrs. W. H. Felton, in the Atlanta Constitution of last Sunday. Since that time Professor Sledd has held a position of great prominence before the people of Georgia. Many of the charges made against him have been extremely harsh, but those who know him state that while the views expressed by him were extreme, they were his sincere opinions.

Professor Sledd is a Virginian by birth, a son of the late Rev. Dr. Robert Newton Sledd, who was one of the most prominent divines of the Southern Methodist Church. Professor Sledd is a graduate of Randolph-Macon and of Harvard; at one time he was an instructor in Vanderbilt. Five years ago he came to Emory as Professor of Latin, and has established an enviable reputation in that position. He is known as a man of strong opinions, but was extremely popular with the student body. In his letter of resignation to the president, he states that his reason for resigning is that the disturbance caused by his article might hurt the college should he remain a member of its faculty.

The resignation goes to the Executive Board to-morrow, and will doubt-

Talmage's Sermon.

Washington. In the following discourse, prepared by Dr. Talmage before his illness, the folly and danger of postponing the acceptance of the gospel invitation are expounded on the text, Luke xiv, 18, "And they all with one consent began to make excuse."

After the invitations to a levee are sent out the regrets come in. One man apologizes for nonattendance on one ground, another on another ground. The most of the regrets are founded on prior engagements. So in my text a great banquet was spread, the invitations were circulated, and now the regrets come in. The one gives an agricultural reason, the other a stock dealer's reason, the other a domestic reason. All poor reasons. The fact was, they did not want to go. "And they all with one consent began to make excuse."

So now God spreads a great banquet. It is the gospel feast, and the table reaches across the hemisphere, and the invitations go out, and multitudes come and sit down and drink out of the chalices of God's love, while other multitudes decline coming, the one giving this apology, and the other giving that apology, "and they all with one consent begin to make excuse." I propose, so far as God may help me, to examine the apologies which men make for not entering the Christian life.

Apology the first: I am not sure there is anything valuable in the Christian religion. It is pleaded that there are so many impositions in this day: so many things that seem to be real are sham. A gilded outside may have a hollow inside. There is so much quackery in physics, in ethics, in politics, that men come to the habit of incredulity, and after awhile they allow that incredulity to collide with our holy religion. But, my friends, I think religion has made a pretty good record in the world. How many wounds it has saved! How many pillars of fire it has lifted in the midnight wilderness! How many simoom struck deserts it hath turned into the gardens of the Lord! How it hath stilled the chopped sea! What rosy light it hath sent streaming through the rift of the storm cloud! What pools of cool water it hath gathered for thirsty Hagar and Ishmael! What manna whiter than coriander seed it hath dropped all around the camp of hardly bested pilgrims! What promises it hath sent out like holy watchers to keep the lamps burning around deathbeds, through the darkness that lowers into the sepulcher! What flashes of resurrection morn!

A Religion of Heroes.

Besides that, this religion has made so many heroes. It brought Summerfield, the Methodist, across the Atlantic ocean with his silver trumpet to blow the acceptable year of the Lord until it seemed as if all our American cities would take the kingdom of heaven by violence. It sent Jehudi Ashmun into Africa alone, in a company of naked barbarians, to lift the standard of civilization and Christianity. It made John Milton among poets, Raphael among painters, Christopher Wren among architects, Thornehill sen among sculptors, Handel among musicians, Dupont among military commanders, and to give new wings to the imagination and better balance to the judgment and more determination to the will and greater usefulness to the life and grander nobility to the soul there is nothing in all the earth like our Christian religion. Nothing in religion? Why, then, all those Christians were deceived when in their dying moment they thought they saw the castles of the blessed, and your child, that with unutterable agony you put away into the grave, you will never see him again nor hear his sweet voice nor feel the throb of his young heart. There is nothing in religion? Sickness will come upon you. Roll and turn on your pillow; no relief. The medicine may be bitter, the night may be dark, the pain may be sharp; no relief. Christ never comes to the sick-room. Let the pain stab; let the fever burn; curse it and die. There is nothing in religion? After awhile death will come. You will hear the pawing of the pale horse on the threshold. The spirit will be breaking away from the body, and it will take flight—whither, whither? There is no God, no ministering angels, to conduct, no Christ, no heaven, no home. Nothing in religion? Oh, you are not willing to adopt such a dismal theory!

The Use of a Skeptic.

And yet the world is full of skeptics. And let me say there is no class of people for whom I have a warmer sympathy than for skeptics. We do not know how to treat them. We deride them, we caricature them. We, instead of taking them by the soft band of Christian love, clutch them with the iron pinchers of ecclesiasticism. Oh, if you knew how those men had fallen away from Christianity and become skeptics you would not be so rough on them! Some were brought up in homes where religion was overdone. The most wretched day in the week was Sunday. Religion was driven into them with a triphammer. They had a surfeit of prayer meetings. They were stuffed and choked with catechisms. They were told by their parents that they were the worst children that ever lived because they liked to ride down hill better than to read "Pilgrim's Progress." They never heard their parents talk of religion but with the corners of the mouth drawn down and the eyes rolled up. Others went into skepticism through maltreatment on the part of some who professed religion. There is a man who says, "My partner in business was conspicuous in prayer meeting, and he was officious in all religious circles, but he cheated me out of $3,000, and I don't want any of that religion." Then there are others who get into skepticism by a natural persistence in asking questions, why or how? How can God be one being in three persons? They cannot understand it. Neither can I. How can God be a complete sovereign and yet man a free agent? They cannot understand it. Neither can I. They cannot understand why a holy God lets sin come into the world. Neither can I. They say: "Here is a great mystery; here is a disciple of fashion, frivolous and godless all her days; she lives on to be an octogenarian. Here is a Christian mother, training her children for God and for heaven, self-sacrificing, Christlike, indispensable seemingly to that household; she gets a cancer and dies." The skeptic says, "I can't explain that." Neither can I.

I can see how men reason themselves into skepticism. With burning feet I have trodden that blistering way. I know what it is to have a hundred nights poured into one hour. There are men in the arid desert of doubt who would give their thousands of dollars if they could get back to the old religion of their fathers. Such men are not to be caricatured, but helped, and not through their heads, but through their hearts. When these men really do come into the kingdom of God, they will be worth far more to the cause of Christ than those who never examined the evidences of Christianity. Thomas Chalmers once a skeptic, Robert Hall once a skeptic, Christmas Evans once a skeptic; but when they did lay hold of the gospel chariot how they made it speed ahead! If, therefore, I address men and women who have drifted away into skepticism, I throw out no scoff; I rather implore you by the memory of those good old times when you knelt at your mother's knee and said your evening prayer and those other days of sickness when she watched all night and gave you the medicines at just the right time and turned the pillow when it was hot and with hand long ago turned to dust soothed your pains and with that voice you will never hear again unless you join her in the better country told you never mind, you would be better by and by, and by that dying couch where she talked so slowly, catching her breath between the words—by all those memories I ask you to come and take the same religion. It was good enough for her; it is good enough for you. Aye, I make a better plea: By the wounds and the death throes of the Son of God, who approaches you in infinite love with torn brow and lacerated hands and whipped back, crying, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest!"

Another Apology.

Other persons apologize for not entering the Christian life because of the incorrigibility of their temperament. Now, we admit it is harder for some people to become Christians than for others, but the grace of God never came to a mountain that it could not climb or to an abyss that it could not fathom or to a bondage that it could not break. The wildest horse that ever trod Arabian sands has been broken to bit and trace. The maddest torrent tumbling from mountain shelving has been harnessed to the mill wheel and the factory band, setting a thousand shuttles all a-buzz and a-clatter. And the wildest, the haughtiest, the most ungovernable man ever created by the grace of God may be subdued and sent out on ministry of kindness, as God sends an August thunderstorm to water the wild flowers down in the grass. Peter, with nature tempestuous as the sea that he once tried to walk, at one look from Christ went out and wept bitterly. Rich harvests of grace may grow on the summit of the jagged steep, and flocks of Christian graces may find pasturage in fields of bramble and rock. Though your disposition may be all a-bristle with fretfulness, though you have a temper a-gleam with quick lightnings, though your avarice be like that of the horse leech, crying, "Give!" though damnable impurities have wrapped you in all consuming fire, God can drive that devil out of your soul, and over the chaos and the darkness he can say, "Let there be light." Converting grace has lifted the drunkard from the ditch and snatched the knife from the hand of the assassin and the false keys from the burglar and in the pestiferous lanes of the city met the daughter of sin under the dim lamplight and scattered her sorrow and her guilt with the words, "Thy sins are forgiven; go, and sin no more." For scarlet sin a scarlet atonement.

Other persons apologize for not entering the Christian life because of the inconsistencies of those who profess religion. There are thousands of poor farmers. They do not know the value of soils or the proper rotation of crops. Their corn is shorter in the stalk smaller in the ear. They have less bushels to the acre than their neighbors. But who declines being a farmer because there are so many farmers? There are thousands of incompetent merchants. They buy at a wrong time. They get cheated in the sale of their goods. Every bad bargain is to them a tale of disaster. They fail after awhile and go out of business. But who declines being a merchant because there are so many incompetent merchants? There are thousands of poor lawyers. They do not draw a declaration that will stand the test. They cannot recover damages. They cannot help a defendant escape from the injustice of persecutors. They are the worst peddlers against any case in which they are retained. But who declines being a lawyer because there are so many incompetent lawyers? Yet there are tens of thousands of people who decline being religious because there are many unworthy Christians. No man says it is illogical. Poor lawyers nothing against jurisprudence; poor physicians are nothing against medicine; poor farmers are nothing against agriculture, and mean, contemptible professors of religion are not against our glorious Christianity.

False Lights to Be Avoided.

Sometimes you have been misled along on a summer night by a swarm of lights that look like stars, and you have seen lights that kindle over decayed vegetation—lights which are called jack-o'-lantern or will-o'-the-wisp. These lights are merely sonorous miasmata. My friends, on your way to heaven you will want a better light than the will-o'-the-wisps wobble on the rotten character of ungodly Christians. Exudations from sonorous trees in our neighbor's garden will make a very poor balm for wounds.

Sickness will come, and we will be pushed out toward the Red sea which divides this world from the next, not the inconsistency of Christians. The rod of faith, will wave back the terrors as a commander wheels his banner. The judgment will come, with its tender shod solemnities. Oh, then we will not stop and say, "There was a man who was a Christian; there was a cowardly Christian; there was an impure Christian. In that day as now, 'If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself, but thou scornest thou alone shall bear.' Why, my brother, the inconsistency of Christians, so far from being an argument to keep you away from religion, ought to be an argument to drive you to him. The best place for a sick doctor is in a neighborhood where there are all poor doctors, the best place for an enterprising merchant to open a store is in a place where the bankrupt makers do not understand their business, and the best place for you, if you want to become the illustrious complete Christian, the best place for you is to come right down among those who are so incompetent and so inconsistent sometimes. Show us how, by your example."

Other persons apologize for not coming Christians because they are too busy. Time, as though religion muddled the brain of the accountant or tripped the pen of the author or thickened the tongue of the orator or weakened the arm of the mechanic or scattered the briefs of the lawyer or interrupted the sales of the merchant. They bolt the store doors against it and fight it with trowels and with yardsticks, crying, "Away with your religion!"

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

less be accepted, as the affair has been given wide prominence throughout the State, and the extracts from the article that have been published have aroused great indignation.

In his article Professor Sledd states that the negro is not given his rights in the South, and that lynching is largely caused by other crimes than criminal assault, and that the white people generally have a feeling of loathing and contempt for the negro.

The extracts published have caused him to be branded as a South-hater and an advocate of social equality. Professor Sledd says he is proud of his Southern birth, and denies that he favors social equality. He says that any person who reads his article in its entirety will agree with him in the main points set forth.

Professor Sledd's resignation was received with surprise, since it was generally believed that he would prefer to be dismissed to resigning voluntarily. However, such a course would have brought the college into undesirable notoriety, and he may have wished to avoid this, as he states that he resigns in the interest of the college.

Emory College is supported by the Methodists of Georgia and Alabama, and is an institution of great eminence in this part of the country. Since Professor Sledd has been at Emory he has done much to raise the grade of its Latin Department. A few years ago he was married to Miss Fencie Candler, a daughter of Bishop Warren A. Candler, former president of the college.—Dispatch.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

August 6, 1902.

Some months ago one of the most eloquent of the Washington clergymen preached on the subject of charity. He described Nineveh and Babylon and Alexandria, then suddenly stopped and inquired what it was that was missing from the pictures he had drawn so vividly. Replying to his own question, he said that nowhere had he mentioned any charitable institution, for in those days none existed; no hospitals, no asylums, no homes for the aged, nor were such built until the doctrine of Christ had permeated the world and taught the beauties of charity. Therein lay the great difference between pagan and Christian civilization. Nowhere is that difference better emphasized than in the capital city of the United States. Many church members are absent from the city, many pastors are out of town, but the good works which they have established and endowed continue on their accustomed lines, alleviating the pains of the poor, the infants and the aged.

One of these institutions is the "Neighborhood House," which, modeled on the lines of Hull House in Chicago, is doing on a small scale for Washington the same work which Hull House, under the capable direction of Miss Jane Adams, is doing for Chicago. "Neighborhood House" is an old-fashioned Southern home, and is the residence of Mr. Charles F. Weller, secretary of the Associated Charities, his wife and mother. There, all are welcome and a beautiful and attractive playground helps to keep the numerous little ones of the neighborhood off the hot and dusty streets. A free kindergarten, maintained through the generosity of Mrs. Phoebe A. Hearst, is conducted for five days in the week, and there those mothers whose duties call them away from home may leave their little ones with the knowledge that they will be safe and happy until the day's work is done. Certain evenings of the week are devoted to work among the young people, work so ably disguised as to appear only as an entertainment and yet productive of the most excellent results in the inculcation of a high standard of morality and the cultivation of ambitions which will lead to self-culture and the broadening of the mind. A young peoples' debating society and a young men's glee club are among the means utilized to extend the influence of Neighborhood House, and both have proved highly successful.

A summer school, conducted in one of the poorer neighborhoods, has just closed after a gratifying successful session. No funds were available for this school, but the teachers voluntarily forfeited a part of their vacations and devoted themselves to the work of teaching without compensation. The District authorities donated the use of the building. In its methods, the vacation school deviated to a considerable extent from the lines of the regular curriculum, and the pupils were taught to do many useful things, thus developing their creative instincts and at the same time adding to their useful abilities. The girls were taught to sew and cook, and the boys were trained, in so far as funds would permit, in the use of tools, etc. They drew their own designs and then executed them, and much of the work turned out was of a surprisingly creditable character. It is hoped that by another year philanthropic persons can be induced to place a considerable fund at the disposal of those teachers who are willing to devote their own time to the work, that thus, several summer schools may be conducted.

Philanthropic work in Washington this summer also includes a number of "fresh air funds," which are used to afford weary mothers and suffering children some respite from the heat of the city. Numerous excursions are organized, whereby parents and their children may go to the resorts along Chesapeake Bay or for a sail down the Potomac. On all of these excursions one, and sometimes several, physicians go along, prescribing for such as require their services, and oftentimes becoming acquainted with cases which demand their assistance for many days afterwards, but for which they receive no compensation.

The news has been received in Washington, with much interest, that certain persons in New York, most of them members of the Anti-Saloon League, are endeavoring to secure a law which will forbid adults from giving intoxicating liquor to infants. A pitiable case recently came to the attention of the public, wherein the police took up, in a sad state of inebriation, two tiny children on the streets of New York. These little ones had been taken to a beer garden by their parents, and had been given frequent sips of beer and Rhine wine until it had gone to their heads. Unobserved by their parents, they had wandered into the street, where they were discovered by the police, too intoxicated to be able to tell who they were or where they belonged. Unfortunately this is not a solitary instance, but a common one, although the little unfortunates seldom fall into the hands of the police. A similar instance occurred in Washington during the past winter, although in that case the servants were more to blame than the parents. A dinner party was in progress, and the servants permitted two children, aged eight and ten years, to drain the glasses as they were brought from the table. Finally one of the children became so ill that a doctor had to be sent for, and neither of the patients recovered for more than a week.

A gentleman who returned recently from Oyster Bay tells an amusing and characteristic story of the President. This gentleman attended church in Oyster Bay and sat immediately back of the Presidential pew. Dr. Washburn, the pastor, in the course of his sermon, told some anecdotes in regard to athletics and brought out the point that college athletics were often greater builders of character than were the studies pursued. As the reverend doctor proceeded, Mr. Roosevelt became much interested, and finally enthusiastic, so much so, that it became necessary for Mrs. Roosevelt to give him repeated warning glances to prevent a too lively demonstration of his approval. When the sermon was concluded, two gentlemen passed the collection plates and Mr. Roosevelt turned to his wife and said, in what he presumably mistook for a whisper, "I can put a $5 bill in the plate if I can't applaud," and he suited the action to the word.

The frequently asked question, "What becomes of our exports of manufactures?" is now definitely answered by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. While it has been practicable to show the countries to which any given article is sent in any given year, the figures of the Bureau have not formerly been so adjusted as to render it practicable to determine what share of the total exports of manufactures was sent to a given country or grand division of the world; or, in other words, the location of the principal markets for American manufactures. These facts are now shown by a series of tables compiled by the Bureau. They show that during the year 1901 52 per cent. of the manufactures exported went to Europe, 23 per cent. to North America, 6.6 per cent. to South America, 8.2 per cent. to Asia, 7 per cent. to Oceania, and a little less than 3 per cent. to Africa. The total value of manufactures exported to Europe was $215,000,000; to North America, other than the United States, $96,000,000; to South America, $27,000,000; to Asia, $33,700,000; to Oceania, $29,000,000, and to Africa, $10,500,000. Of the total exports of manufactures to Europe, amounting to $215,000,000, the largest item was iron and steel manufacture to the value of $43,812,323, the next items in order of magnitude being copper manufactures, $41,454,074; oil refined or manufactured, $40,735,541; leather and manufactures thereof, $21,108,321; agricultural implements, $14,945,530; chemicals, drugs and dyes, $6,741,068; paraffin, $5,931,471; wood manufactures, $5,595,256; scientific instruments, $3,840,763; cars and carriages, $3,718,381; cotton manufactures, $2,737,890; India rubber manufactures, $2,187,453; paper and manufactures thereof, $2,290,048; and musical instruments, $1,995,092. To North America the largest item in the exports of manufactures was iron and steel, $13,518,293; other important items being cotton manufactures, $628,035; cars and carriages, $3,577,651; leather and manufactures of, $206,321, and wood manufactures, $279,527. To South America, iron and steel exports were $8,754,800; oils refined, $1,836,106; and cotton manufactures, $3,321,494. To Asia, oils refined or manufactured formed the largest item, $12,443,128, the next largest items being iron and steel manufactures, $8,992,967; cotton manufactures, $6,355,381; and tobacco manufactures, $1,000,857. To Oceania the principal manufactures exported were iron and steel manufactures, $5,876,602; oils, refined, $3,019,661; paper and manufactures, $2,279,601; and leather and manufactures, $2,118,101. To Africa iron and steel manufactures formed the largest item, $2,368,635, next in order being oils, refined, $1,957,957; spirits, distilled, $1,388,801; wood manufactures, $650,951; and cars and carriages, $543,674.

Of the agricultural implements exported, amounting to $16,313,434, the shipments to Europe were $10,494,531; to North America, $2,608,862; to South America, $1,726,973, and to Oceania $1,010,101. Of the $20,272,418 worth of cotton manufactures exported, $6,629,935 went to North America; $6,355,381 to Asia; $3,321,494 to South America; $8,871,602 to Oceania, and $8,754,800 to Africa. Of the $117,319,320 worth of iron and steel manufactures exported, $13,812,323 went to Europe, $43,518,293 to North America, $8,992,967 to Asia, $8,871,602 to Oceania, and $2,368,635 to Africa.

In conjunction with the tables showing the distribution of manufactures by countries and grand divisions, the Bureau has prepared a statement which shows for the first time the exportation of manufactures in each year from 1790 to the present time. In 1790 the total amounted to a little over $1,000,000, and formed 6 per cent. of the total exports; in the decade from 1790 to 1800 exports of manufactures averaged about $2,000,000 per annum; in the decades ending with 1810 and 1820 respectively, they averaged about $3,000,000 per annum, and formed about 10 per cent. of the total exports; in the decade 1821-1830 they averaged about $6,000,000, and never reached as much as $10,000,000 prior to 1840. By 1850 the exports of manufactures had reached $17,500,000, and in 1860 for the first time touched the $40,000,000 mark, but did not cross the $50,000,000 line until 70, when they amounted to $68,279-

4. In 1877 they for the first time crossed the $100,000,000 line, the total for that year being $122,577,652. In 196 they crossed the $200,000,000 line, the total for that year being $228,571-8; in 1899 the total was $339,592,146, and since 1900 the exportation of manufactures has constantly exceeded $400-0,000 per annum.

MANHOOD IN THE MECHANIC.
CULTURE SHOULD UNDERLIE TRAINING.
It is evident, says the Biblical Recorder, that the South will offer great opportunities for half a century or more to come, to young men who are trained for practical employments.
Every day now alluring opportunities are offered to young men who were trained in offices of workers, while their fellows were at colleges. Whether in manufacture, farming or commerce, the young man who brings himself intelligently and earnestly to his tasks will reap richer harvests than have yet been reaped in the South.
Any a boy not meant to be preacher or teacher or lawyer should prepare none the less earnestly to be manufacturer, builder or railroad man with full confidence of serving his day effectually and reaching a worthy reward.
But in his preparation, whether in school or office or shop, he should not forget the man in him. He should not sacrifice the man in him upon the altar of the mechanic. Let him neither sacrifice the mechanic. The true man will save them both in himself.

Of course parents and young men are impatient of the schools, and of God's tedious ways! They cannot spend the time necessary to acquiring both a general and a special preparation. The boy must be making money. Made in the image of God as he is! To be sure the argument is a compelling one with time, and we recognize its absolute force. And yet it is a pity to put a handicap upon one's whole life forever merely for lack of time early in life.
Granted that the boy ought to prepare for an industrial career—and we not mains nevertheless that he deserves more than to be trained to work and make money. There are the incomparably larger concerns of his mind, tastes, spirit and relations as citizen, neighbor and father, never to be forgotten.

And so while we would encourage industrial education, as it is called, we would also abate not one jot of the old time emphasis upon general culture.

our store, our office, our factory: They do not understand that religion in this workday world will help you to do anything you ought to do. It can lay a keel; it can sail a ship; it can buy a cargo; it can work a pulley; it can pave a street; it can fit a wrist-band; it can write a constitution; it can marshal a host. It is as appropriate to the astronomer as his telescope, to the chemist as his laboratory, to the mason as his plumb line, to the carpenter as his plane, to the child as his marbles, to grandfather as his staff.

Time to Be Religious.

No time to be religious here! You have no time not to be religious. You might as well have no clerks in your store, no books in your library, no compass on your ship, no rifle in the battle, no hat for your head, no coat for your back, no shoes for your feet. Better travel on toward eternity bare-headed and barefooted and houseless and homeless and friendless than to go through life without religion. Did religion make Raleigh any less of a statesman or Havelock any less of a soldier or Grinnell any less of a merchant or West any less of a painter? Why, my friends, religion is the best security in every bargain; it is the sweetest note in every song; it is the brightest gem in every coronet. No time to be religious? Why, you will have to take time to be sick, to be troubled, to die. Our world is only the wharf from which we are to embark for heaven. No time to secure the friendship of Christ? No time to buy a lamp and trim it for that walk through the darkness which otherwise will be illumined only by the whiteness of the tombstones? No time to educate the eye for heavenly splendors or the hand for choral harps or the ear for everlasting songs or the soul for honor, glory and immortality? One would think we had time for nothing else.

Other persons apologize for not entering the Christian life because it is time enough yet. That is very like those persons who send regrets and say, "I will come in perhaps at 11 or 12 o'clock; I will not be there at the opening of the banquet, but I will be there at the close." Not yet! Not yet! Now, I do not give any doleful view of this life. There is nothing in my nature, nothing in the grace of God, that tends toward a doleful view of human life. I have not much sympathy with Addison's description of the "Vision of Mirza," where he represents human life as being a bridge of a hundred arches and both ends of the bridge covered with clouds and, the race coming on, the most of them falling down through the first span and all of them falling down through the last span. It is a very dismal picture. I have not much sympathy with the Spanish proverb which says, "The sky is good and the earth is good; that which is bad is between the earth and the sky." But, while we as Christian men are bound to take a cheerful view of life, we must also confess that life is a great uncertainty and that man who says "I can't become a Christian because there is time enough yet" is running a risk infinite. You do not perhaps realize the fact that this descending grade of sin gets steeper and steeper and that you are gathering up a rush and velocity which after awhile may not answer to the brakes.

The Delusion In Delay.

Be not among those who give their whole life to the world and then give their corpse to God. It does not seem fair that while our pulses are in full play of health we serve ourselves and serve the world and then make God at last the present of a coffin. It does not seem right that we run our ship from coast to coast carrying our goes for ourselves and then, when the ship is crushed in the rocks, give to God the shivered timbers. It is a great thing for a man on his dying pillow to repent—better that than never at all; but how much better, how much more generous, it would have been if he had repented fifty years before! My friends, you will never get over these procrastinations.

Here is a delusion. People think, "I can go on in sin and worldliness, but after awhile I will repent and then it will be as though I had come at the very start." What a mistake! No one ever gets fully over procrastination. If you give your soul to God some other time than this, you will enter heaven with only half the capacity for enjoyment and knowledge you might have had. There will be heights of blessedness you might have attained that then you will never reach; thrones of glory on which you might have been seated, but which you will never climb. We will never get over procrastination, neither in time nor in eternity.

We have started on a march from which there is no retreat. The shadows of eternity gather on our pathway. How insignificant is time compared with the vast eternity! As I was thinking of this one day while coming down over the Alleghany mountains at noon, by that wonderful pass which you all have heard described as the Horseshoe—a depression in the side of the mountain where the train almost turns back again upon itself, and you see how appropriate is the name of the Horseshoe—and thinking on this very theme and preparing this very sermon, it seemed to me as if the great courser of eternity speeding along had just struck the mountain with one hoof and gone on into illimitable space. So short is time, so insignificant is earth, compared with the vast eternity! This moment voices roll down the sky and all the worlds of light are ready to rejoice at your disenchantment. Rush not into the presence of the King ragged with sin when you may have this robe of righteousness. Dash not your foot to pieces against the throne of a crucified Christ. Throw not your crown of life off the battlements. All the scribes of God are at this hour ready with volumes of living light to record the news of your soul emancipated.

Why He Resigned.

For the sake of his duty the late Senator William J. Sewell sacrificed his ambition and for a time threw himself open to misinterpretation. The New York Times prints the real explanation of what people who did not know the facts thought, to say the least, an ungrateful action.

At the outbreak of the Spanish war Senator Sewell sought and obtained a commission as brigadier general. He was a veteran of the civil war and stood a good chance of being sent to the front, but after his appointment the president sent for him.

"You will have to decline the commission," said Mr. McKinley, who then explained that the administration needed his support in the senate.

"I have set my heart on getting into the saddle again," said the senator, "and New Jersey will send you somebody else whom you can depend on to take my place in the senate."

"But a new man cannot take your place on the military affairs committee," replied the president, and then in a gently compelling tone ended the interview by saying, "Your commander in chief needs you where you are."

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course: The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent Taxes to pay. No Profits to made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positive Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Editorial.

APPEAL TO GOVERNOR.

A voluminous petition has been presented to the Governor asking him to convoke the General Assembly in extraordinary session for the purpose of impeaching and trying Judge Clarence J. Campbell, of Amherst county.

The petition is prepared and presented by Mr. Otto L. Evans, Commonwealth's attorney for the county of Amherst. It is supplemented by a summary of the record of the case, with copious quotations therefrom, giving nearly all the testimony of Judge Campbell on direct examination, cross-examination, re-examination, and re-direct examination.

MR. EVAN'S OPEN LETTER.

In his open letter to the Governor, accompanying the petition, Mr. Evans thus states the reasons actuating him in this appeal in the following language:

To the Hon. A. J. Montague, Governor of Virginia, Executive Mansion, Richmond, Va.:

Sir,—As president of the Court of Last Resort for the State of Virginia, I send herewith a petition for an appeal, investigation, and rehearing of the case of Commonwealth vs. C. J. Campbell, which was recently heard in the Amherst County Court, and resulted in a judgment adverse to the Commonwealth. As attorney for the Commonwealth for the county of Amherst, and as such one of the sworn guardians of the honor of this State, I feel constrained to ask for a further hearing and investigation of this matter. I am assured that upon your making a careful examination of said petition, which as briefly as possible sets forth some of the most glaring errors committed by the trial court, and upon further examination of the voluminous record upon which the same is based, you cannot fail to be convinced that a great wrong has been done the Commonwealth of Virginia; that the honor and future welfare of this State requires this matter to be investigated thoroughly and quickly. As the public prosecutor in charge of this case, I ask that an opportunity be given me to present such evidence as I have at my command before the most honorable court of which you are president ex-officio. And when before this final tribunal the truth is disclosed, then, and not until then, will I feel that I have discharged the whole duty that I owe to my State.

UNUSUAL; NOT UNPRECEDENTED.

It may be asked why it has been necessary to resort to this unusual, though not unprecedented, appeal? My reply is that there is a spirit of rank commercialism gaining ground among our people. Its watchword is, "It doesn't pay." The result is, a lowering of the morale, a loss of honor, and an infringement of the liberties of the people. It has even been intimated that certain political influences have been called upon to prevent a thorough and impartial investigation of this matter. In the name of justice and right, shall the honor and integrity of Virginia be traded for a mess of pottage politics? Shall principle be sacrificed to policy, and commercialism be adopted as a cloak for corruption? Is it not time to call a halt and see where this insidious tendency is leading us? Should any action be condemned as unusual, if performed with the honest purpose of preserving the virtue and integrity of the people?

I feel very deeply in this matter, being fully convinced that we are confronted by what, to say the least, is a most grave situation.

When the blood in the human body is diseased, and the trouble breaks out in a malignant excrescence, we are told by our doctors that the sooner this is removed the better the chance of recovery, and surer the cure. When the body politic shows the presence of a destroying ill, as evidenced by the outbreak in the case under consideration, the perpetuation of our political integrity demands speedy and effective action.

It devolves upon you as the honored and trusted Governor of this Commonwealth to say whether this is so urgent a matter as to call for the convening of the Legislature in extra session; whether Virginia's fair name and the public reverence for her judicial system will be jeopardized by delay until the adjourned session, which meets in November.

Believing that your strong sense of justice and State pride will guide you to a wise decision, I am,

Very respectfully,

OTTO L. EVANS,
Commonwealth's Attorney.

TWELVE EXCEPTIONS TO VERDICT.

The petition itself sets forth twelve exceptions to the verdict, or reasons why it should be overruled and set aside. The petitioner asks the Governor to grant a hearing and investigation of this case, because of the assignment of palpable errors indicated and others introduced. There are seventeen type-written pages of this document alone.

The petition avers that the judgment is erroneous in twelve particulars, as follows:

That the accused selected the grand jury, and admitted packing it for the purpose of having himself indicted.

That Judge Wood, who presided, did so without authority of law, having been selected by Judge Campbell.

That the trial court erred in refusing to grant a continuance.

That the trial court erred in making up the panel of the jury, accepting eleven, "all the personal and political friends of the accused," from the thirteen summoned.

That in giving instructions asked for by the defendant the court erred in trying to shut off argument by the Commonwealth's attorney, and in giving an instruction (No. 7) asked by the accused.

That the court erred in allowing the friends of the accused to crowd around the bar and indulge in repeated laughter and applause.

That the court erred seriously in requiring the Commonwealth's attorney to close the argument between twilight and dark, when he was hungry, sick, and broken down.

That when the jury reported failure to agree after some conference, the accused and his counsel in the jury's presence had insisted that they be sent back for twenty-five minutes, with the understanding that they were to be held over until Monday morning.

That the finding of the jury was in opposition to all the evidence and the instructions of the court. (It is in support of this contention that the testimony of Judge Campbell is incorporated.)

JURY'S GROSS MISCONDUCT.

That the jury, aside from their gross misconduct—in undertaking to sit in the trial of their friend, were guilty of other improper acts, some of which are specified.

That the misconduct of the accused during the trial, in view of the fact that he was a judge, is deserving of attention.

Finally, that the accused within thirty minutes after his acquittal permitted his friends to pass "certain ready-made resolutions," which are appended to the petition.

Testimony is adduced in support of several of the contentions. The petitioner closes with an appeal that a full, fair, and unprejudiced hearing of the case may be had, and Virginia's honor vindicated, a law-breaker punished, and the erroneous judgment condemned.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

It is not the man that can mix without fear in the thick of the battle; that can stand firm under a shower of lead, or face the cannon's mouth; that is the truly heroic man. It is the man that can steadily pursue the line of duty amid criticism and defamation; the man that can bear nagging and being rallied at from hour to hour without retaliation. This is the heroism of patience; the heroism of silence. The world's greatest heroes have, therefore, died "unwept, unhonored and unsung." I knew a woman who lived with a husband between forty and fifty years, and the husband was heard to say that she had never spoken an unkind word to him. The husband also knew that she could not return the compliment. The secret of that woman's patience was that she made it a rule through life to be on her knees every three waking hours.

The August elections are over in Tennessee, and there was the usual buying and selling of votes. Votes in my county were marketed at from fifty cents to three dollars and seventy-five cents. This would be exceedingly cheap but for the fact that the man reserves to himself the right to sell himself again at future elections. Some sell out to both sides, and then vote their sentiments, if they have any. It is, however, my opinion that such men have no sentiments; they have nothing higher than appetites. They are not men; they are cattle. But what of the man that buys? He is a worse man than the seller. He usually has more intelligence and a keener perception of the distinction between right and wrong. There is some protection for the poor man, who sells his vote; he is in need, possibly harassed by debt and pinched with hunger. His richer neighbor, who buys his vote, is prompted by motives of unmitigated depravity. I long to see the day when

The tub sounded inviting, and before many minutes had passed I was in a delightful glow, the effect of cold water and a rough towel and that consciousness of virtue that comes to a man who has had courage to face his cold bath on a winter morning.

The breakfast was laid with fine taste. A diminutive pine tree in a pot hung round with wintergreen stood in the center of the table.

"Well, now, this looks good—porridge, beefsteak, potatoes, toast and marmalade."

"I hope you will enjoy it all."

There was not much talk over our meal. Mr. Craig was evidently preoccupied and as blue as his politeness would allow him. Slavin's victory weighed upon his spirits. Finally he burst out: "Look here! I can't—I won't stand it! Something must be done. Last Christmas this town was for two weeks, as one of the miners said, 'a little suburb of hell.' It was something too awful. And at the end of it all one young fellow was found dead in his shack, and twenty or more crawled back to the camps, leaving their three months' pay with Slavin and his suckers. I won't stand it. I say!" He turned fiercely on me. "What's to be done?"

This rather took me aback, for I had troubled myself with nothing of this sort in my life before, being fully occupied in keeping myself out of difficulty and allowing others the same privilege. So I ventured the consolation that he had done his part and that a spree more or less would not make much difference to these men. But the next moment I wished I had been slower in speech, for he swiftly faced me, and his words came like a torrent:

"God forgive you that heartless word! Do you know— But, no; you don't know what you are saying. You don't know that these men have been clambering for dear life out of a fearful pit for three months past and doing good climbing, too, poor chaps. You don't think that some of them have wives, most of them mothers and sisters, in the east or across the sea, for whose sake they are slaving here, the miners hoping to save enough to bring their families to this homeless place, the rest to make enough to go back with credit. Why, there's Nixon, miner, splendid chap, who has been here for two years and drawing the highest pay. Twice he has been in sight of his heaven, for he can't speak of his wife and babies without breaking up, and twice that slick son of the devil—that's Scripture, mind you, Slavin, got him and 'rolled' him, as the boys say. He went back to the mines broken in body and in heart. He says this is his third and last chance. If Slavin gets him, his wife and babies will never see him on earth or in heaven. There are Sandy and the rest too. And," he added in a lower tone and with the curious little thrill of pathos in his voice, "this is the day the Savior came to the world."

He looked at me then with a little, sad smile, "But I don't want to abuse you."

"Do. I enjoy it. I'm a beast, a selfish beast!" For somehow his intense, blazing earnestness made me feel uncomfortably small.

"What have we to offer?" I demanded.

"Wait till I have got these things cleared away and my housekeeping done."

I pressed my services upon him, somewhat feebly, I own, for I can't bear dishwater, but he rejected my offer.

"I don't like trusting my china to the hands of a tenderfoot."

"Quite right, though your china would prove an excellent means of defense at long range."

It was delft a quarter of an inch thick, so I smoked while he washed up, swept, dusted and arranged the room.

After the room was ordered to his taste we proceeded to hold counsel. He could offer dinner, magic lantern, music. "We can fill in time for two hours, but," he added gloomily, "we can't beat the dance and the high kickers."

"Have you nothing new or startling?"

He shook his head.

"No kind of show—dog snow, snake charmer?"

"Slavin has a monopoly of the snakes."

Then he added hesitatingly: "There was an old Punch and Judy chap here last year, but he died. Whisky again."

"What happened to his show?"

"The Black Rock hotel man took it for board and whisky bill. He has it still, I suppose."

I did not much relish the business, but I hated to see him beaten, so I ventured, "I have run a Punch and Judy in an amateur way at the variety."

He sprang to his feet with a yell.

"You have! You mean to say it? We've got them! We've beaten them!" He had an extraordinary way of taking your help for granted. "The miner chaps, mostly English and Welsh, went mad over the poor old showman and made him so wealthy that in sheer gratitude he drank himself to death."

He walked up and down in high excitement and in such evident delight that I felt pledged to my best effort.

"Well," I said, "first the poster. We must beat them in that."

He brought me large sheets of brown paper, and after two hours' hard work I had half a dozen pictorial showbills done in gorgeous colors and striking designs. They were good, if I do say it myself.

The turkey, the magic lantern, the Punch and Judy show, were all there, the last with a crowd before it in gaping delight. A few explanatory words were thrown in, emphasizing the highly artistic nature of the Punch and Judy entertainment.

Craig was delighted and proceeded to perfect his plans. He had some half a dozen young men, four young ladies and eight or ten matrons upon whom he could depend for help. These he organized into a vigilance committee charged with the duty of preventing miners and lumbermen from getting away to Slavin's.

"The critical moments will be immediately before and after dinner and then again after the show is over," he explained. "The first two crises must be left to the care of Punch and Judy, and, as for the last, I am not yet sure what shall be done." But I saw he had something in his head, for he added, "I shall see Mrs. Mayor."

"Who is Mrs. Mayor?" I asked.

But he made no reply. He was a born fighter, and he put the fighting spirit into us all. We were bound to win.

The sports were to begin at 2 o'clock. By lunchtime everything was in readiness. After lunch I was having a quiet smoke in Craig's shack when in he rushed, saying:

"The battle will be lost before it is fought. If we lose Quatre Bras, we shall never get to Waterloo."

"What's up?"

"Slavin, just now. The miners are coming in, and he will have them in tow in half an hour."

He looked at me appealingly. I knew what he wanted.

"All right. I suppose I must, but it is an awful bore that a man can't have a quiet smoke."

"You're not half a bad fellow," he replied, smiling. "I shall get the ladies to furnish coffee inside the booth. You furnish them intellectual nourishment in front with dear old Punch and Judy."

He sent a boy with a bell round the village, announcing, "Punch and Judy in front of the Christmas booth beside the church," and for three-quarters of an hour I shrieked and sweated in that awful little pen. But it was almost worth it to hear the shouts of approval and laughter that greeted my performance. It was, cold work standing about, so that the crowd was quite ready to respond when Punch, after being duly hanged, came forward and invited all into the booth for the hot coffee which Judy had ordered.

In they trooped, and Quatre Bras was won.

No sooner were the miners safely engaged with their coffee than I heard a great noise of bells and of men shouting, and on reaching the street I saw that the men from the lumber camp were coming in. Two immense sleighs, decorated with ribbons and spruce boughs, each drawn by a four horse team gayly adorned, filled with some fifty men singing and shouting with all their might, were coming down the hill road at full gallop. Round the corner they swung, dashed at full speed across the bridge and down the street and pulled up after they had made the circuit of a block, to the great admiration of the onlookers. Among others, Slavin sauntered up good naturedly, making himself agreeable to Sandy and those who were helping to unhitch his team.

"Oh, you need not take trouble with me or my team, Mike Slavin. Batchees and me and the boys can look after them fine," said Sandy coolly.

This rejecting of hospitality was perfectly understood by Slavin and by all. "Dat's too bad, heh?" said Baptiste wickedly. "And, Sandy, he's got good money on his pocket for sure too."

The boys laughed, and Slavin, joining in, turned away with Keefe and Blaney, but by the look in his eye I knew he was playing Br'er Rabbit and lying low.

Mr. Craig just then came up.

"Hello, boys! Too late for Punch and Judy, but just in time for hot coffee and doughnuts."

"Bon! Dat's fuss rate," said Banfiste heartily. "Where you keep him?"

"Up in the tent next the church there. The miners are all in."

"Ah! Dat's so? Dat's bad news for the shanty men, heh, Sandy?" said the little Frenchman dolefully.

"There were a clothesbasket full of doughnuts and a boiler of coffee left as I passed just now," said Craig encouragingly.

"Allons, mes garçons. Vitel! Never say keel!" cried Baptiste excitedly, stripping off the harness.

But Sandy would not leave the horse till they were carefully rubbed down, blanketed and fed, for he was entered for the four horse race, and it behooved him to do his best to win. Besides, he scorned to hurry himself for anything so unimportant as eating. That he considered hardly worthy even of Baptiste. Mr. Craig managed to get a word with him before he went off, and I saw Sandy solemnly and emphatically shake his head, saying: "Ah, we'll beat him this day!" And I gathered that he was added to the vigilance committee.

Old man Nelson was busy with his own team. He turned slowly at Mr. Craig's greeting. "How is it, Nelson?" And it was in a very grave voice he answered:

"I hardly know, sir, but I am not gone yet, though it seems little to hold to."

"All you want for a grip is what your hand can cover. What would you have? And, besides, do you know why you are not gone yet?"

The old man waited, looking at the minister gravely.

"Because he hasn't let go his grip of you."

"How do you know he's gripped me?"

"Now, look here, Nelson, do you want to quit this thing and give it all up?"

"No, no—for heaven's sake, no! Why do you think I have lost it?" said Nelson almost piteously.

"Well, he's keener about it than you, and I'll bet you haven't thought it worth while to thank him."

"To thank him," he repeated almost stupidly, "for—"

"For keeping you where you are over night," said Mr. Craig almost sternly.

The old man gazed at the minister, a light growing in his eyes.

"You're right! Thank God, you're right!"

And then he turned quickly away and went into the stable behind his team. It was a minute before he came out. Over his face there was a trembling joy.

"Can't I do anything for you today?" he asked humbly.

"Indeed you just can," said the minister, taking his hand and shaking it very warmly, and then he told him Slavin's programme and ours.

"Sandy is all right till after his race. After that is his time of danger," said the minister.

"I'll stay with him, sir," said old Nelson in the tone of a man taking a covenant and immediately set off for the coffee tent.

"Here comes another recruit for your corps," I said, pointing to Leslie Graeme, who was coming down the street at that moment in his light sleigh.

"I am not so sure. Do you think you could get him?"

I laughed. "You are a good one."

"Well," he replied half defiantly, "is not this your fight too?"

"We can forgive the one who injures us," said a wise student of human nature, "but the one whom we find it almost impossible to forgive is the one whom we have injured."

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

LESSON IX. THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 31

Text of the Lesson. Num. xxi, 1-9
Memory Verses. 6-8—Golden Text,
John iii, 14, 15—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1903, by American Press Association.]

1-3. He fought against Israel and took some of them prisoners.

This is the story of Arad the Canaanite, who dwelt in the south. He seems to have remembered the visit of the spies and possibly at that time did some talking and threatening, but now it is no handful of men who have come; it is a whole nation that he sees approaching, and in his folly he thinks to resist them, for he knows not the Lord nor His purposes. When Abram first came to the land, the Canaanites were in the land, and 400 years later we saw them there in last week's lesson (Gen. xii, 6; Num. xiii, 29). There are about thirty-eight years between the last lesson and this one, for in chapter xx, which begins with the death of Miriam and ends with the death of Aaron, we read in verse 1 that they are back at Kadesh, where they were in chapter xiii, 26, when they sent the spies, and we know from chapter xxxiii, 38, that Aaron died in the fortieth year after they left Egypt. How little is known of those thirty-eight years! It was time lost in wandering because of unbelief, for they are no nearer the promised land now than they were in the last lesson. How many believers thus wander a lifetime on the borders of a land they never enter, and all because of unbelief! They do really put their trust in the Lord Jesus and accept Him as their Saviour, but because they cannot obtain some one else's experience and will not take God at His word they wander on lacking assurance.

4. And they journeyed from Mount Hor by the way of the Red sea to compass the land of Edom, and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way.

Mount Hor is memorable as the place where Aaron died. Moses, Aaron and Eleazar went up into Mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation, and Moses, stripping Aaron of his garments, put them upon Eleazar, and Aaron died there (Num. xx, 27, 28). He was not sick, but his time had come to go home, and this is the brief account of it. It was gain to him. It was very far better (Phil. i, 21, 23, R. V.). The reason they had to compass the land of Edom instead of going through it was that the king would not allow them to pass through (Judg. xi, 16, 17).

5. And the people spake against God and against Moses.

They loathe the manna and say that there is no bread and no water. So they are full of trouble because they are rebellious and unmanageable. The record concerning them is found in Ps. lxxviii, 17, 18, 19, 22, 37, 40, 41. What a record of enmity against Him who loved them and sought only their welfare! See His heart toward them in Ps. lxxxi, 10-16, "I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt."

6. And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people, and much people of Israel died.

The New Testament admonition in this connection is, "Neither let us tempt Christ, as some of them also tempted and were destroyed of serpents" (1 Cor. x, 9). Lest any one might think that he never would be thus galled, it is written in the context, "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall," and lest one might think that his trials are unusually heavy and too much to be borne see verse 13.

7. Therefore the people came to Moses and said: We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord and against thee. Pray unto the Lord that He take away the serpents from us. And Moses prayed for the people.

Many a time Moses had prayed for them, and it is written of him that "Moses, His chosen, stood before Him in the breach to turn away His wrath, lest He should destroy them" (Ps. cxi, 23). Moses and Samuel and Daniel and other great intercessors are types of Him who ever liveth to make intercession for us (Heb. vii, 25; Rom. viii, 34), and there is exceeding great comfort in such words as 1 John i, 9, and Prov. xxviii, 13, l. c. Yet the time came when neither Moses nor Samuel, Noah, Daniel nor Job could avail for Israel if they should pray for them (Jer. xv, 1; Ezek. xiv, 14).

8, 9. And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent and set it upon a pole, and it shall come to pass that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live.

Thus Moses did, and it came to pass as the Lord had said. He who told Moses to do this saw in it a symbol of Himself on the cross for the sins of the world, and He so spoke of it to Nicodemus in our Golden Text for this lesson (John iii, 14, 15). That old serpent, the devil, by sin has bitten our race, and multitudes are perishing, but as the likeness of that which had bitten Israel was put upon a pole for their deliverance so the Lord Jesus was on the cross made sin for us that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him (11 Cor. v, 21). The serpent on the pole was suggestive of a dead, not living, serpent. So in Christ on the cross we see sin rendered harmless to injure those who are in Christ. "The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Cor. xv, 56, 57). As quickly as the eyes of a bitten Israelite fell upon the serpent on the pole he lived, and the moment a sinner looks to Jesus on the cross, suffering in his stead, there is life for him in Christ, as it is written, "Look unto me and be ye saved" (Isa. xlv, 22). The serpent on the pole was no thought of Moses, but the Lord's own provision.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic for the Week Beginning Aug. 31, "Communion and Transformation"—Text, Ex. xxxiv, 29-35; Luke ix, 28, 29.

"As he prayed the fashion of his countenance was altered."

So has it ever been; so will it ever be. Whoever talks with God will change and become like Him. In a very real sense this is true among men. A strong personality impresses himself on all who come in contact with him. Their opinions alter, the tones of voice become different, the walk and bodily actions gradually change and become more like that of the teacher. Part of this effect is from conscious imitation and part is involuntary. It is not uncommon to find two elderly persons who have lived many years together resembling each other remarkably in features, speech and in many other respects.

Companionship leads to similarity of nature and action. If this is true among men, how significantly true it is when we turn to divine companionship! This is the clew to the human participation in the divine nature. If the pure in heart see God, as Jesus declared they do, then looking upon Him we may expect them to gradually grow like Him so that godliness becomes their nature and we can see the divine characteristics in their words and work.

This is with us more than momentary ecstatic vision. Moses was in consultation with God alone in the mountain until he began to see the plans and to feel the thrill of the divine intention. The power and glory of God got hold of him, so that hunger and thirst were forgotten in the glow and uplift of a great thought and a mighty purpose. It could not be otherwise than that the face must show the radiance of the light which was in the soul. As clouds high in heaven show the radiance of the sun not yet risen, so the face reflects beams of soul light which have not come above the horizon of action.

The matter of most importance to us is neither the veil over Moses' face nor the white garments of Jesus, but the transformation which can come to us by like communion with God. Here lies one of the highest privileges of our earthly life. We can talk with God; we can enter into His thoughts, share His desires and aid in the accomplishment of His plans. Not only the preacher and religious teacher, but every one of God's children, can have companionship with Him. Our daily work can be glorified and all our doing lifted out of the dead level and mire of the corrupt and commonplace and transfigured and glorified. Moses' face, which shone, had the same old skin bronzed by forty years of desert life, but when God talked to him it shone like the face of an angel. Jesus' garments were the same everyday working clothes He had long worn, but when the soul glowed under the revelation of coming agony, crucifixion, death and resurrection, the raiment became white as snow. Let God by His Spirit fill our souls and all life, and its tasks shall shine with divine beauty and glory.

Silent Sorrow.

Far better the silence of sorrow than the sound of it. Far better the smile of trust than the tears of doubt. Far better the calm, serene brow than the wrinkles of petulance. The child that believes in his mother laughs at the foot that overturns his castle of blocks, and with a shout of glee he builds again the ruined towers into greater height. So do those who believe in God bear His strokes and take up the broken life and rear it into loftier spiritual attainment. Those who sulk and complain behold naught except blight and loss. And is there anywhere in the world a sadder sight than that of a dispirited man or woman? It is pathetic enough to stir the grief of angels. Ah, yes, in the silence of sorrow many a temple of nobler living has risen grandly to the bending skies of God's love, like that which Solomon planned, upon which the noise of workman's tools was not heard. Out of a quietness of soul such as this have reached the hands that have swung bells celestial into peals of joy.—Presbyterian Journal.

A Loss Indeed.

We can afford to lose much in this world. Most of our material possessions may be taken from us without any positive loss to life, but we cannot afford to lose faith in God or in each other. The man who has lost faith in humanity is ready to abandon faith in God, and such a man might as well be dead, for all the good he can be to the world or to himself. The great doers of the world are the great believers. A doubter has never yet been successful in this world in spite of the blessings that are sometimes heaped on doubters. "Send them home," said

Crucifixion on the night when there was nothing left to be done.—Baptist Union.

The Paths to God.

The paths to God are more in number than the breathings of created things.—From the Persian.

God's Thoughts.

God has a thought for the maple;
You may read that thought in the
Would you know His thought for granite?
Look at the granite and see!

His thought for the springing grass
Is told by the cool, green sod;
The rose unfolding its petals
Discloses the mind of God.

His thought for the butterfly's life
Is writ on the insect's wings;
The word He spake to the skylark
You hear when it soars and sings.

We think we are more than the bird,
More than the tree and the sod,
Yet, say, are we living our lives
As true to the thought of God?

AN ENEMY OF MAN.

STRONG WORDS ON THE DRINK QUESTION BY A BOSTON DIVINE.

The Traffic That Makes Drunkards Especially Condemned—Boys Warned to Refrain From Using Tobacco as Well as Alcohol.

Intemperance, producing drunkenness, is an enemy of man which words of description and no flag setting forth effects have fully set forth or can adequately represent, says Rev. John Lindsay Withrow of Boston in the Chicago Record-Herald. I have heard those from whom better things might have been expected that there are more lives destroyed by gluttony than by guzzling liquor. It is a very absurd and silly assertion and one who entertains such a belief either a dunce or a dupe under the influence of that subtle and ensnaring spirit of evil which befools tipplers. The serpent befooled Eve in Eden. Ask yourself how many death certificates have physicians of your town or circle of acquaintance written testifying that the dead died of excess too much? How many broils and brawls and how much bloodshed have record of in even the most abandoned community the cause of which is eating too much?

In instances without number we have confessed they had been drunk just before committing a foul or foul murder. If there should be a single murder committed in the United States in the next ten years by but total abstainers, how many, you, would there be? More than four-fifths of the inmates of our penitentiaries owe their degradation and condemnation to strong drink. He a philosopher and a phrase maker wrote (Proverbs xx, 1), "Wine, mocker and strong drink raging," is literally true. Intoxicating drinks mock the imaginary strength of men and women. It is one of the firstceptions practiced to excite the pride of a tippler that he is too strong to become a toper. Was there a drunkard who started out in the tasting times of indulgence to himself a wreck of decency? We doubt if there was. Yet by no means is one who tampers so ineffectually overcome, tongue and throat tormented by the impish spirit that hides the depth of the drink evil.

There is absolutely nothing to be said of the drunkard making a business of it. It is not a business. It is a right to the name of a business.

an outlaw. The holy Bible declares that "no drunkards shall enter into the kingdom of heaven." Much less shall the drunkard maker.

Meanwhile every sane soul is responsible for whatever frightful results follow if he indulges. Recently I read in a Chicago newspaper an editorial note, which I insert:

"What a temperance lesson it was when the other day during the session of the court which was to dispose of the child of a drunken mother the babe died in its mother's arms before the bench, as the physicians present testified, of starvation. And this happened in Chicago in the midst of a city dominated by the saloon. Judge, lawyers, policemen and witnesses all shed tears. The maudlin mother was the only person present unmoved. It is a pity we have not some John B. Gough to tell the story in words that burn. Is there no painter to immortalize himself by putting it on canvas? Reproduced by photogravure and scattered broadcast, what a sermon it would prove!"

On whose soul lies the responsibility of that child's starvation and that drunken mother's horrible degradation? One will answer that "the good people of Chicago are to blame." Measurably they are, and retribution will overtake those who do nothing and say nothing to make a scene like this impossible. Another answer is that the drunkard makers are accountable. They are. And if there is such a thing as everlasting damnation, bounding a lost spirit through all the depths and darkness of hell, I believe the liquor sellers, by whose traffic this beautiful woman was degraded, will be thus punished.

Let us speak in no soft and sympathetic terms of this old enemy, fusel (alcoholic drinks, nor yet of indulgence in opium and cocaine. As for tobacco, teach boys its abominable uncleanness. Point out to them a man walking up to another—maybe to a perfect stranger—and, getting very close, blowing his breath in the face of his victim. Ask the class if that would be bearable vulgarity. Make the picture vivid and, getting their indignant protest against such an insult, just press the question, "What difference is there between those who do that and those who fill their mouths with smoke and then blow it into the air of a room or defenseless persons to inhale?"

Ireland's "Paramount" Issue.
The New World (Catholic, Chicago) notes the temperance revivals now progressing in Ireland and England and says of the former:

We are very glad to note in our Irish exchanges that there is now going on in Ireland such a campaign in the cause of temperance as has not been known since the days of Father Mathew. We read in the pastorals of the bishops of the many days in which the demon of intemperance being fought and of the great progress that is being made toward the bringing out of a better state of things. Every lover of Ireland will regard this news with joy. Self government for Ireland is badly needed and will do much good when comes; the settlement of the land question is badly needed, and there will never be peace in the island till that question is settled, but what is needed there more than anything else is the settlement of the whisky question.

Great Tract Distribution.
By house to house visitation the Lockport (England) Good Templars have distributed over 20,000 tracts.

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

THE ORPHANAGE.

Within a short while the three handsome new buildings to be known as the Virginia Methodist Conference Orphanage will be opened and the hundreds of children to be taken care of there will make the beautiful place lively with their voices.

The orphanage buildings are nearing completion, and will be ready for a public opening by October 1st. The orphanage is located near the Broad Street road, about a mile and a half from the Virginia Home for Incurables. It is situated on the property formerly rented by Mr. Mayer and is regarded as one of the most picturesque sites that could have been selected in or near the city. A fine view of the surrounding country can be had from the place, which is situated on a hill, and overlooks the tracks of the Belt Line and Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac railroad. The buildings of the Union Theological Seminary and the suburbs of Barton Heights, Brookland Park and Sidney can be seen from the orphanage. A beautiful driveway is to lead to the orphanage from the Broad Street road. In front of the buildings are shade trees and a well.

MEMORIAL ADDITIONS.

To the east of the main building is the Vincent Memorial, a beautiful building, which is already completed, and to the west is seen the Branch Memorial, which is nearing completion. Work has been started on the superintendent's house, which is to be located west of the main building. The work on the buildings is being superintended by Captain Atkinson. Gilman & Sons are the contractors for the plastering; Mr. Reddy is doing the brickwork, and Mr. Fox has the contract for the carpentering. The middle building is the main structure of the orphanage, in which the children will be taught and public receptions will be held and entertainments given. On the top floor of the building is a large hall, where lectures may be heard and religious services held. The buildings will be heated throughout by steam. Every room will be lighted by electricity, as the orphanage will have an electric plant for the purpose. Gas pipes have also been placed in the building in case it should be found that the use of gas should be desired at any time.

WILL TEACH CHILDREN.

The main building has the appearance of a modern school. The interior is fitted up with blackboards and other things necessary for teaching the children who are to live at the institution. The memorial buildings are to be used as sleeping apartments. They are three stories high, and contain about eighteen rooms each, in addition to large hallways and play-rooms.

The grounds cover several hundred acres, over which the children may play during their leisure hours. Shade trees in various places will afford the children much pleasure. A brook extends through the land. There are many other things about the place which promise to make the place an ideal site for the orphanage.—Richmond News.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

Rev. R. H. Bennett presided at the Methodist preachers' meeting yesterday morning. Prayer was made by Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins, presiding elder of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore district.

Dr. Judkins gave a most encouraging report of the Church on the entire district. On all of the Conference collections there will be an advance on the reports of 1901. The spiritual condition of the churches is healthful. He said that over 1,000 conversions were reported on the district last year, but everything now points to even larger results this year. A handsome new church has been erected at Wachapreague, which is a credit to the zeal and Christian liberality of the Methodists of that town. Dr. Judkins preached at Lamberts Point Sunday morning and at Huntersville at night.

Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder of the Portsmouth district, preached at Monumental church Sunday morning, and at Park View at night. Large congregations attended both services. Mr. Vaden stated that the Rev. George W. Wray, who had been ill for weeks, at Newport News with an aggravated case of typhoid fever, is convalescing, and is now in the mountains, where he will rest for some time before again entering upon his pastorate at Trinity M. E. church, Newport News. Mr. Vaden said that his son, Dr. A. J. Vaden, who attended Mr. Wray during his sickness, and who had contracted the disease from him, was slowly improving, though still very sick.

Rev. N. H. Smith reported a very spiritual meeting at Oaklette church Sunday morning. It was one of the largest congregations he has had since he has been in charge of the church. He raised all of his Conference collections. In the afternoon he preached for Rev. E. T. Dadmun at Centenary, Mr. Dadmun filling his appointment at Bethel church, Norfolk county.

Rev. E. K. Odell preached at McKendree church Sunday morning and had a pleasant service. Mr. Odell has been assisting the Rev. D. J. Traynham in protracted services at Beach Grove, Norfolk county. The meeting was a profitable one. The church was built up spiritually and there were some conversions.

Rev. C. W. Cain preached to a large and deeply attentive congregation at Wright Memorial church Sunday morning and heard Rev. Dr. J. C. C. Newton at Owens Memorial at night.

Rev. D. J. Traynham preached to a very large congregation at Beach Grove Sunday morning. In the afternoon he preached at Joliffs. The revival at Beach Grove was healthful to the church in lifting it up to a higher plane spiritually. There were five who professed faith and a number of reclamations.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth reported a spiritual time at Lekies Memorial church Sunday. The Holy Spirit was present in the hearts of believers. The morning and afternoon congregations were larger than usual for the summer. Mr. Lambeth stated that he had received a letter from the Rev. W. R. Evans, a former member of the Virginia Conference, but now of the Texas Conference, giving an interesting account of his recent district Conference. He said that a most delightful feature was that there were conversions at every session, and when the Conference adjourned on the third day fifteen professions were reported.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun preached to a good congregation at Centenary Sunday morning. His pulpit was filled in the afternoon by Rev. N. H. Smith, of Oaklette and Bethel churches.

Rev. J. K. Joliff reported good congregations at Queen Street. Mr. Joliff reported that he had been assisting in a revival at Bethesda church, near Great Bridge, Norfolk county, and that some good had been accomplished.

Talmage's Sermon.

WASHINGTON. In this discourse, from a symbol of the Bible, Dr. Talmage urges the adoption of an unusual mode of estimating character and shows how different is the divine way from the human way; text, Proverbs xvi, 2, "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

The subject of weights and measures is discussed among all nations, is the subject of legislation and has much to do with the world's prosperity. A system of weights and measures was invented by Phidon, ruler of Argos, about 800 years before Christ. An ounce, a pound, a ton, were different in different lands. Henry III decided that an ounce should be the weight of 640 dried grains of wheat from the middle of the ear. From the reign of William the Conqueror to Henry VIII the English pound was the weight of 7,680 grains of wheat. Queen Elizabeth decreed that a pound should be 7,000 grains of wheat taken from the middle of the ear. The piece of platinum kept at the office of the exchequer in England in an atmosphere of 62 degrees F. decides for all Great Britain what a pound must be. Scientific representatives from all lands met in 1869 in Paris and established international standards of weights and measures.

You all know something of avoirdupois weight, of apothecaries' weight, of troy weight. You are familiar with the different kinds of weighing machines, whether a Roman balance, which is our steelyard, or the more usual instrument consisting of a beam supported in the middle, having two basins of equal weight suspended to the extremities. Scales have been invented to weigh substances huge, like mountains, and others delicate enough to weigh infinitesimals. But in all the universe there has only been one balance that could weigh thoughts, emotions, affections, hatreds, ambitions. That balance was fashioned by an Almighty God and is hung up for perpetual service. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

This divine weigher puts into the balance the spirit of charity and decides how much of it really exists. It may go for nothing at all. It may be that it says to the unfortunate, "Take this and do not bother me any more." It may be an occasional impulse. It may depend upon the condition of the liver or the style of breakfast partaken of a little while before. It may be called forth by the loveliness of the solicitor. It may be exercised in spirit of rivalry, which practically says, "My neighbor has given so much; therefore I must give as much." It is accidental or occasional or spasmodic. When such a spirit of charity is put into the balance and weighed, God and men and angels look on and say there is nothing of it. It does not weigh so much as a dram, which is only the one-eighth part of an ounce, or a scruple, which is only the twenty-fourth part of an ounce. A man may give his hundreds and thousands of dollars with such feelings and amid such circumstances, and he will get no heavenly recognition.

A Divine Principle.

But into the divine scales another man's charity is placed. It starts from love of God and man. It is born in heaven. It is a lifelong characteristic. It may have a million dollars or a penny to bestow, but the manner in which that giver bestows it shows that it is a divinely implanted principle. The 1 penny given may, considering the limited circumstances, attract as much angelic and heavenly attention as though the check given in charity was so large it staggered the cashier of the bank to cash it. It is not the amount given, but the spirit with which it is given. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

Perhaps no one but God heard that good man's resolutions, but it amounted to this: "From this present moment to my last moment on earth, God helping me, I will do all I can to make this world a purer world, a better world, a happier world." But the resolution shines out in his face, sweetens his conversation, enlarges his nature, controls his life and shows itself as plainly in the contribution of $1 as though he had the means to contribute $500,000. When that charity is put into the royal balance, the heavens watch the weighing and invisible choirs chant from the clouds, and I catch one bar of the music "Now abideth faith, hope, charity these three; but the greatest of these is charity."

So also in the celestial scales is placed the spirit of faith. In most cases faith depends on whether or not the sun shines and the man had sound sleep last night and whether the first person he meets in the morning tells him something agreeable or disagreeable. Some day the sales in his store do not amount to so much as he expected, and he goes home with enough complaints to fill the house as soon as he enters it. Another day the sales are 20 or 40 per cent larger than usual, and as he is putting the key into the door lock his family hear him whistling a tune most jubilant. He has faith that everything in his own affairs and in the affairs of church and state are tending toward better conditions until something depressing happens in his own personal experiences or under his own observation.

But there is another man who by repentance and prayer has put himself into alliance with the Almighty God. Made all right by the Saviour's grace, this man goes to work to make the world right. He says to himself: "God launched this world, and he never launched a failure. The garden of Eden was a useless morass compared with what the whole world will be when it blossoms and leaves and flashes and resounds with its coming glory. God will save it anyhow, with me or without me, but I want to do my share. I have some equipment, not as much as some others, but what I have I will use. I have power to frown, and I will frown upon iniquity. I have power to smile, and I will smile encouragement upon all the struggling. I have a vocabulary not so opulent as the vocabulary of some others, but I have a storehouse of good words, and I mean to scatter them in helpfulness. I will ascribe right motives to others when it is possible. If I can say anything good about others, I will say it. If I can say nothing but evil of them, I will keep my lips shut as tight as the lips of the sphinx, which for 3,000 years has looked off upon the sands of the desert and uttered not one word about the desolation. The scheme of reconstructing this world is too great for me to manage, but I am not expected to boss this job. I have faith to believe that the plan is well laid out and will be well executed. Give me a brick and a trowel, and I will begin now to help build the wall. I am not a soloist, but I can sing 'Rock of Ages' to a sick pauper. I cannot write a great book, but I can pick a splinter out of a child's eye or a splinter from under his thumb nail. I now enlist in this army that is going to take the world for God, and I defy all the evil powers, human and satanic, to discourage me. Count me into the service. I cannot play upon a musical instrument, but I can polish a cornet or string a harp or applaud the orchestra."

All through that man's experience there runs a faith that will keep him cheerful and busy and triumphant. I like the watchword of Cromwell's "Ironsides," the men who feared nothing and dared everything, going into battle with the shout: "The Lord of hosts is with us. The God of Jacob is our refuge. Selah!" No balance that human brain ever planned or human hand ever constructed is worthy of weighing such a spirit. Gold and precious stones are measured by the carat, which is four grains. The dealer puts the diamond or the pearl on one side of the scales and the carat on the other side and tells you the weight. But we need something more delicately constructed to weigh that wonderful quality of faith which I am glad to know will be recognized and rewarded for all time and all eternity. The earthly weighman counterpoises on metallic balances the iron, the coal, the articles of human food, the solids of earthly merchandise, but he cannot test or announce the amount of things spiritual. Here is something which the Attic and Babylonian weighing systems of the past and the metric weighing system of the present cannot manage. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

Ruinous Ambition.

Put also into those royal scales the ambitious spirit. Every healthy man and woman has ambition. The lack of it is a sure sign of idleness or immorality. The only question is, What shall be the style of our ambition? To stack up a stupendous fortune, to acquire a resounding name, to sweep everything we can reach into the whirlpool of our own selfishness—that is debasing, ruinous and deathful. If in such a spirit we get what we start for, we only secure gigantic discontent. No man was ever made happy by what he got. It all depends upon the spirit with which we get it and the spirit with which we keep it and the spirit with which we distribute it. Not since the world stood has there been any instance of complete happiness from the amount of accumulation. Give the man of worldly ambition 60 years of brilliant successes. He sought for renown, and the nations speak his name; he sought for affluence, and he is put to his wits' end to find out the best stocks and bonds in which he may make his investments; he is director in enough banks and trustee in enough institutions and president of enough companies to bring on paresis, of which he is now dying. The royal balances are lifted to weigh the ambition which has controlled him a lifetime. What was the worth of that ambition? How much did it yield for usefulness and heaven? Less than a scruple, less than a grain of sand, less than an atom, less than nothing. Have a funeral a mile long with carriages; let the richest robes of ecclesiastics rustle about the casket; caricature the scene by choirs which chant "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord." That man's life is a failure, and if his heirs scuffle in the surrogate's court about the incapacity of the testator to make a last will and testament it will only be a prolongation of the failure. The son, through dissipation, spent a share of the fortune before the father died and so was cut off with a dollar the daughter married against his will and she is disinherited; relatives who he could never bear the sight of were put in their claim, and after years of litigation so much of the estate as the lawyers have not appropriated to themselves will go into hands which the testator never once thought of when his last days he bade tearful farewell to the houses and lands and government securities he could not take along with him into the sepulcher.

Royal Balances.

But look into the dream of the schoolboy who, without saying anything about it, is planning his lifetime career. From an old book, partly written in Hebrew and partly written in Greek, but both Hebrew and Greek translated into good English, he reads of a great farmer like Amos, a great mechanic like Aholab, a great lawyer like Moses, a great soldier like Joshua, a great king like Hezekiah, a great poet like David, a great gleaner like Ruth, a great physician like Luke, a great preacher like Paul, a great Christian like no one on earth or in heaven, because the superior of all beings terrestrial or celestial. He has learned by heart the Ten Commandments and the sermon on the mount and has splendid theories about everything. Between that fair haired boy and the achievement of what he wants and expects there are obstacles and hindrances known only to the God who is going to discipline him for heroic magnificence. I have no power to prophesy the different experiences of his encouragement and disappointment, of his struggle or his triumph, but as sure as God lives to make his word come true the boy, who will sleep tonight nine hours without waking, will be final victor. Do not know the intermediate chapter of the volume of that young man's life, but I know the first chapter and the last chapter. The first chapter is made of high resolve in the strength of God and the last chapter is filled with the rewards of a noble ambition. As his obsequies pass out to the cemetery the poor will weep because they will lose their best friend. Many in whose temporal welfare and eternal salvation he bore a part will hear of it in various places and eulogize his memory, and God will say to the ascending spirit "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." In the hour of that soul's release and enthronement there will be heavenly acclamation as in the royal balance "the Lord weigheth the spirits."

Other balances may lack precision and fall in counterpoise. Scales are affected by conditions of atmosphere and acid vapors. After all that the nation have done to establish an inviolable standard perfection has never yet been reached and never will be reached. But the royal balances of which I speak are the same in heat and cold, in all weathers, in all lands and in all the heavens—just and true to the last point of justice and truth. The same balance that weighed the tempted spirit of Adam under the fruit tree, and the spirit of Cain in the first assassination, and the spirit of courage in Joshua during the prolonged daylight, and the spirit of cruelty in Jezebel, and the spirit of grief in Jeremiah's lamentation, and the spirit of evangelism in Paul between the road to Damascus, where he first saw the light, and the road to Ostia, the place of his beheading, is weighing still and never yet has varied from the right one milligram. ## "THE GIDEONS."

BY FRANK A. GARLICK, NATIONAL PRESIDENT.

In the course of modern commercial competition the great centres of industry have employed various ways and means for reaching the consumer of the world's products. Especially during the last quarter of the nineteenth century, manufacturers and handlers of all sorts of merchandise have employed agents whose business it is to dispose of the commodities which they produce. And this demand has in itself created a line of marketable energy embodied in the distinctively present-day character known as the commercial traveller.

For years these men have been, and they are yet, the prime necessity to business prosperity in this country. But until recently to be a commercial traveller was no enviable position if one cared at all for his reputation. As a class they soon became exceedingly loose in morals, and in trade would usually employ any means of inducement whatever if thereby a customer might be secured. The middleman or purveyor to the consumer was but little better than the commercial traveller, and the days and nights of carnival in which both classes joined would not bear investigation.

But there has been a marked change during more recent years, so that to-day it is the exception when a travelling man of dissolute habits continues long on the road. It is difficult to say just how this change came about, but perhaps it was because of difference in both methods and men. There had been all the while a substratum of character in the fraternity that had not manifested itself, but was held in check by force of circumstances. This suspended or retarded force was that of the Christ spirit in the life of many of these travelling men. It was a rare exception to find a Christian traveller who possessed the moral courage to declare his profession of faith in the Saviour. There were many who denied Him daily in many ways, never speaking a word in defense of their faith.

But God had a few left who had not bowed the knee to Baal, and at the right moment in a marvellous way, He brought to the surface those who had been loyal to Him, and the long-felt need of a host of commercial travelling men has been supplied by a movement known as "The Gideons."

ORIGIN AND GROWTH.

The birth of the movement may be reverently said to reflect the story of the nativity of Christ. It all came about because there was no room in the inn for a certain travelling man. More fortunate than the pilgrims who came to Bethlehem, he found a good-hearted fellow traveller willing to share his room with him. When retiring, one suggested that they read the Word, so they had evening worship together. Soon after this these two met a third Christian travelling man in the parlor of the Young Men's Christian Association at Janesville, Wis., and they organized themselves into "The Christian Commercial Travelling Men's Association of America." They elected for president S. E. Hill, of Beloit; vice-president, J. W. Knights, of Janesville, and secretary and treasurer, John H. Nicholson, of Janesville.

Though it is but three short years since those men organized their brotherhood, it has already grown into a power and influence that is felt among travelling men from shore to shore of our continent. It now has a following of more than two thousand commercial travelling men. Those to whom the Lord originally committed His plan did not by any means realize whereunto their modest organization was destined to expand. To-day its growth and influence rise as a giant surprise before its originators.

PURPOSE AND METHODS.

In a few short months the membership became too large for its swaddling clothes, and new methods and plans were adopted, with new laws and requirements for membership. Only Christian commercial travelling men, members of some orthodox body of believers, are eligible to membership. An annual fee of one dollar is charged, payable at the time of the annual national Convention. The emblematical button—a gold button with blue background, whereon is a white pitcher, from which protrudes a lighted torch (Judges 7: 19, 20)—must be continually worn upon the lapel of the coat.

Article II., section 1, of the constitution, reads: "The object of the Gideons shall be to recognize the Christian travelling men of the world with cordial fellowship; to encourage one another in the Master's work; to improve every opportunity for the betterment of the lives of our fellow-travellers, business men and others, with whom we may come in contact; scattering seeds all along the pathway for Christ."

This seemed at first to cover every necessity, and for a time did meet the needs. But another line of service was to open to the Gideons. Just how it came about is not of record, but soon there came calls from churches and missions for the Gideons to meet with them in evangelistic efforts. They responded, and their plain but forceful Gospel talks were blessed by the Holy Spirit; souls came into the kingdom and Christians were revived. Some opposition to this method of work developed very soon, so at the national Convention of 1901 there was added to Article II. a second section, as follows:

"Section 2. Any member or body of members of this organization may hold evangelistic meetings wherever and whenever they may have an opportunity to do so." So this has become to-day an accepted feature of Gideon work.

GIDEONS ALL EVANGELISTS.

The work is in no sense local. Wherever one meets a Gideon button he meets an evangelist, for everywhere the wearer will be found defending the truth, or urging his fellows to forsake the way of evil and turn unto God. Sundays you will find him in some way witnessing for his Master. Many of the pulpits are open to these men; frequently they may be found assisting a pastor in his services, or taking entire charge of the work for a day.

When several Gideons come together they often conduct what has come to be known as a Gideon service. To secure a Gideon service two things are required of the church making the request—an open door and a surrender of the service to the conduct of the Gideons. Absolutely no charges are made, neither will remuneration of any kind be accepted. Probably this evangelistic feature of the work among the churches began in Chicago, and through no effort of these men, but rather on the urgent invitation of the churches. The reader should bear in mind that the Gideons are not preachers nor yet are they scholars, but only plain business men possessed with an overpowering desire for the salvation of precious souls for whom Jesus died. Their talks and testimonies are as varied and original as their daily lives, being born of daily experiences.

This is the age of object teaching; the Gideons believe in it. Usually their services begin with as many Gideons on the platform as it is possible to rally. They may not all take active part, but the life of the congregation is touched by the novel sight of a number of business men ready to do active service in the King's business. It is possible to have represented among these men as many denominations as there are men, for the work is entirely undenominational.

Good male quartette singing and also solos and duets, with congregational song service, intersperse two or three ten-minute talks, the final speaker closing the service in such manner as the occasion and its interests may seem to indicate. For more than a year these meetings have continued every Sunday evening in many places all over Chicago. Every Saturday from 12 to 1 o'clock the Gideons conduct also an open service at Willard Hall, in the Women's Temple, at La Salle and Monroe streets. There sinners and saints are welcome alike and many souls have been saved.

NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Within the past month the movement has received a new and powerful impetus from its third annual Convention, held at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, July 4th, 5th and 6th. To say the Gideons captured the city is not strong enough. Every church and public building was theirs, and many homes seemed to be almost in mourning because there were not enough of the visitors to partake of all their hospitality. From the moment of our arrival to the return home it was a reception amounting to ovation. Cedar Rapids fought with itself to do us honor.

The reports made to the Convention by the secretary and treasurer as well as by other national and State officers all indicated how God is blessing this wonderful religious movement. At the regular business session the first afternoon the centre of thought and interest was the election of national officers. The ballots taken showed the election of Frank A. Garlick, Chicago, national president; A. B. T. Moore, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, vice-president; John H. Nicholson, secretary.—The Interior.

HIGHER LICENSE.

"A thousand dollar license," said the man behind the bar,
As he lightly knocked the ashes from his No. 2 cigar;
"Well, I guess that I can stand it if the other fellow can,
But I'll have to shape my business on the thousand dollar plan.
There's an economic maxim that is older than the hills—
The customer pays the taxes, though the devil pays the bills,
And if Uncle Sam insists upon this thousand dollar raid,
I will have to shift the burden to the shoulders of the trade—
Or rather to their stomachs, if their stomachs can sustain,
And their kidneys stand the pressure of this thousand dollar strain.
I'm not in business for my health—I don't profess to be
A millionaire philanthropist, like old man Carnegie;
But I've built a reputation, and I've served my guests, for years,
With the finest of old whiskeys and the rarest of old beers;
And the richest juice that ever flowed in fragrance from the vine,
Has flashed and foamed and flamed across this quaint old bar of mine,
And purple tints and amber glints of every age and clime,
Like liquid roses wreathed about the flowing locks of time.
'Tis the pride of my profession, and the glory of my art,
To cheer the drooping spirit and to soothe the jaded heart;
To build the wasted tissues up; to strengthen and console,
Till the inner temple sparkle like the sparkle of the bowl.
Such a business is an honor, and a pleasure, too, besides,
To the patron who supports it, and the landlord who provides.
But if legal Carrie Nation wield the governmental axe,
I will have to gauge my liquor in accordance with the facts,
And I'll touch them up so lightly that you never can define
Where the whiskey turns to water and the water turns to wine—
And I'll drown them and I'll drench them, and I'll do my level best,
Till the dear old oaken bucket sighs for solitude and rest,
And I'll mix them, and I'll fix them, with the cheapest, vilest stuff,
Till the kidneys holloa 'murder' and the liver shouts 'enough,'

And I'll trim them to a finish, and I'll train them to a stand, Till an honest glass of whiskey is a stranger in the land,
And the 'shakes' and 'snakes' and 'jim-jams' and 'delirium tremens,'
too,
Ain't a marker or a circumstance to either one of you.
And I'll pay that thousand dollars through respect for Uncle Sam, Though for every dollar that I pay I'll have to kill a man.
Of course, it makes no difference to the chap who never drinks,
Or the fellow who imagines, or the man who thinks he thinks;
But to those within, whose genial breasts the social virtues shine, Who delight to meet and mingle o'er the 'walnuts and the wine,'
'Tis a matter of religion that the goods
the gods bestow
Be as pure and unpolluted as the founts from which they flow;
That the ruby rills of Bacchus, which the poets loved and knew,
Be as mellow as the sunlight and as limpid as the dew.
But if callous legislation, with its sacrilegious touch, Shall profane their cosy currents with narcotics, drugs and such—
Then adieu to all the glories of the circumambient bowl,
To the pleasures that enlighten and the raptures that console,
To the memories of Lucullus and that far, arcadian time,
When the ties of love and friendship were cemented by the vine—
When a banquet was an epic, set to melody and wine,
And to fast was not a virtue, and to feast was not a crime.
And adieu to reputation and those hours forever dear,
When a man could have a conscience,
though he sold a glass of beer;
And a man could be a Christian, with a soul devoid of sin, Though he pressed the button now and then, and flung a whiskey in;

When legislation did not strive through governmental stealth,
To correct the public morals by corrupting public health;
When sickly, indigestive paunch, that never wined or dined,
Could not wreak dyspeptic vengeance on the balance of mankind.

But I've said enough to hang me; so I'll light a fresh cigar,
And be honest, if you'll let me," said
the man behind the bar.

gram, which is the one six-thousandth part of a grain. The only perfect standard of weights and measures ever established was established in the heavens before the world was made and will continue to do its work after the world is burned up. To measure the time we have calendars. To measure the lightning we have the electrometers. To measure the atmospheric pressure we have the barometers. To measure souls we have the royal balances. "The Lord weigheth the spirits."

Weighted by the Lord.

In the same divine scales the spirit of nations and civilizations is weighed. Egyptian civilization did its work, but it was cruel and superstitious and idolatrous and defiant of the Almighty. It was cast out and cast down. The tourist finds his chief interest not in the generation that now inhabits the regions watered by the Nile and sprinkled by her cascades, but in the temples that are the skeletons of ancient pride and pomp and power—her obelisks, her catacombs, her mosques, the colossus of Rameses, the dead cities of Memphis and Thebes, the temples of Luxor and Karnak, the museum containing the mummified forms of the pharaohs. It is not the Egypt of today that we go to see, but the Egypt of many centuries ago. Her spirit has departed. Her doom was sealed. The Lord weighed her spirit.

Now cross over the Dardanelles or Hellespont and see Grecian civilization put in the royal balances. Surely that is an imperishable spirit. A land that produced a Pindar and a Homer in poetry, a Sophocles and an Aeschylus in tragedy, a Herodotus and Thucydides in history, a Socrates and Plato in philosophy, a Strabo in geography, a Hippocrates in medicine, a Xenophon in literature, a Plutarch in biography, a Miltiades and an Alexander in battle, and could build a temple of Diana at Ephesus and the acro-Corinthus at Corinth, and could crown the Acropolis with a Parthenon—surely such a land, with more genius compressed in small space than in any of the nations of all the ages, will stand forever triumphant among surrounding nations. No. Her pride of heroes, her pride of literature, her pride of architecture, must be brought down lower and lower, and humiliation must follow humiliation until in the latter part of the nineteenth century she is compelled to submit to the outrages of a sultan whose hands are red with the blood of 50,000 Armenians. Had Athens prayerfully listened to Paul's sermon on Mars hill and adopted his precepts of brotherhood and divine worship she would have stood in her old power today, and all Greece would have stood with her, and that civilization so long dead under the carved pillars of her shrines and under the marble of her pentelican mountains would have been, perhaps for all Asia and for much of Europe, a living civilization. But for her arrogance she was cast out and cast down. The Lord weighed her spirit.

The Crucial Test.

And so the spirit of our American nation is put into the royal balance, and it will be weighed as certainly as all the nations of the past were weighed and as all the nations of the present are being weighed. When we go to estimate the wealth of this nation, we weigh its gold and silver and coal and iron and copper and lead, and all the steelyards and all the balances are kept busy. So many tons of this and so many tons of that: a mountainful of this metal and another mountainful of another metal. That is well. We want to know our mining wealth, our manufacturing wealth, our agricultural wealth, and the bushel measure and the scales have an important work. But know right well there is a divine weighing in this country all the time going on, and I can tell you our country's destiny, if you will tell me whether it shall be a God honoring nation, reverential to the only book of his authorship, observing the "shalt nots" of the law of right given on Mount Sinai and the law of love given on the Mount of Beatitudes, one day of the week observed, not in revelry, but in holy convocation, marriage honored in ceremony and in fact, blasphemy silenced in all the streets, high toned systems of morals in all parts of our land—then our institutions will live, and all the wondrous prosperities of the present are only a faint hint of the greater prosperities to come. Richer harvests will rustle in the fields, a higher style of literature will turn its leaves in our libraries, nobler men will adorn our state and national legislatures, and there will be Washingtons and Hamiltons and Patrick Henrys and John Marshalls and Abraham Lincolns in the future quite equal to those of the past. And the last day of the world's existence will find our free American institutions permanent as the mountains before they begin to fall and glorious as the seas before they begin to die.

But if our character and behavior as a nation are reversed and good morals give place to loose living and God is put away from our hearts, and our schools and our homes and our people and our literature be debauched, and anarchism and atheism have full sway, and our American Sabbath becomes a Parisian Sabbath, and infamous laws get a place on our statute books, and the marriage relation becomes a joke instead of a sanctity, and the God to whom Columbus prayed to on the day of his landing from stormy seas and whom Benjamin Franklin publicly revered when he moved, amid derisive cries, the regular opening of the American congress with prayer, shall in our national future be insulted and blasphemed, then it will not be long before we will need another Edward Gibbon to write the decline and fall of the United States republic, and it will not be another case of destruction by the Goths and Huns and Tartars and Tamerlanes and Attilas or foreign opposition and hate, but it will be a case of world astounding national suicide.

Invisible Scales.

The wish of this sermon is to emphasize the invisible, to show that there are other balances besides those made of brass and platinum and aluminium and set in earthly storehouses; that the spirit is the most important part of us; that the scales which weigh your body are not as important as the scales which weigh your soul. Depend not too much for happiness upon the visible. Pyrrhus was king and had large dominion, but was determined to make war against the Romans, and Cineas, the friend of the king, said to him, "Sir, when you have conquered them what will you do next?" "Then Sicily is near at hand and easy to master." "And what when you have conquered Sicily?" "Then we will pass over to Africa and take Carthage, which cannot long withstand us." "When these are conquered, what will you next attempt?" "Then we will fall in upon Greece and Macedonia and recover what we have lost there." "Well, when all are subdued what fruit do you expect from all your victories?" "Then," said the king, "we will sit down and enjoy ourselves." "Sir," said Cineas, "may we not do it now? Have you not already a kingdom of your own?"

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course: The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian men.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positive Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

HALL I SEND MY CHILD TO BOARDING SCHOOL?

In four weeks the academic year will begin, and many a parent is still undecided whether to send his son or daughter away from home for further education. Some who counted the matter settled are wondering whether they have determined wisely. Personal experience, much observation, and a large correspondence may justify an effort to aid in the formation of wise judgment on so important a matter.

The choice is to be made between a day school with home life and a preparatory school which involves a residence for the time at the institution.
The normal home and a proper school are the standards of comparison. In the abnormal home there might be reasons for decision one way or another which would not admit of debate; and it would be a strange sort of home which would not be safer and every-way better for any child than some boarding schools. However desirable they may seem, some are unable to discuss with the services of their children, and others who might be able to do this cannot sustain the pecuniary charges for board and tuition, even in the least expensive schools.

If a son or daughter, in ordinary health, is growing up timid and distastefully bashful, it is often highly beneficial for such a one to be sent to a school where the management will by every means seek to encourage and push forward where helpful friendships may be formed. Marked and most beneficial changes have thus been brought, and two or three years have produced a transformation which has made it almost impossible to believe that the self-possessed and refined young woman could ever have been so painfully shy, or the gentlemanly and companionable young man so backward and awkward. The occasional instances in which such become presuming and offensively aggressive emphasize by excess the potency of the general influence.

It is sometimes difficult to induce young people at home to take any interest in their studies out of school, or in school more than is actually necessary to keep up with the class. To such, if sent to a school where the whole atmosphere is favorable to study, and personal popularity depends to some extent on standing, the satire of fellow-students becomes an involuntary adjunct to discipline, and where there are fixed study hours and teachers always have access to students, a tendency to study is often greatly stimulated. Many cases of this kind have come under our notice.

Boys and girls also often form associations at home which, though not decidedly bad, are not such as their parents can approve. But having been formed it is difficult to break away from them. Sometimes the young people themselves wish to sever these ties, but nearness of residence and frequency of meeting make it almost impossible. Change of scene, occupation, and society such as a seminary affords may often bring this to pass; those left behind also form new associations, and both discover that had they never been friends they could not now become such. If the associations are absolutely bad, sending children away is often the only hope of saving them.

Sometimes children of fifteen years of age and upward revolt against family discipline, which, though seeming so to the parents, may or may not have been wise, and in other families the continued or frequent absence of the father or the illness of the mother may impair its force. From many households the father or the mother may have been removed by death, and the arm of restraint been weakened or the burden found too heavy by the surviving parent. To children so situated the discipline and constant supervision of a good school are invaluable. Absence from home often leads the wayward to realize the kindness and forget the harshness, if there were any, with which they were treated; to this frequent letters and other remembrances from home will contribute much.

Not infrequently, without a youth's becoming vicious, the religious associations of home and Church fail to attract him sufficiently or impress him with adequate depth to lead to his conversion. The state of the church, the untoward influence or lack of positive influence of the pastor, the inefficiency or purely social character of the Sunday school, may account for this; or the home atmosphere may be the real cause. Perhaps there are instances where all these are blameless and the idiosyncrasy of the child is the predisposing cause of indifference to religion.

In any of these situations the experiment of sending the youth to a genuinely Christian school promises good, and good only. Many students whose history answers to this have been converted before the close of the first term.

For reasons the very opposite it may be wise to send children away to school.
If young people have been converted and have excellent companions who are about to go to some wholly trustworthy school, and one's son or daughter desires to accompany them, the promise of good from parental compliance is almost prophetic.

Often it would be possible for parents or guardians to place those in their care for two or three years at a seminary, though they could not afford the expenses of a college education. By all means this should be done. It gives young people a view of student life; it promotes health and good manners; it enables them to make friends from various parts of the country; it insures the acquaintance and permanent interest of the faculty; it imbues them with a scholarly atmosphere, and so fa-miliarizes them with the curriculum that they may subsequently pursue private study to advantage. Knowing that this is their only opportunity, such often acquire more than many ever learn who have both preparatory school and college.

On the other hand, however valuable the home day schools, if the intention be to enter college it is desirable that the student should have a year or two in a seminary that he may be fully adjusted to community life, and with the life of the student "societies," so important in college.

Not infrequently parents would be much pleased to have their children pass through college, but they show little tendency in that direction. It is not wise to command it, or to overpersuade. The natures and careers of some children have been utterly spoiled or disastrously circumscribed by such a course. But the studies and associations of the seminary might, unconsciously to them, develop an intense desire for college which, being voluntary, would be likely to benefit. If this desire did not arise the bent should be humored, unless in an immoral direction.

Underneath all these considerations
it is implied that the school be managed upon genuine Christian principles and positively imbued with its spirit. There are schools which advertise "careful moral training," "special attention given to forming a religious character," etc., whose spirit is anything but religious, and whose moral discipline is so weak that everything is winked at which does not create a public scandal. Some, under the guise of "developing manliness," allow mere boys free use of wine, attendance at theatres, and cards, and advertise that no "restriction is placed on their recreations." Others practice this under cover of opposite professions.

Any so-called Christian school which devotes no specific attention to the religious character of the students, puts forth no effort to secure their radical conversion, states that the aim is not to make saints, but all-round boys, is not a safe place for the children of those who value learning, but place a higher estimate upon that change known as regeneration, and would rather have a pupil make only fair progress in scholastic pursuits and excel in intelligent and fervent Christian experience and living, than without these to get all of knowledge, training, and social grace and ease that could be gained in the same time.

It is a serious error to send a child to the wrong school. Parents should know what they are doing—not merely read an advertisement, send the child, and afterward try to ascertain the character of the school. What is needed is a school devoted to a science and religion, literature and morality, the languages and refinement, athletics and mental strengthening; a school which stimulates and restrains, which watches with fatherly care, but does not spy; which qualifies for the life which now is, but never forgets "that which is to come"; which seeks numbers and revenue by the quality of its work, and not by directly aiming to "keep the peace with patrons" and "give the pupils a good time." Such schools may be found; some closely approximate to the ideal; some are earnestly aiming at it. Whenever this aim is not unmistakably recognizable, whatever the material attractions or denominational relations, Christian parents should withhold their patronage.—N. Y. Advo-

"You make me think so, though I am bound to say I hardly recognize myself today. But here goes." And before I knew it I was describing our plans to Graeme, growing more and more enthusiastic as he sat in his sleigh, listening with a quizzical smile I didn't quite like.

"He's got you, too," he said. "I feared so."

"Well," I laughed, "perhaps so. But I want to lick that man Slavin. I've just seen him, and he's just what Craig calls him, 'a slick son of the devil.' Don't be shocked. He says it is Scripture."

"Revised version," said Graeme gravely, while Craig looked a little abashed.

"What is assigned me, Mr. Craig? For I know that this man is simply your agent."

I repudiated the idea, while Mr. Craig said nothing.

"What's my part?" demanded Graeme.

"Well," said Mr. Craig hesitatingly, "of course I would do nothing till I had consulted you, but I want a man to take my place at the sports. I am referee."

"That's all right," said Graeme, with an air of relief. "I expected something hard."

"And then I thought you would not mind presiding at the dinner. I want it to go off well."

"Did you notice that?" said Graeme to me. "Not a bad touch, eh?"

"That's nothing to the way he touched me. Wait and learn," I answered, while Craig looked quite distressed. "He'll do it, Mr. Craig, never fear," I said, "and any other little duty."

"Now, that's too bad of you. That is all I want, honor bright," he replied, adding as he turned away: "You are just in time for a cup of coffee, Mr. Graeme. Now I must see Mrs. Mavor."

"Who is Mrs. Mavor?" I demanded of Graeme.

"Mrs. Mavor? The miners' guardian angel."

We put up the horses and set off for coffee. As we approached the booth Graeme caught sight of the Punch and Judy show, stood still in amazement and exclaimed:

"Can the dead live?"

"Punch and Judy never die," I replied solemnly.

"But the old manipulator is dead enough, poor old beggar!"

"But he left his mantle, as you see."

He looked at me a moment.

"What? Do you mean you?"

"Yes; that is what I do mean."

"He is a great man, that Craig fellow, a truly great man."

And then he leaned up against a tree and laughed till the tears came.

"I say, old boy, don't mind me," he gasped, "but do you remember the old varsity show?"

"Yes, you villain, and I remember your part in it. I wonder how you can even at this remote date laugh at it."

For I had a vivid recollection of how, after a "chaste and highly artistic performance of this medieval play" had been given before a distinguished Toronto audience, the trapdoor by which I had entered my box was fastened and I was left to swelter in my cage and forced to listen to the suffocated laughter from the wings and the stage whispers of "Hello, Mr. Punch, where's the baby?" And for many a day after I was subjected to anxious inquiries as to the locality and health of "the baby" and whether it was able to be out.

"Oh, the dear old days!" he kept saying over and over in a tone so full of sadness that my heart grew sore for him and I forgave him, as many a time before.

The sports passed off in typical western style. In addition to the usual running and leaping contests, there was rifle and pistol shooting, in both of which old Nelson stood first, with Shaw, foreman of the mines, second.

The great event of the day, however, was to be the four horse race, for which three teams were entered—one from the mines, driven by Nixon, Craig's friend; a citizens' team and Sandy's. The race was really between the miners' team and that from the woods, for the citizens' team, though made up of speedy horses, had not been driven much together and knew neither their driver nor one another. In the miners' team were four bays, very powerful, a trifle heavy perhaps, but well matched, perfectly trained and perfectly handled by their driver, Sandy had his long, rangy roans and for leaders a pair of half broken pinto bronchos. The pintos, caught the summer before upon the Alberta prairies, were fleet as deer, but wicked and uncertain. They were Baptiste's special care and pride. If they would only run straight, there was little doubt that they would carry the roans and themselves to glory, but one could not tell the moment they might bolt or kick things to pieces.

Being the only nonpartisan in the crowd, I was asked to referee. The race was about half a mile and return, the first and last quarters being upon ice. The course after leaving the ice led up from the river by a long, easy slope to the level above and at the farther end curved somewhat sharply round the old fort. The only condition attaching to the race was that the teams should start from the scratch, make the turn of the fort and finish at the scratch. There were no vexing regulations as to fouls. The man making the foul would find it necessary to reckon with the crowd, which was considered sufficient guarantee for a fair and square race. Owing to the hazards of the course, the result would depend upon the skill of the drivers quite as much as upon the speed of the teams. The points of hazard were at the turn round the old fort and at a little ravine which led down to the river, over which the road passed by means of a long log bridge or causeway.

From a point upon the high bank of the river the whole course lay in open view. It was a scene full of life and vividly picturesque. There were miners in dark clothes and peak caps, citizens in ordinary garb, ranchmen in wide cowboy hats and buckskin shirts and leggings, some with cartridge belts and pistols; a few half breeds and Indians in half native, half civilized dress and, scattering through the crowd, the lumbermen with gay scarlet and blue blanket coats and some with knitted toques of the same colors. A very good natured but extremely uncertain crowd it was. At the head of each horse stood a man, but at the pintos' heads Baptiste stood alone, trying to hold down the off leader, thrown into a frenzy of fear by the yelling of the crowd.

Gradually all became quiet till, in the midst of absolute stillness, came the words, "Are you ready?" then the pistol shot, and the great race began. Above the roar of the crowd came the shrill cry of Baptiste as he struck his broncho with the palm of his hand and swung himself into the sleigh beside Sandy as it shot past.

Like a flash the bronchos sprang to the front two lengths before the other teams; but, terrified by the yelling crowd, instead of bending to the left bank, up which the road wound, they wheeled to the right and were almost across the river before Sandy could swing them back into the course.

Baptiste's cries, a curious mixture of French and English, continued to strike through all other sounds till they gained the top of the slope, to find the others almost a hundred yards in front, the citizens' team leading, with the miners' following close. The moment the pintos caught sight of the teams before them they set off at a terrific pace and steadily devoured the intervening space. Nearer and nearer the turn came, the eight horses in front running straight and well within their speed. After them flew the pintos, running savagely, with ears set back, leading well the big roans, thundering along and gaining at every bound. And now the citizens' team had almost reached the fort, running hard and drawing away from the bays. But Nixon knew what he was about and was simply steadying his team for the turn.

The event proved his wisdom, for in the turn the leading team left the track, lost a moment or two in the deep snow, and before they could regain the road the bays had swept superbly past, leaving their rivals to follow in the rear. On came the pintos, swiftly nearing the fort. Surely at that pace they cannot make the turn. But Sandy knows his leaders. They have their eyes upon the teams in front and need no touch of rein. Without the slightest change in speed the nimble footed bronchos round the turn, hauling the big roans after them, and fall in behind the citizens' team, which is regaining steadily the ground lost in the turn.

And now the struggle is for the bridge over the ravine. The bays in front, running with mouths wide open, are evidently doing their best. Behind them and every moment nearing them, but at the limit of their speed, too, come the lighter and fleetier citizens' team, while opposite their driver are the pintos, pulling hard, eager and fresh. Their temper is too uncertain to send them to the front. They run well following, but when leading cannot be trusted, and, besides, a broncho hates a bridge, so Sandy holds them where they are, waiting and hoping for his chance after the bridge is crossed. Foot by foot the citizens' team creep up upon the flank of the bays, with the pintos in turn hugging them closely, till it seems as if the three, if none slackens, must strike the bridge together, and this will mean destruction to one at least. This danger Sandy perceives, but he dare not check his leaders. Suddenly within a few yards of the bridge Baptiste throws himself upon the lines, wrenches them out of Sandy's hands and, with a quick swing, faces the pintos down the steep side of the ravine which is almost sheer ice with a thin coat of snow. It is a daring course, a take, for the ravine, though not deep, is full of undergrowth and is partially closed up by a brush heap at the farther end. But, with a yell, Baptiste hurls his four horses down the slope and into the undergrowth. "Allons, mes enfants! Courage! Vite! Vite!" cries their driver, and nobly do the pintos respond.

Regardless of bushes and brush heaps, they tear their way through, but as they emerge the high bob sleigh catches a root, and, with a crash, the sleigh is hurled in the air. Baptiste's cries ring out high and shrill as ever, encouraging his team, and never cease till, with a plunge and a scramble, they clear the brush heap lying at the mouth of the ravine and are out on the ice on the river, with Baptiste standing on the front bob, the box trailing behind and Sandy nowhere to be seen. Three hundred yards of the course remain. The bays, perfectly handled, have gained at the bridge and in the descent to the ice and are leading the citizens' team by half a dozen lengths. Behind both comes Baptiste. It is now or never for the pintos. The rattle of the trailing box, together with the wild yelling of the crowd rushing down the bank, excites the broncho to madness, and, taking the bits in their teeth, they do their first free running that day. Past the citizens' team like a whirlwind they dash, clear the intervening space and gain the flanks of the bays. Can the bays hold them? Over them leans their driver, plying for the first time the hissing lash. Only fifty yards more. The miners begin to yell. But Baptiste, waving his lines high in one hand, seizes his toque with the other, whirls it about his head and flings it with a fiercer yell than ever at the bronchos. Like the bursting of a hurricane the pintos leap forward and with a splendid rush cross the scratch, winners by their own length.

There was a wild quarter of an hour. The shanty men had torn off their coats and were waving them wildly and tossing them high, while the ranchers added to the uproar by emptying their revolvers into the air in a way that made one nervous.

When the crowd was somewhat quieted, Sandy's stiff figure appeared, slowly making toward them. A dozen lumbermen ran to him, eagerly inquiring if he were hurt. But Sandy could only curse the little Frenchman for losing the race.

"Lost! Why, man, we've won it!" shouted a voice, at which Sandy's rage vanished, and he allowed himself to be carried in upon the shoulders of his admirers.

"Where's the lad?" was his first question.

"The bronchos are off with him. He's down at the rapids like enough."

"Let me go!" shouted Sandy, setting off at a run in the track of the sleigh. He had not gone far before he met Baptiste coming back with his team foaming, the roans going quietly, but the bronchos dancing and eager to be at it again.

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

VERANDA VIEWS.

Mr. Editor.—Some stories are too good to keep. Veracious witnesses vouch for the following: During the General Conference a little newsboy was crying his paper on the street, "Here's your news; all about the fight among the preachers." A venerable Bishop, who was waiting for a car, spoke to him, and said: "My little man, you've got that wrong. There is no fight among the preachers." The little fellow looked up at him in astonishment, and replied: "Great Scott, old man, haven't you been out to the Fair Grounds yet?" (The Conference was held at the Fair Grounds.)

The other story is told of one of the Virginia delegates, who prides himself on his ambrosial locks, allowing them to grow beyond the regulation length. He bought a paper of a newsboy, and handed him a dime. The boy handed him a nickel in change. "No," said the preacher, "you take that, get some soap and wash your face." The little fellow dived in his pocket, pulled out a quarter, and handing it to the preacher, said: "Here, mister, take this and get your hair cut."

It won't do to tackle the average newsboy. I am not sure that I do not run a risk, however, in telling these stories. Some time ago I was talking with a distinguished connectional officer. He expressed his mind very freely on some points, and I said to him: "Don't you know you are on dangerous ground? I lost my job at the hub by airing my views too much." "Yes," he replied, with his big, hearty laugh; "but there is this difference between us: I talk them and you write them." He is as big a sinner as I am, but he is more "prudent," and holds his job.

Some Virginia boys are writing to know if they can be admitted to the Manual Labor School at Lumberton. Yes, most assuredly. There is but one condition previously required of those who desire admission into this school: they must promise to obey the rules and act in all things as gentlemen. We do not accept money in payment of expenses. They must be paid by the labor of the student. To accept money from some and require work from others would create a distinction. Every boy in our school will be on the same footing, as far as his expenses are concerned, and have an equal chance to make a man of himself. If a boy is willing to work, let him come on, and we will give him a welcome. We have applications from New York, North Carolina, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Missouri, Indian Territory, Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi. No boy ought to think of coming, however, who has not fully made up his mind to work. We give nothing. We believe it is an important part of a boy's education to train him to rely on himself, and our school is organized on the principle of self-help. It offers a boy who is in earnest an opportunity to get a good education, and pay all expenses with his work, and pay as he goes. Mr. Walter H. Page, the editor of "The World's Work" magazine, calls our school "a most interesting experiment." And it is. If it succeeds, and we mean that it shall succeed, it will solve many problems. Let the Virginia boys come.

Mississippi has made very liberal appropriations of public money to the work of popular education. It is the best investment the State could make. We are far behind in material and intellectual development, but with our present enlightened policy, we will not remain behind. Governor Longino is an enthusiastic friend of education. By the way, he is a trustee of the Lumberton Manual Labor School. He takes an especial interest in industrial education, and is an active supporter of all movements looking to the development of the people.

I believe in a former letter I wrote you about my glorious veranda. Well, that veranda deserves all the praise I give it. It is a splendid place, from which to view the world—its life and problems and movements. Here, surrounded with my books, and fanned by gracious breezes from the Gulf, I can read and think and write and—write! Possibly a book may be born on that veranda. Busy as I am with fences and stumps and carpenters and brick masons and architects, I have been tearing the heart out of some good books lately. No, sir, I do not intend that the multifold administrative duties of my position shall separate me from my books, or interfere with my studies.

"The Ascent Through Christ" is a very stimulating work. It is by the Rev. Griffith-Jones, an English clergyman, and is a masterly discussion of theological doctrines from the standpoint of evolution. Mr. Griffith-Jones takes up the line of development where Mr. Drummond left off in his book, "The Ascent of Man." The devout spirit of the author, not less than his vigorous thought, will commend his views. There are passages of great eloquence in this book.

Another of these helpful books is "A History of the Higher Criticism of the New Testament," by Professor Henry S. Nash. The science of Bible study is divided into two sections. They are called the "lower" and "higher" criticism. Lower criticism is concerned with the interpretation of the text of the Scriptures, whether this or that rendering is the best. Higher criticism is concerned with the historical interpretation of the books of the Bible; it seeks to know who wrote them, and when, where and under what circumstances they were written. It is a perfectly legitimate method of Bible study, and is no more responsible for the destructive results which some scholars, like Baur, have reached than the empirical method in science is responsible for some of the vagaries of scientific speculation. Must we give up the study of anthropology because Darwin held that man is descended from an ape, and throw away scalpel and spectroscope because Haeckel denies that there is a God? No more should we discard the method of the "higher criticism" in studying the Bible because Robertson Smith doubted that Moses wrote the Pentateuch. All we know about the history of the books of the Bible we have learned from the higher criticism. I get disgusted with a preacher who rants against "higher criticism." I fully agree with the view recently expressed in The Independent that before we follow a man on this question we ought to be sure that "he is a sufficient adept in Biblical learning to know the difference between a psalmist and palimpsest, and that he can tell a thesaurus from an ichthyosaurus." The Bible is undoubtedly divine, or it never could have survived the ignorance of its friends.

Another book that engages me on the veranda is Kidd's "Western Civilization." It is a hard book to read. It has to be studied; but when it gets hold of you, it carries you with the force of the Mississippi. The main idea of the book is the theory of "projected efficiency"; that the effect of the present on the future is the paramount consideration in nature. He finds in the constitution of the world, and in all the movements of history, a bent in this direction: a silent and yet irresistible law operating to this end. No man lives to himself; no age lives to itself; the forces of civilization shape all their activities in harmony with this fundamental altruistic design, and the processes of evolution from this standpoint are gradually lifting the world up to God.

Still another book I read on the veranda is "The Rational Basis of Orthodoxy," by A. W. Moore. It is a stimulating volume, full of fresh thought about the old eternal verities of the Gospel. It is a book to breed in a man's soul a contempt for the sophistries of unbelief. The least satisfactory chapter is the one on the atonement. That is also true of the same subject in "The Ascent Through Christ." I think it true of nearly all the discussions of the atonement. We have approached the atonement from the wrong standpoint, and involved it in needless mystery. We have considered it as a transaction in law rather than as it is, a transaction of love. From the standpoint of the Fatherhood of God, which is the standpoint of the Gospel, all is simple, all is natural, all is in harmony with the character of God.

You see I have excellent society on the veranda. But I don't stay there all the time: I swung around to several Chautauquas this summer, winding up my tour at Monteagle, Tenn. I have been to all the leading Chautauqua assemblies in the country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and the Monteagle auditorium excels them all. It is seated with elegant pews, the aisles are carpeted, and the great roof spans the building without a single column to break the view. I found Bishop Fitzgerald summering on those heights. Bishop Hoss has a home up there, and is highly esteemed on the mountain. I was told he had shipped his library there, consisting of 6,000 volumes. That looks like he intends to stay up there.

Preaching? Yes, twice a day, and three times on Sunday, which is about as much as I can stand these August days. But I am gloriously well and raptuously happy in the Lord. Glory to God for life, for the world that now is, and for that which is to come.

Lumberton, Miss. S. A. STEEL.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

During the year that I spent in Atlanta I occasionally met with the Rev. Clement C. Cary, who was at that time stationed in the city. I had known him for several years by his contributions to the religious papers, especially the holiness papers; and I had admired his bold and independent way of wielding the pen. I inferred from his style that he was a free and independent thinker; that he had a mind of his own, and was not afraid to express it. You can therefore imagine my disappointment when I saw in the Pentecostal Herald, of August 13th, the following paragraph from his pen:

"In these days when so many are drifting away from the old paths of doctrine and are treading on new ground, when novelties of views are at a premium, and sound doctrine is not at par, I am glad I have no more sense than to believe all the doctrines of the Church to which I belong are scriptural and reasonable, and I have no desire whatever to turn aside from them and hunt for something novel. I swallow them all, without question, for they have been tried by many and are proved. I am glad when I joined the church I did not occupy a questioning attitude toward the doctrines of Methodism, but entered her communion with the presumption that they were true, and they were not to be thought as being unscriptural. And that attitude has never changed from that day to this. I took it for granted that what had been formulated and taught as Methodist doctrine by the old-time leaders of Methodism was not for a moment to be questioned, nor for a moment was their scripturalness to be raised. I had unbounded confidence in the men who were at the head of this Methodist movement, and have never become so wise as to doubt their wisdom nor question what they taught of fundamental doctrines."

A great outcry has been raised against the doctrine of papal infallibility, and the infallibility of the Councils; but how much worse is this than the doctrine of the infallibility of the Methodist fathers, as set forth in the above? The writer swallows every thing handed down by the Methodist fathers without question! "I have not found so great faith—no, not in Israel." But it is not faith in God, nor in His Son Jesus Christ, but faith in men. Had Wesley been so loyal and subservient, Bro. Cary very probably would never have heard of the second blessing, and would now be swallowing without question the old Calvinistic doctrine of death sanctification and fattening thereon. If Luther had been equally loyal and truculent, the Reformation would not have been born, and Bro. Cary would now be wearing priestly robes and saying mass.

He says: "Afterwards, when I began to study these doctrines of Methodism I found what I assumed to be true—viz., that they were reasonable and scriptural." It seems to me that this was not swallowing Methodist doctrines without question. Really, did this loyal brother become so reckless as to begin to study what he had swa owed without question? Or was this only chewing the cud?

Bro. Cary rejoices that he "had an old father, a student of the Scriptures, whose mind revolted at Calvinism, he having been brought up in a church of that faith." How dared his old father to revolt at what his Church and parents had taught him! Why didn't he swallow these things without question, as his son has done with the doctrines of his Church? And if he had, surely his obedient son would now be preaching absolute decrees, unconditional election and damnation, endless punishment to non-elect infants, final perseverance, etc.

Now, I concede that Bro. Cary is a good man, an Israelite indeed; that he is intelligent; that he is an acute thinker; that he has superior gifts as a writer; and I am therefore sorry to see that this very capable man is resolved to cease to have a mind of his own, and to give the world the benefit of it. Certainly he has said more than he dares to mean. A man who does not think cannot believe; he may have credulity, but he cannot have faith. If he has what people call faith, it is only prejudice, not faith. He is not capable of religion; he is only capable of superstition.

Bro. Cary further asserts: "As concerning fundamental doctrines for which his Church stands, he has no right to have an opinion which comes in direct conflict with them."

Our opinions are only indirectly under the control of the will. Opinions sometimes force themselves upon us. We are sometimes compelled to believe what we do not want to believe. I have known women who were compelled to believe that their husbands were drinking and gambling, and that, too, against their wills. And an honest man sometimes finds himself compelled by facts and evidence to dissent from some of the doctrines of his Church; and it is not optional with him whether he shall or shall not have opinions in conflict with these doctrines.

My brother is a wise and good man, whom I love and esteem, and I would not rudely antagonize him; but I must protest against a policy that would stereotype all the mistakes and errors of the world—would put the stamp of perpetuity upon Catholicism, Calvinism, paganism, etc., etc. Only in investigation and free thought lies the possibility of reform and progress. Truth has nothing to fear from investigation. Mankind has nothing to fear from free thought; what it should most fear is mental slavery—bondage of the mind. Every question should be an open question. We should always be ready to unlearn what is false, and to learn what is true.

WHICH?

Dear Recorder,—Reading Bro. John Moss' able paper delivered at Petersburg District Conference on Sunday Schools and Missions, in the Recorder of the 7th instant, recalls the memories of the old Farmville District associations, and the old rebel awoke in his poor sinner, and he found himself wishing for the flesh pots of Egypt, and at the dear brother had been privileged to read his wise and salutary counsels to the appreciative membership of a former dispensation. And why should he not? If the policy of the Methodist Church is and has been democratic, and the Bishop and his counsel are advised through the only intelligent agency, an informing membership, how can our system of government be worked on any other basis without friction and dissatisfaction? Bishop Duncan has ignored the counsels of the best and most intelligent members of the old district, and the conclusion is irresistible that the present status is arbitrary and ill-advised. This writer has never heard any explanation given why this healthy and robust child of Methodism, that was doing for all the varied interests of the Church more than most of the districts in the Virginia Conference, should, against the matured judgments of the Farmville District, be relegated as a sort of flotsam appendage to other territory—an awkward, misfitting, gerrymandered degenerate. This crazy-quilt district disjointed, although now administered by one of the best presiding elders in the connection, is losing prestige, suffering pecuniarily and spiritually and going around begging for a place to hold the District Conference. Under the old regime a good parsonage, centrally located among appreciative people, the presiding elder could man the work and add strength every year by that affinity and cohesion of interests that any tyro in observing the work could readily see. But for some reason or influence beyond the reach of ordinary mortals, this protested arrangement is continued, and the inference is justified, that the same Bishop who was responsible for breaking up our loved district is to repeat himself at the Virginia Conference in November next, and will perpetuate his work. And this suggests the query, when did Virginia Methodism become diocesan? The old fogies embraced the tenets and doctrines of the Methodist Church as embodying as one of its cardinal principles, itineracy, and had been simple enough to believe that even the Bishops were not exempt from this form of doctrine. Is the holding of three consecutive Conferences in Virginia just accident, or has our honored Bishop a peculiar attachment for our Virginia brethren, or, forsooth, has our beloved Bishop concluded to reverse himself and reinstate the old Farmville District—which?

SYNOPSIS OF A SERMON BY REV. F. M. EDWARDS.

Ephesians 6: 4—"But train them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."

The proper training of children may well command the study of the philosopher, the statesman and the Christian. Defective education may be charged with many of the afflictions which in the past have caused the tears of humanity. Non-use or wrong-use of educational opportunities has brought sorrow unmeasured.

To educate erroneously is to increase activity for criminal purposes. To neglect education altogether is to abandon all hope of future good, and to cast a ballot for the reign of savageism. In the one case it is like sharpening the razor for suicide; in the other, it is like leaving a company of children in a burning house without warning of danger or effort for rescue.

Skill in marksmanship when the firearm was in the hands of Tracey, the notorious outlaw, was unfortunate for his victims; but the art of gunning is important to the patriot soldier defending his country's rights. At once we reach the thought that character in "the man behind the gun" is the great factor for weal or woe in national history, or personal experience.

"Parental responsibility for the character of children," is therefore the theme to which serious study is invited. Alarming dangers threaten Church and State from the heterodox or careless father. No country can hope to be prosperous or happy when family government, as a rule, has become null. No amount of wealth can atone for the absence of moral worth. No scientific attainments can benefit their owner or bestow lasting good upon society, if unattended by truthfulness and honesty. It is largely at the option of parents to determine what principles shall be instilled into the young minds committed to their care. It is said Plato was so fully impressed with this, that "seeing a child doing mischief he went and corrected the father." The laws of our State agree, as they place penalty upon parents for misconduct up to a legal age. More authoritative on the subject is Revelation, which, as in our text, gives positive injunction to all fathers. The condemnation of Eli (in the first book of Samuel) was for the conduct of his sons Hophni and Phinehas. But lest some honest and faithful parents should charge themselves wrongfully, when a wandering boy goes to the bad, despite all parental good example and instruction, the Bible plainly shows where responsibility ends with the one and begins with the other. The crime of Eli was that he did not do everything in his power to keep his sons away from bad habits. When a father can honestly declare that he has by precept and by example, by proper restraint and disciplinary encouragement, exerted all his authority and loving care for good character in his boy, and on reaching maturity that boy (Absalom like) turns away from the good and enters the bad way, and hence is ruined, distress but not crime is the parent's heritage.

Any other doctrine would imply wrong in Jehovah Himself. For from the great parent we have the lament, "I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against Me."

It is, however, very important that the parent be able to make a clean breast of it, and say "no precept or example of mine could have led my child to dishonesty in business or dissipation in habit, and no lack of watchfulness on my part has given temptation from the agents of evil an open door."

Gentlemen of a highly favored community, what is your verdict as to the searching questions here pertinent?

Can you that are parents, with earnestness, aver that your example in all moral practices are such as your child can follow without detriment? Can any child plead your example for the use of bad language? or for taking in hand the cup of dissipation? or for games of chance that lead to a gambler's fatal conduct? or for such disregard for the Sabbath as must lead to the ultimate abolition of our institutions for worship and rest?

The citizens of the coming years will have a moral character. It will be good or bad. If good, will it be in agreement with your example? If bad, will you be the criminal giver of an example that has produced an evil fruitage? As you love your country, and to a greater degree love your children, do not shirk these thoughts; but resolve to meet your responsibilities as moral heroes.

As the Anglo-Saxon race has led the world in civilization, and hence in power, that race has brought to the aid of the family, two great departments of educative work, to each of which parental thought should be assiduously applied. The Church furnishes one, the State the other. They had their origin in the now undoubted theory of mental value, that man must be educated in morals as well as in mind. The one institution is the Sunday school, including public worship; the other is the system of public schools and kindred enterprise. Can a parent be indifferent to either? If the idea named in the first part of this discourse be true, no one that appreciates the welfare of children can be careless of agencies plainly promotive of that training needed to form the highest style of man.

Two errors are dangerous. One is to fail to use an aid to mind so potent for good; the other is to suppose that parents may delegate their office to teachers, secular or religious.

The parent should never think responsibility is met by simply placing the child under the care of teachers. Teachers and parents are partners in a great work. The work of the one depends for success upon the work of the other. Like two endorsers to the same note, both have an obligation as plain as important.

(The speaker here gave illustrations of how a parent can defeat a Sunday school teacher or a public school teacher.)

The great fact stares us in the face that no education is worthy that does not embrace the training of moral as well as intellectual qualities.

The conclusion follows that parents should take decided interest in public schools, but more interest in the moral character of those schools.

A man of learning with a reputation for good morals is the ideal teacher; a man of bad morals should never have charge of our boys, no matter how great his learning.

"Not with trifle gay, to whom life seems

But sunshine on the wave;

Not with the empty idler of the day,

My lot be with the wise and grave.

Not with the jesting fool, who knows not

What to sober trust is due,

LESSON X, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 7

Text of the Lesson. Deut. xviii, 9-22.
Memory Verses. 17-19—Golden Text, John vi, 14—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

9. When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations.

Before the deluge God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually (Gen. vi, 5). The margin says that every imagination signifies also the purposes and desires. After the deluge sin developed again in the descendants of Noah and became very manifest in the rebellion against God of the Babel builders. In due time God called Abram from among the idolaters of Mesopotamia to dwell in a land which He promised to him and to his seed forever, that in the descendants of Abram He might have a people who would honor Him and live to make Him known to other nations. They were therefore to be a people separated from all the customs and idolatries of the heathen, living wholly for God, a peculiar treasure unto Him above all people on the earth (Ex. xix, 5, 6).

10-12. All that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord.

The next clause of this verse says that the nations which formerly occupied this land were given to those abominations mentioned in the previous verses, and because of these they were being driven out. Therefore Israel was to beware of and avoid all these things. It was because of the wickedness of those nations that the Lord did drive them out before Israel and not because of any righteousness on the part of Israel (Deut. ix, 4-6). He did all that He did for Israel for His own name's sake (Ezek. xxxvi, 22), then in return for all His loving kindnesses He only asked them to let Him do still more for them, or, in other words, He asked them to walk in His ways and serve Him with all their heart and soul (Deut. x, 12, 13), for only thus could He do more for them than He already had done.

13, 14. Thou shalt be perfect (margin, upright or sincere) with the Lord thy God.

To Abram, the father of this people, God had said: "I am the Almighty God. Walk before Me, and be thou perfect" (upright, sincere) (Gen. xvii, 1). The title of God here is El-Shaddai, which signifies the Mighty God, who is all sufficient, as a mother for her child. Abram had been leaning on an arm of flesh rather than upon the Lord and had lost fellowship in a measure, but the Lord would restore him and have him do better in future and lean more fully on the Lord alone. If we would know the power of God, we must learn our weakness. If we would know the sufficiency of God, we must learn our own insufficiency (II Cor. xii, 9, 10; iii, 5). See some precious words for the upright, the sincere, in Ps. lxxxiv, 11; cxix, 1; xxxvii, 37.

15, 16. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto Me; unto him ye shall hearken.

In Jer. xxx, 21, R. V., it is written: "Their prince shall be of themselves, and their ruler shall proceed from the midst of them, and I will cause him to draw near, and he shall approach unto Me. For who is this that engaged his heart to approach unto Me? saith the Lord." Here is a wonderful and beautiful prophecy of the prophet like unto Moses; one of themselves drawing near to God on their behalf and bringing God's message to them in mercy. In all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that He might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. He was faithful to Him that appointed him, as also Moses was faithful in all his house (Heb. ii, 17; iii, 2).

17-19. I will put My words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him.

He said to Moses, "Now therefore go, and I will be with thy mouth and teach thee what thou shalt say" (Ex. iv, 12). He said to Jeremiah: "Whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. * * * Behold, I have put My words in thy mouth" (Jer. i, 7, 9). It is easy to understand how such men needed to be told what to say, but when we read that the Son of God so emptied Himself that He could truly say, "I can of Mine own self do nothing," "My doctrine is not Mine, but His that sent Me," "The Father who sent Me, He gave Me a commandment, what I should say and what I should speak," "The Father that dwelleth in Me, He doeth the works" (John v, 30; vii, 16; xli, 49; xlv, 10), then indeed we see what was never seen before nor since—Him in whom all fullness dwelt emptied to entire dependence on another even for His words.

20-22. How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken?

There always have been and always will be false prophets and teachers, teaching lies in the name of the Lord (Jer. xxiii, 21, 25, 32). Therefore John tells us by the Spirit: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God, because many false prophets are gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God, and every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God (I John iv, 1-3). The test therefore is, "What think ye of Christ?"

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

In Christ the noblest intellects find their development.—Rev. M. P. Smith, Catholic, San Francisco.

Love and Law.

Love is not something that can be forced upon us by law.—Rev. Dr. W. W. Landrum, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Ought to Be Better.

Every man knows that he ought to be better than he is, and when he is wrong he knows it.—Bishop Joyce, Methodist, Pittsburg.

At Its Best.

Some people would have us think Christ took no other view of mankind than to speak of it at its best.—Rev. Dr. Withrow, Congregationalist, Boston.

Harvest of Corruption.

Go where you will you will find that the sower to the flesh always reaps a harvest of corruption.—Rev. Dr. Frank De Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Vessels Unto Dishonor.

There are many in the church, the great house of God, who are vessels unto dishonor. These are not sanctified and not fit for the Master's use.—Rev. Dr. Holderby, Presbyterian, Atlanta, Ga.

Fruitful of Heaven.

Hope begins with infancy and holds through our earthly life. Hopes become fruition in heaven, and yet in a very real sense there, too, hope itself will abide.—Rev. Dr. Lowry, Baptist, Kansas City, Mo.

Direct and Concise Religion.

At no time in the history of religion has there been greater need of a direct and concise religion. The world moves and acts quickly, and religion must keep pace with it.—Rev. Dr. Hodder, Baptist, New York.

Needs of the Church.

What the church really needs today is the spirit of liberality, exhibiting itself all the year round. Many church members have not learned the blessedness of giving. The Bible always regards it as a spiritual exercise, as much a part of worship as praise and prayer.—Rev. A. B. Philpott, Indianapolis.

Study Present Situation.

Instead of laboring for a unity that has never existed and never can exist under present conditions we should study present situations. There are social problems, ghetto problems. Their solution will be found not in sciences or legal enactments, but in a more general application of the principles of humanity.—Rev. Dr. Roseman, Hebrew, Baltimore.

Hidden Wisdom of the Word.

To those only who are humble and desire to do the Lord's will—mere babes in their own estimation because dependent wholly on the Lord for all they have to do—these only see the hidden wisdom in the world. It is best to know the very least possible about a true life if man is bent upon refusing that life.—Rev. L. G. Hoeck, Swedenborgian, Brooklyn.

The Faith of Israel.

It is not Jesus, the Jew, who has alone died for the sins of men, but the race, whose martyred bones are scattered in all lands. The burdens that have bent the Jew's back have made his soul stand erect. Today, when the doctrines of the church are corroding under the acid of criticism, the faith of Israel remains unshaken.—Rev. Dr. Friedman, Hebrew, Denver.

Work and Worship.

In this day, when we are so wont to emphasize work more than worship, when we are so likely to restrict prayer to its mere uses of petition, when we are in want of religious experience, when we are so apt to forget that fruitfulness in Christian service means close connection of vine and branch, surely it is good to be reminded that spirituality is the root and source of all greatness of thought and of life.—Rev. Dr. Dewey, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Gambling Worse Than War.

We talk about the horrors of war today, but worse than any carnage ever seen on battlefield are the wreck and desolation of hope and character wrought by gambling. Do not look at the matter theoretically, but in the larger vision of past human experience, and see it there condemned and damned, as by a law of God not written on the sky or in the sky revealed, but on earth through human life revealed.—Rev. Dr. David H. Greer, Episcopalian, New York.

Warnings to the Young.

Some of the blunders of young people are to rush into the arena of life without the best possible preparation for the battle of the giants, especially such as a good education would give; to allow oneself to drift on and take up a business, trade or profession in a haphazard way or to make choice of a life work without due consideration of the question of fitness or adaptation insane matrimonial alliances; short cuts to wealth especially yielding to the insane craze of gambling; living as if the making of money was the supreme thing.—Rev. Dr. Polemus H. Swift, Methodist, Chicago.

The Christians' Inheritance.

Recall to your mind, if you can, the most beautiful thing you have ever seen, the most exquisite sound you have ever heard, the grandest thing you have ever imagined. Intensify them a thousandfold if you please. Get all the pleasure out of them that it is possible but keep this thought uppermost in your mind and let it control your every thought and sway your every action that if you love and serve God in this life, in the world to come, out of the immensity of his boundless love for you, the vision beautiful will open up before your immortal gaze, beside which earth's paltry scenes and sounds will pale into utter insignificance.—Rev. Dr. E. L. Eaton, Methodist, Pittsburg.

A FENCE OR AN AMBULANCE.

'Twas a dangerous cliff, as they freely confessed,
Though to walk near its crest was so pleasant,
But over its terrible edge there had slipped
A duke and full many a peasant;
So the people said something would have to be done,
But their projects did not at all tally.
Some said, "Put a fence round the edge of the cliff,"
Some, "An ambulance down in the valley."

But the cry for the ambulance carried the day,
For it spread through the neighboring city;
A fence may be useful or not, it is true,
But each heart became brimful of pity
For those who slipped over that dangerous cliff,
And the dwellers in highway and alley
Gave pounds or gave pence, not to put up a fence,
But an ambulance down in the valley.

"For the cliff is all right if you're careful," they said,
"And if folks even slip and are dropping
It isn't the slipping that hurts them so much As the shock down below—when they're stopping."
So day after day as these mishaps occurred
Quick forth would these rescuers rally
To pick up the victims who fell off the cliff
With their ambulance down in the valley.

But a sensible few, who are practical, too,
Will not bear with such nonsense much longer;
They believe that prevention is better than cure,
And their party will soon be the stronger.
Encourage them, then, with your purse, voice and pen,
And while other philanthropists dally
They will scorn all pretense and put a stout fence
On the cliff that hangs over the valley.

Better guide well the young than reclaim them when old,
For the voice of true wisdom is calling,
"To rescue the fallen is good, but 'tis best
To prevent other people from falling."
Better close up the source of temptation and crime
Than deliver from dungeon or galley;
Better put a strong fence round the top of the cliff
Than an ambulance down in the valley.
—Joseph Mallin.

AN EDUCATIONAL ADVANCE.

Massachusetts Primary Schools May Have a Temperance Course.

It is encouraging to note that the temperance and educational forces in certain parts of our country are honestly striving to come to a mutual understanding and appreciation. The Union Signal, This is particularly true in Massachusetts. As is oft genced by a recent letter from Mrs. Katherine Lente Stevenson, president of the W. C. T. U., which says:

"For nearly three years there have been working quietly a committee of twelve—six from the educational and six from the representative temperance societies. They have held meetings at not infrequent intervals and have just decided upon a course of study which they will recommend to the primary schools of the state.

"While this course has waived some of the points of method which the W. C. T. U. and other societies have heretofore earnestly urged, it stands solidly for the subject matter of total abstinence as taught from the standpoint of physiology and hygiene and cannot fail to recommend itself to the conservative forces all over the state.

"To have agreed upon this course of study after the differences of 1899 is of far greater moment than what is agreed upon, and both sides hail this agreement with joy as a prophecy of better, more harmonious work in days to come."

REBUKE FOR A KING.

How Dr. Parker Censured Beermaking Ruler of England.

In a sermon at the City temple, London, Rev. Joseph Parker, administering a pointed rebuke to King Edward, who brewed some beer while visiting Lord Burton, said:

"Pray for me that I may speak delicately, loyally. If the king brews beer, what can be wrong in the subject drinking it? What the king does is likely to be imitated by others."

Speaking of Sunday concerts, Dr. Parker said that the king could go to one of them, yet he could not attend a non-conformist place of worship. This remark brought cries of "Shame!" Dr. Parker continued:

"If the king, who is the head of the church and defender of the faith, violate the English Sunday, what can the people do but follow in his steps? I would rather give a great sum in gold than appear to be disloyal, but I cannot be disloyal to Christ, and it is better that some things should be said."

King Edward's brew at Burton-on-Trent will be when matured, according to those who should know, the strongest ale ever brewed at Burton, and not a drop of the 400 barrels containing the liquid will be touched for twenty years except for the purpose of testing.

Beer Production in Germany.

The production of beer in the German empire during the year ended March 1, 1901, was 1,860,624,800 gallons. The imports of foreign beer (mostly Pilsener from Bohemia probably) were 14,89,600 gallons, and the exports of German beer amounted to 21,172,800 gallons. The estimated consumption of beer per capita of population was 132.2 quarts for the whole of the empire. The government revenues derived from the manufacture of beer in Germany amounted to $22,715,976.

A Clever Temperance Detective.

Miss Jean Geddes, a young Scotchwoman, is employed as a detective by the Antisaloons league of New Jersey. She has been signally successful in securing convictions for violation of the Sunday closing law and selling liquor to minors.

After less than a year and a half of Anti-Saloon League work, Louisa County, once the rendezvous of moonshine whiskey and bars, both legal and illegal, is dry, and pretty thoroughly so, too.

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

SERMON BY REV. F. M. EDWARDS.

Whose words fly out without aim or rule.

My lot be with the wise and true."

Company is a great factor in the work of school life. Parents should be exceedingly careful about association. An Oriental poem says:

"Avoid a villain as you would a brand,
Which lighted, burns; extinguished,
smuts the hand."

To avoid bad company there must be good association. Hence it is urged upon parents to provide good society and teach the children to find their pleasure there, and nowhere else. Let parents set an example of finding their gratification only in elevating associations. How great is the influence of the father who shows that he takes more pleasure in church going than in the going to places of a vicious or trifling nature. Fathers of our great country, be wise and faithful!—Accomac News.

A METHODIST CHURCH IN GHENT.

[Our brethren in Norfolk are making another forward movement. The following circular letter is explanatory of the move.]

Dear Friend,—For the past year or two there has been a growing sentiment among the Methodists of Norfolk in favor of organizing a church of their denomination in Ghent. The need for such a movement, so apparent to non-residents, presented itself with special emphasis to those who have made their home in this most delightful residence section of the city.

Here are no fewer than 200 Methodists living at an inconvenient distance from their present church homes, and in a community without a church of their choice. Ghent is rapidly building up, and in a very short while it is reasonable to assume that this number will be greatly increased. Moreover, the newcomers, who are at present without any church affiliation, may prefer a church of our denomination, and we should provide for them.

The undersigned, after carefully considering the situation, concluded that the inauguration of this movement could not well be longer delayed, and at once entered into negotiations for the purchase of a suitable lot upon which to erect a church edifice. This resulted in the acquisition of 120x120 feet on the corner of Raleigh avenue and Stockley Gardens, a site unequalled for our purpose by any in Ghent. These beautiful gardens, upon which the church will face, are 120 feet wide and extend from the Hague to Redgate avenue, a distance of over 800 feet, and are in the very heart of Ghent. We count ourselves fortunate in having secured so desirable a location.

Steps have been taken to erect at once a suitable building for use as a Sunday school and lecture room, and later on we hope to have an attractive house of worship occupying the chief place on the corner.

We shall organize a Sunday school in the Central Baptist church, corner of Olney Road and Manteo streets, on the first Sunday in September, at 4 o'clock P. M., our friends of that church having kindly tendered us the use of their beautiful new building for that purpose.

It is proposed to ask for a preacher at Conference in November, and, at the earliest practicable moment after his arrival, to effect our church organization.

We ask your hearty co-operation in all this work.

Yours respectfully,

J. W. Granby, W. J. Woodward, W. D. Roberts, E. Tatterson, Frank Harrison, J. A. Rives, Jr., F. Odendine, T. H. Stiff, W. H. Newell, T. S. Southgate, C. N. Whitehurst, G. L. Whitehurst, P. J. Malbon, C. F. Newbill, T. W. Worsham, W. W. Vicar.

NOTICE.

Having entered upon the duties of secretary and treasurer of Randolph Macon College, I hereby request all persons indebted to the college, whether for twenty century subscriptions or otherwise, to make their checks payable to my order.

B. F. LIPSCOMB.

Secretary and Treasurer.

ADOPT RESOLUTION.

Petersburg, Va., August 22.—At meeting of the board of stewards of Washington Street M. E. church, held last Monday night, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, D. D. the beloved pastor of Washington Street M. E. church, in this third year of his pastorate, has been elected secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, and has found it his duty to accept the call; and whereas the board of stewards and congregation of this church, while recognizing the needs of the college and the eminence of Dr. Lipscomb for this work, yet feel sincere sorrow in losing a pastor who has so fully won their confidence and esteem; therefore be it Resolved, 1st, That in the preaching and pastoral work of Dr. Lipscomb we have found spiritual benefit and blessing, and in his own walk and conversation we have had an example of a life of high Christian ideals and of practical piety.

2d, That though he came to us as a stranger, he has endeared himself to this people by his faithful work and ministrations.

3d, That we part with him with deep regret and assure him that our best wishes and earnest prayers go with him to his new field of labor in the work of the Master.—Leader.

A jail chaplain tells the following story: At the jail which he visits to select their own hymns from Sankey selection, and there is decided humor in the frequency which they sing "From the law, O happy condition!" and "I've found the land of corn and wine. But the other Sunday they sang "Gone with you till we meet again!" The chaplain remarked to the officer who showed me out: "What a singular hymn for a prison! Did they mean for me?" "O, dear, no," said the chaplain, "There's a long-time going out tomorrow!"

Dr. W. G. Starr yesterday preached his first sermon as pastor of Washington Street church. There was a large congregation present at both the morning and evening service. This was the first sermon Dr. Starr has preached for seven months. In the morning he prefaced his sermon by referring to his former pastorate of this church, and the pleasant relations that existed and have continued.—Times.

It is stated that Professor Andrew Sledd, late president of Emory College, Georgia, will hereafter reside in Norfolk. An afternoon paper, without naming the Norfolk man, says one of Professor Sledd's relatives here has received a letter from him stating that he will hereafter make his home in this city. His father was formerly stationed here, and Professor Sledd has many boyhood chums in Norfolk.—Dispatch.

Rev. George H. McFaden, pastor of Wright Memorial M. E. church, is expected to return and fill his pulpit tomorrow night. While he was absent on a short leave from his church, he was summoned to his home, at Harper's Ferry, on account of the death of his sister. Mr. McFaden has prolonged his stay at home on account of the feeble condition of his aged mother.—Star.

Rev. R. T. Wilson, presiding elder of this district, preached an interesting sermon at High Street church yesterday morning, in which he alluded to the discussion of the Sunday observance laws in this city. Dr. Wilson said he was an advocate of peace, but if there had to be trouble to prevent the sale of soda water and other articles on Sunday he was in favor of trouble. He said this is a Christian Commonwealth, and he thought that all people should be made to observe Sunday laws.—Times.

Rev. Mr. Anderson preached a very practical and instructive discourse at Lebanon on last Sunday, taking for his subject, "We are workers with God," which he handled with great warmth and earnestness, dwelling very forcibly upon the lack of interest taken in Sunday school attendance, etc. He announced for a series of meetings to commence there on the fifth Sunday.—Hanover Herald.

Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., Bishop of the M. E. Church, South, is still at his cottage at Virginia Beach. He will leave next week on his second circuit for Rocky Mount and other points in North Carolina. The Bishop will preach at Queen Street church next Sunday morning at 11 o'clock.—Pilot.

Rev. Dr. W. J. Young has decided several months ago to fill out his four years' term at Court Street church, Lynchburg. It is a well known fact that several of the foremost churches in the Conference would be glad to get him as their pastor, but they will have to take their chances at the Conference in November, 1903.—Virginian-Pilot.

Rev. L. B. Betty, pastor of Clay Street Methodist church, left the city this morning for a two weeks' vacation in Amherst county. He will be joined by his wife, who preceded him, and together they will seek quiet rest till early in September, at which time he will return and push forward the repairs now in progress upon his church. It is hoped that by early fall the church will be completed. A committee is now arranging for the reopening and it is understood that they contemplate having Bishop A. Coke Smith with them for two sermons on this occasion.

Rev. Mr. Betty preached a fine sermon on Sunday morning, following the line under discussion at the moment, to some extent, and warning the young men of to-day in positions of trust and temptation to beware.

His language, as it is always, was temperate. Referring to capital and labor, he advocated the settlement of all differences through a Divine Being.—Leader.

Bishop A. Coke Smith was tendered a reception at the Buford Hotel in Charlotte, N. C., Tuesday night, to which place he has gone from Norfolk. He is the guest of Colonel H. C. Eccles, of the Buford Hotel, but has been visiting the home of B. D. Heath, in the Queen City of the Old North State. He will make Charlotte his home.—Dispatch.

Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder of this district, preached at Wright Memorial M. E. church yesterday morning. The discourse was an able one, taking as his theme, "Wait." "Cast thy bread upon the waters, for it shall be seen after many days." Rev. Mr. Vaden, in closing, referred to pleasant relations sustained between himself and Wright Memorial, and took this occasion to so express himself, as it was probably the last time he would preach there, this being the fourth and last year of his presiding eldership of this district. At the close of the service the choir sang, "God be with you," and a general handshaking followed.

The pastor, Rev. George H. McFaden, occupied the pulpit at the evening service, and preached to a large congregation on "Trust and fear not." He was greeted with a hearty welcome after his recent absence of a few weeks.

The Methodist ministers of the city met as usual yesterday morning at Centenary, and among other things adopted, without a dissenting vote, the following resolution:

"Whereas an effort is being made by some of the members of the police force of our city, notably by Policeman W. H. Wyatt, to have the laws against unlawful gaming enforced; therefore,

"Resolved, That we are in hearty sympathy with this movement, and that we urge our people to give Policeman Wyatt and those who are acting with him their moral support and cordial co-operation."

The paper was presented by Dr. W. W. Lear, the pastor of Centenary. It was at first understood that the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp would offer the resolution, but he left the city this morning, and in his absence the task was performed by Dr. Lear. The resolution was adopted unanimously without discussion.—Times.

The Builders' League of the Denny Street M. E. church was organized over three years ago.

The object of this organization was to secure funds to build a new church edifice. The pastor at that time was the Rev. J. T. Routten, who is now located at Newport News, who, during his pastorate here, worked very hard for a new church building.

The Rev. James E. Oyler, the present pastor, who has the confidence and respect of his congregation, and the Builders' League, says: "A new building is almost in sight."

The president, Mrs. Mayo, said: "We have bought a lot for the parsonage at the corner of Fulton and State streets, one of the prettiest building sites in Fulton, and have now in our treasury over eight hundred dollars.

The following are the officers of the Denny Street M. E. church Builders' League:

President, Mrs. W. J. Mayo; Mrs. V. England Seay, Mrs. A. M. Blair, vice-presidents, and Mrs. Robert S. Gaulding, treasurer.

The Builders' League meets next Wednesday afternoon at Mrs. Thomas Tyree's, No. 3939 Williamsburg avenue.—Richmond News.

Sunday morning Rev. Mr. Green, of Central church, Portsmouth, preached a forceful sermon to his congregation. He told them of their duties to the church and the necessity of carrying them out. He gave notice that Sunday, the 30th, would be the last time that his people would worship in the old church. Monday, September 1st, the board of stewards would turn the church over to the Hebrew congregation, who had bought it. Just where they would worship after that he did not say, but that due notice would be given on Sunday, the 30th. The new church could not be completed and ready for dedication on the first Sunday, as was hoped, as there had been some delay in getting the windows, and that on account of the trouble in naming the church the memorial window to Mr. Beadles would not be here until after the second Sunday. Consequently the church can hardly be dedicated before the third Sunday. In the meantime there is considerable money to raise, and he hoped that those who had promised donations would come forward with their money.—Virginian-Pilot.

It is the general impression among those who know him in this city, that Professor Andrew Sledd, who recently resigned from the faculty of Emory College, Georgia, will enter the ministry shortly after returning to this State.

Professor Sledd is well known in this city, and, indeed, in many parts of the State, where he has many friends. He was born in Powhatan county, where he has a farm, and where he will go immediately after his return to Virginia.

Professor Sledd's education was obtained at Randolph-Macon College and at Harvard. He was a fine linguist, and carried off an orator's medal at Randolph-Macon.

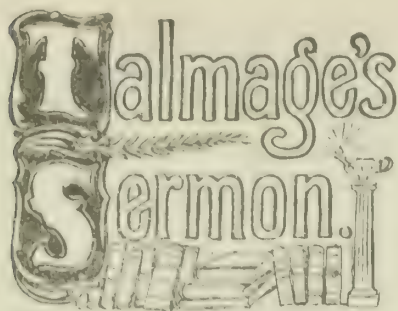

Professor Sledd's character is lofty, and he is held in the highest esteem by all who know him. He will be heartily welcomed in the Virginia Conference when he decides finally to enter the ministry.—Dispatch.

A REMARKABLE REVIVAL.

Rev. L. P. Bransford arrived in Norfolk yesterday en route to his home in Danville from Norfolk county, where he has just closed one of the most remarkable revivals at Tabernacle Methodist church, Hickory Ground, known for years in the history of that congregation. The meeting lasted two weeks and was attended by great crowds every day. Rev. N. B. Foushee is the preacher in charge, but the preaching was

WASHINGTON. — This is a discourse by Dr. Talmage for those given to depreciate themselves and who have an idea that their best attempts amount to little or nothing; text, Matthew xxv, 15, "To another one."

Expel first from this parable of the talents the word "usury." It ought to have been translated "interest." "Usury" is finding a man in a tight place and compelling him to pay an unreasonable sum to get out. "Interest" is a righteous payment for the use of money. When the capitalist of this parable went off from home, he gave to his stewards certain sums of money, wishing to have them profitably invested. Change also your idea as to the value of one talent. You remember the capitalist gave to one of his men for business purposes five talents, to another two, to another one. What a small amount to last, you think, and how could he be expected to do anything with only one talent? I have to tell you that one talent was about $7,200, so that when my text says, "To another one," it implies that those who have the least have much.

We bother ourselves a great deal about those who are highly gifted or have large financial resource or exalted official position or wide reaching opportunity. We are anxious that their wealth, their eloquence, their wit, be employed on the right side. One of them makes a mistake, and we say, "What an awful disaster." When one of them devotes all his great ability to useful purposes, we celebrate it, we enlarge upon it, we speak of it as something for gratitude to God. Meanwhile we give no time at all to consider what people are doing with their one talent, not realizing that ten people of one talent each are quite as important as one man with ten talents. In the one case the advantage or opportunity is concentrated in a single personality, while in another it is divided among ten individuals. Now, what we want to do in this sermon is to waken people of only one talent to appreciation of their duty. Only a few people have five talents or ten talents, while millions have one. My short text is like a galvanic shock, "To another one."

The most difficult thing in the world is to make an accurate estimate of ourselves. Our friends value us too high, our enemies too low. To find out what we are worth morally and mentally is almost impossible. We are apt to measure ourselves by those around us, but this is not fair, as they may be very brilliant or very dull, very good or very bad. Indeed there are no human scales that can tell our exact moral and mental weight, nor is there a standard by which we can measure our exact intellectual height, so the hardest thing to do is to calculate our real stature or heft. But it will be no evidence of egotism in any of us if we say that we have at least one talent. What is it and, finding what it is, what use shall we make of it? The most of the people, finding that they have only one talent, do as the man spoken of in the parable, they hide it. But if all of the people who have one talent brought it out for use before this century is half past and correspondents begin to write at the head of their letters 1950 the earth would be one of the outskirts of heaven. I ask you again, What is your one talent?

Value of Cheerfulness.

Is it a cheerful look? Carry that look wherever you go. It must come from a cheerful heart. It is not that inane smile which we sometimes see which is an irritation. In other words, it must be a light within us so bright that it illumines eye, cheek, nostril and mouth. Let ten men who are accustomed to walking a certain street every day resolve upon a cheerful countenance as a result of a cheerful heart, and the influence of such a facial irradiation would be felt not only in that street, but throughout the town. Cheerfulness is catching. But a cheerful look is exceptional. Examine the first 20 faces that you meet going through Pennsylvania avenue or Chestnut street or Broadway or State street or La Salle street or Euclid avenue, and 19 out of the 20 faces have either an anxious look or a severe look or a depressing look or an avaricious look or a sneering look or a vacant look. Here is a missionary work for those who have trouble. Arm yourself with gospel comfort. Let the God who comforted Mary and Martha at the loss of their brother, the God who soothed Abraham at the loss of Sarah and the God of David, who consoled his bereft spirit at the loss of his boy by saying, "I shall go to him;" the God who filled St. John with doxology when an exile on barren Patmos and the God who has given happiness to thousands of the bankrupted and persecuted, filling them with heavenly riches which were more than the earthly advantages that are wiped out—let that God help them. If he take full possession of your nature, then you will go down the street a benediction to all who see you, and those who are in the tough places of life and are run upon and belied and had their homes destroyed will say: "If that man can be happy, I can be happy. He has been through troubles as big as mine, and he goes down the street with a face in every lineament of which there are joy and peace and heaven. What am I groaning about? From the same place that man got his cheerfulness I can get mine. Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me? I hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him who is the health of my rountenance and my God."

Unwholesome Humor.

Again, is your talent that of wit or humor? Use it for God. Much of the world's wit is damaging. Most of satire has a sting in it. Much of caricature is malevolent. Much of smart retort is vitriolic. In order to say smart things how many will sacrifice the feelings of others! The sword they carry is keen, and it is employed to thrust and lacerate. But few men in all the world and in all the churches realize that if wit is bestowed it is given them for useful, for improving, for healthful purposes. If we all had more of it and knew how to use it aright, how much it would improve our Christian conversation and prayer meeting talk and sermon! Robert South and Rowland Hill and Jeremy Taylor and Dean Swift and Lorenzo Dow and George Whitefield used their wit and their humor to gather great audiences and then lead them into the kingdom of God. Frivolity is repulsive in religious discussion, but I like the humor of Job when he said to his insolent critics, "No doubt but ye are the people, and wisdom shall die with you," and I like the humor of the prophet Elijah, who told the Baalites to pray louder, as their god was out hunting or on an excursion or in such loud conversation that ne could not hear them. I like the sarcasm of Christ when he told the self righteous Pharisees that they were so good they needed no help, "The whole need not a physician, but they that are sick," or when in mirthful hyperbole he arraigns the hypocritical teachers of his day who were so particular about little things and careless about big things, saying, "Ye blind guides that strain at a gnat and swallow a camel," and the Bible is all ablaze with epigram, words surprisingly put and phraseology that must have made the audiences of Paul and Christ nudge each other and exchange glances and smile and then appropriate the tremendous truths of the gospel. There are some evils you can laugh down easier than you can preach down. The question is always being asked, Why do not more people go to church, prayer meeting and other religious meetings? I will tell you. We of the pulpit and the pew are so dull they cannot stand it. But when we ask why people do not go to church we ask a misleading question. More people go now to church than ever in the world's history, and the reason is in all our denominations there is a new race of ministers stepping into the pulpits which are not the apostles of humdrum. Sure enough, we want in the Lord's army the heavy artillery, but we want also more men who, like Burns, a farmer at Gettysburg, took a musket and went out on his own account to do a little shooting different from the other soldiers. The church of God is dying of the proprieties.

Set a Good Example.

Or is your talent an opportunity to set a good example? One person doing right under adverse circumstances will accomplish more than many treatises about what is right. The census has never been taken of lovely old folks. Most of us, if we have not such a one in our own house now, have in our memory such a saint. We went to those old people with all our troubles. They were perpetual evangelists, by their soothing words, by their hopefulness of spirit, an inexpressible help. I cannot see how heaven could make them any lovelier than they are or were. But there are exceptions. There is a daughter in that family whose father is impatient and the mother querulous. The passage of many years does not always improve the disposition, and there are a great many disagreeable old folks. Some of them forget that they were ever young themselves, and they become untidy in their habits and wonder how, when their asthma or rheumatism is so bad, other people can laugh or sing and go on as they do. The daughter in that family bears all the peevishness and unreasonable behavior of senility without answering back or making any kind of complaint. If you should ask her what her five talents are or her one talent is, she would answer that she has no talent at all. Greatly mistaken is she. Her one talent is to forbear and treat the childishness of the old as well as she treats the childishness of the young. She is no musician, and besides there may not be a piano in the house. She cannot skillfully swing a croquet mallet or golf stick. Indeed, she seems shut up to see what she can do with a ladle and a broom and a brush and other household implements. She is the personification of patience, and her reward will be as long as heaven. Indeed, much of her reward may be given on earth. She is in a rough college, from which she may after awhile graduate into brightest domesticity. She is a heroine, though at present she may receive nothing but scolding and depreciation. Her one talent of patience under trial will do more good than many morocco cover sermons on patience preached to from the tasseled cushion of the pulpit.

There is a man in business life who one talent is honesty. He has not a genius or the force to organize a company or plan what is called a "corner in wheat" or "a corner in stocks" "a corner" in anything. He goes business at a reasonable hour and turns when it is time to lock up. I never gave a check for $20,000 in his life, but he is known on the street and in the church and in many honorable circles as an honest man. His word is as good as his bond. He has for 30 years been referred to as clean, upright, industrious, consistent Christian man. Ask him how many talents he has, and he will not claim even one. He cannot make a speech he cannot buy up a market, he cannot afford an outshining equipage, but what an example he is to the young, what an honor to his household, what a pillar to the church of God, what a specimen of truth and integrity and a roundness of character! Is there an comparison in usefulness between the man with the one talent of honesty and the dashing operators of the money market?

Genius Unnecessary.

The chief work of the people with many talents is to excite wonderment and to startle and electrify the world. What use is there in all that? No use at all. I have not so much interest in the one man out of a million as I have in the million. Get the great masses of the world right and it does not make much difference about what the exceptional people are doing. Have all the people with the one talent enlisted for God and righteousness, and let all those with five or ten talents migrate to the north star or the moon, and this world would get on splendidly. The hardworking, industrious classes of America are all right and would give no trouble, but it is the genius who gives up work and on a big salary goes around to excite dissatisfaction and embroilment, the genius who quits work and steps on the stage or political platform, eats beefsteak and quail on toast and causes the common laborers, compelled to idleness, to put their hands into empty pockets and eat gristle and gnaw bones. The world would be mightily improved if it could slough off about 5,000 geniuses, for there are more than that on our planet. Then the man or woman of one talent would take possession of the world and rule it in a common sense and Christian way. There would be less to amaze and startle, but more to give equipoise to church and state and world. "To another one."

The most brilliant and many sided man that ever trod this world, in my opinion, was Napoleon Bonaparte, and no man that ever lived did the world more damage. I have read a book advocating him as a great emancipator and reformer. I was not surprised at the book, for I have heard of a pamphlet in defense of Judas Iscariot. I suppose it may set forth the idea that he was out of money and needed the 30 pieces of silver, and the money was not spent for himself, but to open a respectable graveyard. I would not be surprised to find a book in honor of Satan, the chief miscreant of the universe. We all admire industry, but there is no more industrious man than Satan. But when a man tells me Napoleon was a reformer and emancipator I would like to take him and show him 95,000 corpses in the Russian snow banks and ask him if he likes that, and I would show him the grave trenches of those who fell in the rear northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

done by Mr. Bransford, who is one of the most successful Methodist evangelists in Virginia. There were about 100 conversions and many reclamations. Thirty-five were received in the church Sunday, and others yet to join. Several who professed faith have united with the Baptist church.—Pilot.

METHODISTS UNITE.

Nashville, Tenn., August 20.—The Book Committee of the Southern Methodist Publishing House, met here today and ratified the agreement between the Northern and Southern Churches to establish a joint publishing house at Shanghai, China. Dr. Collins Denny, J. B. Morgan and John B. Ransom, all of Nashville, were chosen directors representing the Southern Church, while Charles D. Smith, one of the book agents, was authorized to purchase the machinery at once for the plant.

It is expected that the publishing house will be in operation by January 1st next, as the building is only waiting the installation of machinery to make it ready for operations.

Dr. R. C. Wilson, of San Francisco, went to Shanghai six months ago to take charge of this work.—Times.

A GREAT CAMP MEETING.

Madison, Va., August 23.—The camp meeting, or, as it is locally called, the tabernacle meeting, that has been on, about five miles south of the town, since the 21st instant, was brought to a close Thursday night. The meeting was a success in every respect. Rev. George R. Stuart, of Cleveland, Tenn., was in charge of the meeting, assisted by Rev. Edmund Donovan, of West Virginia, and others. There was a good attendance throughout the meeting, it being estimated that there were 3,000 people present last Sunday.

Rev. George Stuart has conducted these meetings for three years. He is a great favorite with our people, and a man of great force, influence, and power before an audience.

It has been decided to have another meeting next year. Rev. Mr. Stuart has asked, and the committee has granted, that he be given full charge of the next meeting. He will assume all responsibility in the matter, engage the speakers and settle with them.

The next meeting will be conducted as a Chautauqua assembly. Rev. Sam Jones will be present for at least two days, and other able speakers will be heard during the meeting. There will also be a quartette of singers from New York, that will cost $300. And Mr. A. W. Hawkins, a humorist, from Baltimore, will also be present.—Dispatch.

CHRISTIAN ALLIANCE.

The Christian Alliance Workers closed their Convention here last night at the "Wiley Tent," with a great service. There were enough men, women and children to fill two such tents. Throughout the two and a half hours hundreds stood, reverently and solemnly, listening to a remarkable address from Dr. P. W. Philpott, of Canada.

All-day-long services were being held by the Alliance preachers and missionaries. Many were asking what the Alliance stands for. The following answer is from one of the leading speakers:

"An organization of Christians of any Protestant denomination, bound together on common faith to stir each other up to know deeper Christian life."

When Rev. George Wiley and Mr. William McBain brought the Alliance Workers here several years ago, there was no church open to them, and every sort of exaggerated report was out on their doctrines. The meetings were then held in a small tent on the back lot of the Methodist Institute. No effort was made to push themselves upon any church. The next year the Convention was held at Centenary, when Dr. Steel was pastor. The crowd was small. The next Convention Dr. John Hannon opened Union Station church to them. Large crowds attended there. In this last Convention the meetings have been held in a tent at night, and in Trinity church in the day. A score of churches have been open to the workers the past week. Dr. Wilson, one time pastor of St. George Episcopal church, New York, on yesterday preached at the St. James Episcopal church, Fifth and Marshall; Dr. Philpott at Trinity Methodist Episcopal church in the morning and at the tent at 3:30 and at night. The afternoon tent service was attended by 600 men and fifteen requested prayer; there were six conversions. Rev. Mr. Glover, of China, preached at Centenary at 11 o'clock, at Trinity at 3:30, Union Station at 5:30, and to Chinamen at 7 o'clock. There were many other services.

Rev. George Wiley directed things at the tent last night, and announced at the close that the people would rest this week and open the meetings again next Sunday night. The tent meetings have been going on for seven weeks.—Leader.

GAMBLING.

Hundreds of persons heard the Rev. W. B. Beauchamp preach on gambling in the Broad Street Methodist church last night, his theme being, "Gamblers or the Youths—Which?" The text was from Proverbs, 26th chapter, 6th verse: "In the transgressions of an evil man there is a snare."

Almost the first sentences of the sermon concerned the gambling disclosures which have recently been made in this city. The Rev. Mr. Beauchamp said that a friend of his had written that almost every day the papers contained an account of some shame or disgrace in Richmond. His friend was afraid to come here, where everything seemed to be going wrong.

SHOULD SAVE YOUNG MEN.

Mr. Beauchamp said that there should be law and good government against the lawless, and had government of the city. He thought that the question which most confronts the people of this city is that of saving young men and boys from what he called "gambling hells."

"It is a question that does concern all and may specifically concern you. The members of the church should work to break up such places of destruction. Five of the members of the ministers' Sunday school had been caught in 'gambling hells,' and members of the church had also been seen there."

He said that when the church and the places of sin conflict, the boys whom parents think too young to join the church are going into such places.

"Young men, who are members of the church and Sunday school," he declared, "were then in the gambling dens."

"Those who are not working to break up such places are just as guilty as those who conduct them."

"Are you on the Lord's side—actively and earnestly working to save our young men?"

COMMENDS NEWSPAPERS.

The Rev. Mr. Beauchamp said that the newspapers of the city have come to the aid of the people in increasing public sentiment, and are doing much good in exposing the places of evil.

"They are doing noble work," said Mr. Beauchamp. "In this particular I want to commend the newspapers of Richmond. They are doing all they can for the good of the city."

"The active interest of every Christian man and woman should be to find these places and break them up. They should make their work a centre of influence for good."

"The power of the public is the greatest power for moral influence in the world. The forces which should be behind the movement to break up evil should be the people, the church and the press. These forces must get behind the police organization, and when they do they will do their full duty."

A large number of members of the city council, city officials, and several policemen heard the sermon by Mr. Beauchamp last night.—Richmond News.

METHODIST MINISTERS.

There was a very perceptible increase in the attendance upon the regular weekly session of the Methodist preachers at Epworth church yesterday morning. Rev. R. H. Bennett, vice-president, presided, and the opening invocation was made by Rev. W. C. Vaden, presiding elder of the Portsmouth District.

The meeting was honored with a pleasant visit from Rev. Dr. A. Coke-Smith, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a former member of the body.

The Bishop gave a most interesting account of his recent Episcopal visitation to western North Carolina. He attended and presided over the Franklin and Asheville District Conferences. He said that at the Franklin Conference large crowds attended the daily sessions of the body. He said that there was an intense interest manifested in the missionary cause, and that he was gratified to state that the Conference assessments will be paid in full. At a missionary rally held Saturday, July 26th, a collection for the cause was lifted, amounting to $750. The Conference was also visited with a gracious season of revival, which resulted in spiritually uplifting the Church and in the conversion of a number of penitents and additions to the Church.

At the Asheville District Conference there was a great outpouring of the people, and the same interest in missions was manifested there as at Franklin. A new church has been erected at Asheville, with an auditorium that has a seating capacity of 3,000. The new church edifice is fitted up with rooms for committees, as they are so arranged as to make the building particularly adapted for the meeting of the General Conference, which Bishop Smith said would be an admirable place for this great body to hold its next quadrennial session, as Asheville is a great railroad center and is supplied with ample hotel accommodations. Bishop Smith preached to a very large congregation at Queen Street Methodist church Sunday morning, and had a most delightful service. The Bishop will leave Wednesday for Washington, D. C., and from thence he will go to Halifax Courthouse, where on Thursday, he will attend the Sunday school Convention and make an address on this great auxiliary of the Church. After the adjournment of the Sunday school Convention the Bishop will leave for Remington, Va., where, on next Sunday, he will dedicate a new church.

REPORTS FROM THE CHURCHES.

Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett, of the Christian Memorial temple, reported a busy and profitable day Sunday. He attended the Sunday school and preached three times. Dr. Barrett has just returned from Isle of Wight, where he has for two weeks assisted the Rev. E. DeShazo in a gracious revival of religion.

Trinity.—Rev. George Wesley Jones, who has returned from his vacation, preached for his congregation Sunday morning. The Rev. N. R. Smith preached for him at night. While Mr. Jones was away on his vacation he assisted his father in a revival which resulted in a large number of conversions and many accessions to the church.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun held his usual services at Centenary Sunday. His afternoon service was more largely attended than usual, and the day was most pleasant one to both preacher and people.

Rev. W. T. Green had a very good Sunday at Central church. He reported a fine attendance at the Sunday school, with good congregations to hear him morning and evening. He stated that the new church is rapidly nearing completion, and that the congregation would, he thought, be able to worship in the lecture-room of the new building on the first Sunday in September. In the auditorium, which will be a very handsome room, there will be a memorial window erected, dedicated to the late Rev. R. F. Beadles, who died while in the faithful discharge of his duties as pastor of the church, under whose ministrations the new church enterprise was begun.

Rev. W. C. Vaden preached at Wright Memorial church Sunday morning and greatly edified his congregation, which was a large one. At night the pastor, Rev. George H. McFadden, preached to one of the largest congregations during the summer.

Rev. N. R. Smith conducted the usual services at Oaklette church Sunday morning and preached at Bethel church in the afternoon. At night he preached at Trinity church, Brambleton, for Rev. George Wesley Jones.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt reported a good day Sunday at Port Norfolk. He led an excellent Sunday school, taught a large Bible class, and preached at 11 o'clock to a good congregation. Rev. C. Vaden preached for him at night. Rev. C. W. Cain preached an able sermon on "Christ, the Hope of Glory," to a large congregation at Cumberland street church Sunday night. He attended Monumental church in the morning and heard Rev. Dr. J. H. Moss.

Rev. E. H. Odell preached morning and night Sunday for his people at Intersville church. His evening congregation was an unusually large one for the summer.

Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins preached a strong and striking discourse on the "General Judgment" at Cumberland street church Sunday morning. At night he occupied the pulpit of Queen street church.

At LeKies' Memorial church Rev. Maham Lambeth had full congregations and pleasant services. At night he attended Epworth church and heard a fine discourse by Rev. R. H. Bennett. Rev. J. B. Merritt conducted his usual services at the Seamen's Bethel Sunday. He had the pleasure of hearing Bishop Smith at the morning service at Queen Street.

Rev. C. H. McGee taught a class in the Sunday school and preached morning and night at Lambert's Point. His evening congregation was a very large one.

Rev. J. K. Joliff preached at the first Methodist church, Hampton, Sunday, to two fine congregations, for the pastor, Rev. J. Sidney Peters, who is now with his wife, who is ill in Campbell county.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian had large congregations to hear him Sunday at Memorial church, Berkley. He reported an excellent Sunday school and young men's prayer-meeting.

Rev. J. N. Latham had a most pleasant day at Park View and profitable services.

Rev. D. J. Traynham presided over the Sunday school at Olive Branch in the absence of the superintendent and preached at 11 A. M. and in the afternoon at Indiana, and at night he preached at Deep Creek to one of the largest congregations during his pastorate on the Norfolk circuit. Mr. Traynham has begun a protracted meeting at the latter church, with the prospects of a gracious revival. Rev. B. V. G. Bargamin is assisting him.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached to large congregations at Epworth church Sunday.

The meeting was dismissed with the benediction by Bishop Smith.—Virginian-Pilot.

1777 during the Napoleonic wars. Of 116,000 men butchered in ten months I would ask him how he likes that. The country is beautiful, and I would ask our friend to cross with me to Leipzig and examine the grave trenches opened there. Only 101,790 fallen on both sides! That is all. Come on, my friend, and see the further work of the great emancipator and reformer at Borodino, which I had an opportunity of looking at last summer. Only 100,000 dead men as a result of the battle! Pass by as hardly worth looking at Austerlitz, where the work of our reformer left 12,000 of the slain, and come to Waterloo, to find that only 56,000 dead men were left on the field! Alas for the work of this great emancipator and reformer! He turned Europe into a charnel house and filled Europe with widowhood and orphanage and childlessness. Though he was the brilliant man of the ages, would it not have been better for the world if he had died in his cradle six weeks after he was born? Compare that with the man who had one talent and that the talent of invention. He was born on a farm in Spencer, Mass., in 1819. He went to the district school in the winter and never had any other literary advantages. He became a machinist. In 1846 he came on to a battlefield where more women have been slain by the needle than in the wars I spoke of men were slain by the sword. Elias Howe! He could not make an oration. He could not marshal a host. He could not write a constitution. But he could contrive a sewing machine, which said to millions of beggared, consumptive, bent over, half blinded sewing women: "Go free! Take back your health! Recover your eyesight! Come down out of that garret! Go free!"

Make Good Use of Your Talent.

Is your talent that of persuasion? Make good use of it. We all have it to some extent, yet none of us think of it as a talent. But it is the mightiest of talents. Do you know that this one talent will fetch the world back to God? Do you know it is the mightiest talent of the high heavens? Do you know that it is the one talent chiefly employed by all the angels of God when they descend to our world—the talent of persuasion? Do you realize that the rough lumber lifted into a cross on the hill back of Jerusalem was in persuasion as well as sacrifice? That is the only, absolutely the only, persuasion that will ever induce the human race to step its march toward the city of destruction and wheel around and start for the city of light. Now may the Lord this moment show each one of us that to a greater or less extent we have that one talent of persuasion and impel us to the right use of it. You say you cannot preach a sermon, but can you not persuade some one to go and hear a sermon? You say you cannot sing, but cannot you persuade some one to go and hear the choir chant on Christmas or Easter morning? Send a bunch of flowers to that invalid in the hospital with a message about the land where the inhabitants never say, "I am sick." There is a child of the street. Invite him into the mission school. There is a man who has lost his fortune by speculation. Instead of jeering at his fall go and tell him of riches that never take wings and fly away. Buckle on that one talent of persuasion, O man, O woman, and you will do a work that heaven will celebrate 10,000 years.

Among the 114,000 words of Noah Webster's vocabulary and the thousands of words since then added to our English vocabulary there is one out-mastering word the power of which cannot be estimated, and it reaches so far up and so far down, and that is the word "come." It has drawn more people away from the wrong and toward the right than any word I now think of. It has at times crowded all the 12 gates of heaven with fresh arrivals. It will yet rob the path of death of the last pedestrians. It will yet chime so loudly and gladly that all the tolling bells of sorrow will be drowned with the music. It is piled up in the Bible's climax and peroration, "And the spirit and the bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come." Have it on the point of your pen, have it on the tip of your tongue. Monosyllables are mightier than polysyllables, and that word "come" is the mightiest of monosyllables. Shakespeare says of one of his characters, "She speaks poulards, and every word stabs." We may say of others, they speak words which are of balm and music, are light and life. Master one of those words, harness one of those words, project one of those words, prove the full plenitude and power of one of those words. David Garrick, the dramatist, said he would give 100 guineas if he could say "oh" as George Whitefield said it. What might we not give if we could say "come" as Jesus said it? Some one has said that syllables govern the world, and I think that one syllable might save the world. But I cannot particularize. Whatever be your one talent, cultivate it. Once fully realize that you have something with which to enhance heaven and take hold of the eternities, and it will add a new bank of keys to the music of your soul. You are ordained to some kind of work by the laying on of the hands of the Lord God Almighty. If you cannot do anything else, go around and feel sorry for somebody. When some one asked, "What is the secret of William Wilberforce's power?" the answer was, "His power of sympathy." And there are 10,000,000 people who have the same qualification if they only knew it. Sympathy! If you cannot restore the child to that bereft parent or the fortune to that bankrupt financier or health to that confirmed invalid or an honorable name to that wrecked character, you can at least feel sorry for the misfortune or the bereavement or the suffering. Sympathy! If you have not the means to do anything else, go and sit down and cry with them. That is the way Christ did when he went out to the desolate home in Bethany and the sisters told their sad story. He cried with them. Oh, cultivate that one talent of sympathy!

A Mighty Division.

After the resurrection day and all heaven is made up, resurrected bodies joined to ransomed souls and the gates which were so long open are shut there may be some day when all the redeemed may pass in review before the great white throne. If so, I think the hosts passing before the King will move in different divisions. With the first division will pass the mighty ones of earth who were as good and useful as they were great. In this division will pass before the throne all the Martin Luthers, the John Knoxes, the Wesleys, the Richard Cecilis, the Miltons, the Chrysostoms, the Herschells, the Lenoxes, the George Peabodys, the Abbott Lawrences and all the consecrated Christian men and women who were great in literature, in law, in medicine, in philosophy, in commerce. Their genius never spoiled them. They were as humble as they were gifted or opulent. They were great on earth, and now they are great in heaven. Their surpassing and magnificent talents were all used for the world's betterment.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course: The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course: This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

HOW THE ANTISALOON LEAGUE WORKS.

The following, taken from the Christian Federation, will give to our readers an idea as to how the Anti-Saloon League works:

The work of a local Anti-Saloon League is supposed to be done almost entirely by the various committees. It has been found wisest to divide the work up in this way, giving to each committee a separate department. The real success of a local League, therefore, depends upon the faithfulness of the various committees appointed to do the work. It is of importance, therefore, that all members of committees know exactly what their duties are.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

This committee is usually composed of the officers of the League and of the chairmen of other committees. Its business is to have general oversight of the work of the League, and to see that the other committees do their work faithfully and in accordance with Anti-Saloon League principles. It is understood that this committee has authority to fill any vacancies that may occur in the offices or committees of the League; also to make additions to any standing committee when there is need of additional workers in that department.

THE AGITATION COMMITTEE.

The principal duty of this committee is to hold public meetings at regular periods, usually once a month. These meetings should be calculated to interest the people in the cause of temperance and to instruct them concerning the evils of intemperance and the best methods of temperance work. The exercises at these meetings should not consist alone of addresses, but of singing, recitations, readings, dialogues—whatever exercises will have a tendency to interest and at the same time instruct those who attend.

Our Model Programmes are intended to help this committee in its work.

THE COMMITTEE ON LEGISLATION.

This committee is intended to secure from the councils in incorporated cities and towns the best ordinances for the purpose of restricting the harmfulness of the saloons. It is also expected to co-operate with the State League in securing the best possible temperance legislation through the General Assembly.

COMMITTEE ON LAW ENFORCEMENT.

It is the duty of this committee to secure the best possible enforcement of existing temperance laws. Its first efforts in this direction, after finding cases of law breaking, should be in the direction of inducing the officers of the law to do their duty in the matter. Ordinarily much can be accomplished in this direction, as many of the officials are willing to do their duty if they can have the backing of public sentiment. This backing the Law Enforcement Committee should secure for them.

COMMITTEE ON INFORMATION FOR VOTERS.

If officers of the law neglect to do their duty after being urged thereto by the Law Enforcement Committee, it is no part of the policy of the League to let the matter rest there. If men already in office will not do their duty, we believe it to be the right and duty of Christian people to see to it that others shall take their place. It is, therefore, the duty of the Committee on Information for Voters to keep a careful account with all men in public life, so that when these men are again seeking office they shall be compelled to face their records, whether they be good or bad. It will be seen on reflection that this is one of the most important committees connected with our League work, and this simple method of making candidates for office face their records has already been proved to be a great power in advancing the cause of temperance and civic righteousness.

COMMITTEE ON OPPOSING LICENSES.

It is the duty of this committee to secure evidence against saloon keepers who violate the laws restricting the business; for instance, the laws against selling on Sunday, selling to minors, etc., and contesting the granting of licenses to such men when their licenses expire. This committee should not leave its work until the last day before licenses are to be regranted, but should be on the watch all through the year so as to have its evidence all ready when the time comes. It will, of course, secure a large portion of its information in co-operation with the Law Enforcement Committee.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLMENT.

It is the duty of this committee to secure the largest possible enrollment of members in the League. For this purpose they should keep on hand the enrollment cards of the State League. Their work can be done in the public meetings of the League, and also by personal solicitation.

While all these committees, and one or two beside, are mentioned in the Model Constitution for a Local Anti-Saloon League, it is understood that, in the smaller communities, it will be wiser to combine the work of two or more committees in one, as it will not be found practicable in such places to have so many committees.

In case of any difficulty arising in the work of any committee which cannot be adequately dealt with by the methods above outlined, a letter should be immediately sent in to the State headquarters stating the circumstances. Frequently advice based on experience gained in other localities can be given which will help to bring victory out of apparent defeat.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

There is a slovenliness in language called slang which has often been severely condemned; but occasionally it has an apologist. The New York Sun says:

"That ancient beacon of the Terra-pin, the Baltimore Sun, flares up tremendously because Dr. Granville Stanley Hall, president of Clark University, has told some teachers in Chicago that 'boys and girls need slang. It's good for them. Let them use it. It keeps them from becoming tongue-bound. If a youngster tells you of a 'hunch' or a 'straight tip' or a 'pipe,' don't correct him. He has found the right word." Whereat there is great flickering of the ancient one:

"This is very bad advice. The English language is not so poor as the Clark University professor seems to think. It abounds in words of good origin, which will express accurately, graphically and sensibly any idea which a man may desire to clothe in decent garb."

Dr. Hall is not speaking of the language of men, but of the language of girls and boys. Still, a pretty sort of English would be that of the dainty culler and sifter of words, the snob who wouldn't admit to his vocabulary any expression of whose origin and social standing he was doubtful. Words of sap and strength are not to be had by consulting the peerage of vocabularies. They spring from the soil and street.

It takes an artist to use slang effectively. It may be abused or misused as alliteration or profanity is. The slang of most folks has no edge to it, and is wicked, worn and tiresome. There is a fine flash and color to good slang; and almost any slang may be justified as a saver of energy. Translate "hunch" or "straight tip" into bookish tongue and how much you lose. Good slang is the enemy of the circumlocution office of speech. One sharp, short, brilliant phrase does duty for a whole squad of malingering and clumsy words. Slang is the pemican of language.

In Dr. Hall's opinion, it is another recommendation of slang that it "aids the young man or woman to acquire fluency." At any rate, it enlarges and enriches the vocabulary. Most of us have the same poor little wretched stock of words and use them over and over again until they are weariness to our friends and ourselves. Slang gives variety and adds a wild fresh flavor, supplies the acid and bite, puts bitters into the cocktail. And often it is so relieving. Take the boys in the Ninth ward, now the capital of philology. Do they want to say that a person is "crazy?" Look at their wealth of synonyms: "Batty," "bughouse," "daffy," "dotty," "nutty." Some time some or all of these gypsies will be burghers with gold chains around their necks.

Children need no encouragement to use slang. They and foreigners learning English here pick up slang first and most easily. Nor will exhortation to avoid slang do any good. It is a part of the children's education. They will use it behind your back if you succeed in restraining them from it when they are before your face. It is irresistible and incorrigible. We saw such a beautiful and good little boy last Sunday. He had flaxen curls, a shining morning face, a wide white collar such as Rollo, that companion of our youth, used to wear, clothes cleaner than

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

"Voilà! Bully boy! Tank the bon Dieu, Sandy. You not keel, eh? Ah, you are one grand chevalier!" exclaimed Baptiste, hauling Sandy in and thrusting the lines into his hands. And so they came back, the sleighbox still dragging behind, the pintos executing fantastic figures on their hind legs and Sandy holding them down. The little Frenchman struck a dramatic attitude and called out:

"Voilà! What's the matter wiz Sandy, heh?"

The roar that answered set the bronchos off again plunging and kicking, and only when Baptiste got them by the heads could they be induced to stand long enough to allow Sandy to be proclaimed winner of the race. Several of the lumbermen sprang into the sleighbox with Sandy and Baptiste, among them Keefe, followed by Nelson, and the first part of the great day was over. Slavin could not understand the new order of things. That a great event like the four horse race should not be followed by drinks all round was to him at once disgusting and incomprehensible, and, realizing his defeat for the moment, he fell into the crowd and disappeared. But he left behind him his runners. He had not yet thrown up the game.

Mr. Craig meantime came to me and, looking after Sandy in his sleigh, with his frantic crowd of yelling admirers, said in a gloomy voice:

"Poor Sandy! He is easily caught, and Keefe has the devil's cunning."

"He won't touch Slavin's whisky today," I answered confidently.

"There'll be twenty bottles waiting him in the stable," he replied bitterly, "and I can't go following him up. He won't stand that. No man would. God help us all!"

I could hardly recognize myself, for I found in my heart an earnest echo to that prayer as I watched him go toward the crowd again, his face set in strong determination. He looked like the captain of a forlorn hope, and I was proud to be following him.

CHAPTER III.

WATERLOO—OUR FIGHT, HIS VICTORY.

THE sports were over, and there remained still an hour to be filled in before dinner. It was an hour full of danger to Craig's hopes of victory, for the men were wild with excitement and ready for the most reckless means of "slinging their dust." I could not but admire the skill with which Mr. Craig caught their attention.

"Gentlemen," he called out, "we've forgotten the judge of the great race. Three cheers for Mr. Connor!"

Two of the shanty men picked me up and hoisted me on to their shoulders while the cheers were given.

"Announce the Punch and Judy," he entreated me in a low voice.

I did so in a little speech and was forthwith borne aloft through the street to the door, followed by the whole crowd, cheering like mad.

The excitement of the crowd caught me, and for an hour I squeaked and worked the wires of the immortal and unhappy family in a manner hitherto unapproached, by me at least. I was glad enough when Graeme came to tell me to send the men in to dinner. This Mr. Punch did in the most gracious manner, and again with cheers for Mr. Punch's master they trooped tumultuously into the tent.

We had only begun when Baptiste came in quietly, but hurriedly, and whispered to me:

"M'sieu Craig, he's gone to Slavin's and would lak you and M'sieu Graeme would follow queek. Sandy, he's take one leel drink up at de stable, and he's go mad lak one diable."

I sent him for Graeme, who was presiding at dinner, and set off for Slavin's at a run. There I found Mr. Craig and Nelson holding Sandy, more than half drunk, back from Slavin, who, stripped to the shirt, was coolly waiting with a taunting smile.

"Let me go, Mr. Craig," Sandy was saying. "I am a good Presbyterian. He is a papist thief, and he has my money, and I will have it out of the soul of him."

"Let him go, preacher," sneered Slavin. "I'll cool him off for you. But you'd better hold him if you want his mug left on to him."

"Let him go!" Keefe was shouting.

"Hands off!" Blaney was echoing.

I pushed my way in. "What's up?" I cried.

"Mr. Connor," said Sandy solemnly, "it is a gentleman you are, though your name is against you, and I am a good Presbyterian, and I can give you the commandments and reasons annexed to them, but you's a thief, a papist thief, and I am justified in getting my money out of his soul."

"But," I remonstrated, "you won't get it in this way."

"He has my money," reiterated Sandy.

"He is a blank liar, and he's afraid to take it up," said Slavin in a low, cool tone.

With a roar Sandy broke away and rushed at him, but without moving from his tracks Slavin met him with a straight left hander and laid him flat.

"Hooray!" yelled Blaney. "Ireland forever!" and, seizing the iron poker, swung it around his head, crying, "Back, or, by holy Moses, I'll kill the first man that interferes wid the game!"

"Give it to him!" Keefe said savagely.

Sandy rose slowly, gazing round stupidly.

"He don't know what hit him," laughed Keefe.

This roused the highlander, and, saying, "I'll settle you afterward, Mr. Keefe," he rushed in again at Slavin.

Again Slavin met him with his left, staggered him and before he fell took a step forward and delivered a terrific right hand blow on his jaw. Poor Sandy went down in a heap amid the yells of Blaney, Keefe and some others of the gang.

I was in despair when in came Baptiste and Graeme.

One look at Sandy, and Baptiste tore off his coat and cap, slammed them on the floor, danced on them and with a long drawn "Sap-r-r-r-rie!" rushed at Slavin.

But Graeme caught him by the back of the neck, saying, "Hold on, little man," and, turning to Slavin, pointed to Sandy, who was reviving under Nelson's care, and said, "What's this for?"

"Ask him," said Slavin insolently. "He knows."

"What is it, Nelson?"

Nelson explained that Sandy, after drinking some at the stable and a glass at the Black Rock hotel, had come down here with Keefe and the others, had lost his money and was accusing Slavin of robbing him.

"Did you furnish him with liquor?" said Graeme sternly.

"It is none of your business," replied Slavin, with an oath.

"I shall make it my business. It is not the first time my men have lost money in this saloon."

"You lie!" said Slavin, with deliberate emphasis.

"Slavin," said Graeme quietly, "it is a pity you said that, because, unless you apologize in one minute, I shall make you sorry."

"Apologize?" roared Slavin. "Apologize to you?" calling him a vile name.

Graeme grew white and said, even more slowly:

"Now you'll have to take it. No apology will do."

He slowly stripped off coat and vest. Mr. Craig interposed, begging Graeme to let the matter pass.

"Surely it is not worth it."

"Mr. Craig," said Graeme, with an easy smile, "you don't understand. No man can call me that name and walk around afterward feeling well."

Then, turning to Slavin, he said:

"Now, if you want a minute's rest I can wait."

Slavin, with a curse, bid him come.

"Blaney," said Graeme sharply, "you get back." Blaney promptly stepped back to Keefe's side. "Nelson, you and Baptiste can see that they stay there."

The old man nodded and looked at Craig, who simply said:

"Do the best you can."

It was a good fight. Slavin had plenty of pluck and for a time forced the fighting. Graeme guarding easily and tapping him aggravatingly about the nose and eyes, drawing blood, but not disabling him. Gradually there came a look of fear into Slavin's eyes, and the beads stood upon his face. He had met his master.

"Now, Slavin, you're beginning to be sorry, and I am going to show you what you are made of."

Graeme made one or two lightning passes, struck Slavin one, two, three terrific blows and laid him quite flat and senseless.

Keefe and Blaney both sprang forward, but there was a savage kind of growl.

"Hold, there!" It was old man Nelson, looking along a pistol barrel. "You know me, Keefe," he said. "You won't do any murder this time."

Keefe turned green and yellow and staggered back, while Slavin slowly rose to his feet.

"Will you take some more?" said Graeme. "You haven't got much; but, mind, I have stopped playing with you. Put up your gun, Nelson. No one will interfere now."

Slavin hesitated, then rushed, but Graeme stepped to meet him, and we saw Slavin's heels in the air as he fell back upon his neck and shoulders and lay still, with his toes quivering.

"Bon!" yelled Baptiste. "Bully boy! Dat's de bon stuff! Dat's larn him one good lesson!" But immediately he shrieked, "Gar-r-r-e a vous!"

He was too late, for there was a crash of breaking glass, and Graeme fell to the floor with a long, deep cut on the side of his head. Keefe had hurled a bottle with all too sure an aim and had fled. I thought he was dead, but we carried him out, and in a few minutes he groaned, opened his eyes and sank again into insensibility.

"Where can we take him?" I cried.

"To my shack," said Mr. Craig.

"Is there no place nearer?"

"Yes; Mrs. Mavor's. I shall run on to tell her."

She met us at the door. I had in mind to say some words of apology, but when I looked upon her face I forgot my words, forgot my business at her door, and stood simply looking.

"Come in. Bring him in. Please do not wait," she said, and her voice was sweet and soft and firm.

We laid him in a large room at the back of the shop over which Mrs. Mavor lived. Together we dressed the wound, her firm white fingers skillful as if with long training. Before the dressing was finished I sent Craig off, for the time had come for the magic lantern in the church, and I knew how critical the moment was in our fight.

"Go," I said. "He is coming to, and we do not need you."

In a few moments more Graeme revived and, gazing about, asked:

"What's all this about?" and then recollecting, "Ah, that brute Keefe!" Then, seeing my anxious face, he said carelessly: "Awful bore, isn't it? Sorry to trouble you, old fellow."

"You be hanged!" I said shortly, for his old sweet smile was playing about his lips and was almost too much for me. "Mrs. Mavor and I are in command, and you must keep perfectly still."

"Mrs. Mavor?" he said in surprise.

She came forward, with a slight flush on her face.

"I think you know me, Mr. Graeme."

"I have often seen you and wished to know you. I am sorry to bring you this trouble."

"You must not say so," she replied, "but let me do all for you that I can. And now the doctor says you are to lie still."

"The doctor? Oh, you mean Connor! He is hardly there yet. You don't know each other. Permit me to present Mr. Connor, Mrs. Mavor."

As she bowed slightly her eyes looked into mine with a serious gaze, not inquiring, yet searching my soul. As I looked into her eyes I forgot everything about me, and when I recalled myself it seemed as if I had been away in some far place. It was not their color or their brightness. I do not yet know their color, and I have often looked into them, and they were not bright, but they were clear, and one could look far down into them and in their depths see a glowing, steady light. As I went to get some drugs from the Black Rock doctor I found myself wondering about that far down light and about her voice—how it could get that sound from far away.

I found the doctor quite drunk, as indeed Mr. Craig had warned, but his drugs were good, and I got what I wanted and quickly returned.

While Graeme slept Mrs. Mavor made me tea. As the evening wore on I told her the events of the day, dwelling admiringly upon Craig's general ship.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

clean. He must have been going home from Sunday school. He looked as though he had rained down from heaven. An angelic boy. And he was saying to some invisible "rock"-throwing boy behind the fence, "If I git hold o' you, I'll clump you in the snoot."

Many words of our language have a slang origin. At first they are looked upon as vulgar; but, if they answer a purpose that cannot be answered by any other words, they come to stay; at first they are scouted, then tolerated, then adopted. They find their way into respectable writings, and eventually into the dictionary. Men of obscure—yea, of discreditable origin—often fight their way into recognition, elevated by merit. So with words. Of this class may be mentioned such words as fogysm, bulldoze, disgruntled, diked (in the sense of dressed), lowflung, hardshell, ironside, hussy, parson, quack, fake (in the sense of humbug), canard, munchausen, hoodlum, slum, scab (a dirty fellow), slugger, deadbeat, duds, dude, swell (a boaster), bully, etc.

These words have not been the most judiciously chosen, perhaps.

To change the subject materially, the Rev. Green R. Jackson, of the Tennessee Conference, is about to get into trouble. He has published a book entitled "Endless Probation." He is likely to be arraigned by the Tennessee Conference for heresy; and his arraignment is likely to result in his expulsion from the Church. I wonder by what law he will be tried. If I do not disremember, the twenty-five articles are silent on the subject. He cannot consistently be tried by the Standards, for they have been practically repudiated by three-fourths of the Methodist ministry. The Standards teach the doctrine of entire sanctification as a second and distinct blessing, and it costs a Methodist preacher about what he is worth to support the Standards on that point. Tried by the Standards three-fourths of our preachers ought to be deposed from the ministry. I suppose, however, that Jackson will be tried by the Bible. But the standards of the Bible anent eschatology admits of a great variety of interpretations.

It is my opinion that heresy should be met by argument, and not by discipline, unless that heresy touches the vitals and fundamentals of Christianity. If a man's doctrine does not hinder him from being a man of piety, a follower of Jesus, I should think he ought not to be put under the ban. Opinion is not a matter of force; it is a matter of freedom. It is important to truth that every honest thinker should have great liberty of thought and utterance. Truth cannot be lawed into people. Liberty and honesty go together. Gallileo's swearing that the earth did not rotate did not stop it. You can squeeze the ministry into orthodoxy, but you only fill the same office with slaves and hypocrites.

As to Jackson's particular case, I cannot express myself positively. I have not seen his book.

However, the growth in the churches of the day of the doctrine of "eternal hope," as advocated by Canon Farrar, is phenomenal. In orthodox circles it is alarming. But heresy in dogma is not what the Church has most to fear. Her principal occasion of fear is the general skepticism in regard to the Bible, which is beginning to prevail. The doctrines of Christianity, or what purports to be Christianity, may undergo revision, without tearing up the whole fabric; but infidelity is attacking the outer works and threatens to capture the entire citadel.

I am not greatly alarmed. What is true will eventually stand; and what is not true ought to fall.

Let us be honest, let us pray, and let us see to it that we are happy in God every day, and all shall be well with us and ours.

JUNIOR EPWORTH LEAGUES—IMPORTANT.

Some time ago Bro. Mastin asked "Aunt Lizzie" (Mrs. W. H. Vincent) to try and get the Junior Leagues of our Conference to take hold of the Junior Department of our Orphanage. I think Bro. Mastin's idea was to get the Leagues to organize an Orphanage Society to help fit up and then maintain the infant department of the Orphanage, or to help fit up the Orphanage for opening, and then help to furnish money for current expenses. "Aunt Lizzie" has written to all the Junior Epworth Leagues as far as known. Only two or three have answered this appeal.

Now there is a pressing demand upon us, as a Church, to provide furniture for the cottages soon to be opened.

Bro. Mastin has asked me to assist "Aunt Lizzie" in an earnest effort to get the Juniors each to give at least one memorial cot with all the furnishings, to be named after the League making the gift. Our Capron Junior League has pledged a cot, and hope to give two. Will you not respond to this call at once, so that all may be ready as soon as possible for those orphans now waiting to be taken under our care, and one of these, I am told, is a poor little Chinese child from Norfolk city?

It was hoped that these cots would be all ready by the 1st of September. Will you not have a meeting at once and take action in this matter? Give a cot to be named after your Junior League.

Here is what is needed:

Iron bedsteads .....	$5 50
Mattress, cotton .....	1 00
Double blankets .....	2 50
Towels .....	50
Pillows .....	1 00
4 sheets .....	1 50
2 pillow cases .....	25
2 spreads .....	2 00

$15 will get everything.

If your League is poor, and you think you can get gifts rather than money, you can furnish everything except the bedsteads and mattress. But let everything be new and of good quality.

"Aunt Lizzie" will be glad to furnish you with sizes of pillows, sheets, etc. Direct all communications to "Aunt Lizzie," Capron, Va.

Now, just a word to those who have charge of the Junior Leagues. Our object in trying to interest the Junior Leagues and the Sunday schools is not so much to get the cash. We have a higher and holier aim. These children are to take our places. They are to be the next generation. Some of us know what we have lost by lack of training. Some know what they have gained by good training. If we train our children to be indifferent to this and other great enterprises of the Church, they will make indifferent grown folks. If we interest them now, they will grow up interested, and God alone can tell what great things they will do in their day. Your life will be a success, if you will make the child, who is to take your place, better than you are. What, then, must be your responsibility, my brother, my sister, who have the charge of a Junior League, a Sunday school, or even a class in the school? Think of these things and act at once.

If there is anything in which "Aunt Lizzie" or I can aid you, command us. We want this good work to go on. Now, will you act? Write now and say what you will do. Give your little orphan a bed to sleep in.

CAMPBELL-HUTCHERSON.

Mr. Fletcher C. Campbell and Miss Mabel L. Hutcherson were to-day married in the Presbyterian church at Charlotte Courthouse, by Rev. Mr. Miller. The marriage was to have taken place September 10th, but was hastened on account of business calling Mr. Campbell to Mexico earlier than was at first intended.

Notwithstanding the fact that the marriage was not expected at this time, making all preparations necessarily hasty, the church was beautifully decorated. The bride was tastily dressed in a dark blue travelling suit. The maid of honor was Miss Louise Rice, while Mr. Henry E. Hutcherson, brother of the bride, acted as groomsman.

After the ceremony the bridal couple were tendered a lunch by Mrs. M. C. Hutcherson.

They left on the vestibule from Drake's Branch for Richmond. The bride will spend some time with Mrs. Campbell's parents in Albemarle county, while the groom will go at once to Mexico. Mrs. Campbell will join Mr. Campbell in Monterey in a few weeks.

The bride was one of Charlotte's most beautiful and charming young ladies. The young couple have the best wishes of their many friends.—Times.

ALICE ESTELLE ELMORE.

Miss Alice Estelle Elmore died at her home in Brunswick county on Wednesday morning, July 23, 1902. She was the second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. T. Elmore, of Judd, Va. The close of her twentieth year had not been reached when death claimed her. A spirit more tender, gentle, sweet, and purer than hers rarely appears in this world. Impurity, rudeness, roughness, selfishness you could not associate with her in any thought that her presence or her memory suggested. Like her Lord, she was in spirit, humble in mind, took very modest and moderate estimate of her abilities; and yet she was so self-reliant. She always marshaled and concentrated all her forces on the work she undertook. She always did her best and utmost in everything attempted. Her mind was quick, strong and ready. She was a full graduate of the Blackstone male Institute, but had made good use of her opportunities in going to the Institute, and engaged herself so fully in her work after leaving it, that she was enabled to graduate with high honors in the four course at the end of her third session. After graduating in June, 1901, she once sought work for the approaching school session. She was advised by her parents to rest for a while after her hard and good work at the institute. But her ardent, eager spirit could not brook what seemed like waiting while calls and opportunities in the direction of her chosen life were offering and appealing. She accepted a position as teacher of a private school in Sussex county, taught there during last session, and was attacked by malarial fever prostrated there about the time that her illness closed, but she seemed to recover from its worst effects very rapidly. A second attack of the fever came in July, and resulted in her death after a very short illness. She was read when the summons came. Tranquil and cheerful, she assured her circle of her readiness, and in bidding them good-bye while her mind was clear. She died in the morning of Trinity Protestant Episcopal church, but she gave herself to work wherever and whenever she was called upon. She never had to be called twice to do anything that she did. She responded willingly, immediately; and yet, with an absence of pride, self-seeking, or advertising. In her sweet, quiet, assuming way, she was always ready to help, even at sacrifice or to herself. At a memorial service by the writer at Lebanon church, the organist told how, when she was much work recently during a protracted meeting, Estelle relieved the organ. As Estelle played, a friend observed that she frequently pressed momentary indications of suffering that swept over her face as the service was over, it was for the sensitive ball of a wounded heart gave rise to an agony of pain. The finger pressed a key, yet the playing would have been had every finger been wounded. Her the ability and the opportunity to render service meant rendered without consideration of self. God needed her, that He called her to service in a higher, wider field. Can doubt? Is it not to suffer for spirits, such unselfish, faithful workers that He says: "Take authority!" over ministries and beyond this earth? J. R. S.

METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE IN CHINA.

Dr. F. Goucher, A. B. Leonard, and Homer Eaton, a committee of the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and Bishop A. W. Wilson, Paul Whitehead, and Collins Denny, a committee of the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the home of John F. Goucher, Dale, Baltimore county, Md., August 1902, to consider the advisability of a joint publishing house in China. Homer Eaton, Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was elected chairman. On motion of A. B. Leonard, Homer Eaton and Collins Denny were elected secretaries. After full consideration, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted: That it is desirable to unite in Shanghai, China, the publishing interests of the two Methodisms throughout the Chinese Empire.

This joint publishing house shall be known as the Methodist Publishing House in China.

The capital shall not exceed $100,000 United States gold, $50,000 of which shall be paid in full in equal installments of $25,000 each by the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, and the Book Agents of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, incorporated under the laws of the State of Tennessee, to be paid within thirty days after the adoption of this plan. A larger sum may be needed to secure the land and efficiency of the said Methodist Publishing House in China, the Board of Directors hereinafter provided shall have authority to call for as much as fifteen thousand dollars each of the two parties aforesaid, and said call be approved by the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. The ownership and interest therein shall be guaranteed in equal proportion to the two corporations aforesaid.

There shall be six directors, three of whom shall be elected by the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, respectively. Said Directors, except those chosen at the first election, to be in office four years, or until their successors are duly elected. Vacancies occurring in the Board of Directors shall be filled by the action by which the original appointments were made.

The Directors shall be paid only the expenses actually incurred in attending the meetings of the Board or in the discharge of special duties as hereby.

"7. The Board of Directors shall appoint two business managers of equal and co-ordinate authority, one from each of the two Churches represented. The one representing the Methodist Episcopal Church shall be elected to hold the office till June, 1905, and the one representing the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to hold office till June, 1907. Each manager elected thereafter shall be for the term of four years, except when the election is to fill a vacancy for an unexpired term. In case of any disagreement between the two business managers, otherwise irreconcilable, the matter in dispute shall be referred to the Board of Directors, whose decision shall be final.

"8. The salaries of the two business managers shall be equal, and shall be determined, together with other expenses, by the Board of Directors, and paid out of the proceeds of the business.

"9. The profits of the business shall be used as follows:

"(a) To strengthen and enlarge the plant and business as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Directors.

"(b) Should the business at any time justify the Board of Directors in declaring a dividend from the net earnings of the said Methodist Publishing House in China, said Board of Directors shall, after retaining such a sum as is needed for the safe conduct of the business, divide said dividend equally between the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

"In effecting this union of publishing interests in China it is understood that all other mission interests remain as at present organized and established.

"It is understood, second, that the said Methodist Publishing House in China shall occupy the property in Shanghai, China, recently built by the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for a publishing house, and shall pay all taxes, keep the building fully insured and in good repair, and shall in addition pay a rent to the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, equal to five per cent. on the actual cost of the building.

"Any proposed enlargement of the present building shall receive the concurrent approval of the Board of Directors, the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the insurance and rental for the enlarged building shall be on the basis herein determined.

"It is understood, third, that in the purchase of machinery and material that now owned by the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Foochow shall be given preference, provided such machinery and material be needed by the Methodist Publishing House in China, but no machinery or material now in Foochow shall be taken by the Methodist Publishing House in China unless it be needed for the work of the said Publishing House. The valuation of any machinery or material to be purchased from the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church now in Foochow shall be determined by one representative from each of the bodies interested, and one to be selected by these two, the valuation to be on the basis of prices ruling in the market.

"We recommend that the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, instruct their respective members of the Board of Directors to secure a charter for the Methodist Publishing House in China at the earliest date practicable, and further to limit the authority of said Board of Directors to loans and indebtedness the aggregate of which shall not exceed at any one time five thousand dollars, without the concurrent consent of the said Board of Managers and the said Book Committee."

The secretaries were instructed to take legal advice, and to furnish copies of these minutes to each member of this joint committee.

The Board of Directors shall meet as soon as practicable after their election, and organize by electing a chairman, secretary and treasurer. They shall also provide for annual meetings and for such special meetings as the exigencies of the business may require.

In view of the necessity for immediate action we recommend that the Board of Managers of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Book Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, appoint Homer Eaton and D. M. Smith to purchase what machinery is needed to open the business of the Methodist Publishing House in China.

The plan was adopted as a whole.

The following paper was unanimously adopted:

"In the foregoing arrangement it is understood to be the purpose of this joint committee to secure entire equality in the management and proceeds of the projected publishing house in Shanghai between the two parties represented and herein united, and to provide for the perpetuity of the harmonious relations hereby established between the two Churches in the mission field. It is our hope and prayer that, beyond all considerations of gain or advantage to either Church, the greater interests of the Church of God may be served and advanced. To these ends we pledge the men and means devoted to this work, as well as our own joint and individual efforts and influence."

The meeting adjourned with prayer by Bishop Wilson.

A. W. WILSON, Chairman.
HOMER EATON, COLLINS DENNY,
Secretaries.
JOHN F. GOUCHER,
PAUL WHITEHEAD.
A. B. LEONARD.

The Book Committee of the Methodist Publishing House, South, met August 20th, and by a unanimous vote ratified the agreement for the M. E. and the M. E. Church, South, to establish jointly a publishing house at Shanghai, China. The Southern directors were elected, and D. M. Smith, one of the Book Agents, was authorized to purchase machinery at once for the building already erected under the supervision of the M. E. Church, South. Under the agreement the original capitalization is to be $100,000, each Church to contribute one-half of that amount, and each to jointly manage the publishing house under a directory elected by the governing boards of each branch. The three directors named on the 20th by the Southern Church were Dr. Collins Denny, Jo. B. Morgan, and John B. Ransom. A like number is to be selected from the Northern Church, but in addition to this directory there are to be two managers at the institution and an advisory board of three members for each Church, to be appointed later from those who are now residents of China.

It is hoped that the publishing house will be in operation by January 1st next, as the building is only awaiting the installation of machinery to make it ready for operation.

Those present at the meeting of the Book Committee were Messrs. W. C. Dibrell, Jo. B. Morgan, J. B. Ransom, Rev. Collins Denny, local members, and the following non-residents: Rev. R. A. Childs, of Greenwood, S. C.; Dr. B. Coltrane, of Concord, N. C.; Major R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss.; Dr. James Campbell, Sidney Bass, Texas, and J. R. Hindman, Kentucky.

The Committee, in addition to ratifying the agreement in regard to the Shanghai Publishing House, approved the reports of Dr. R. J. Bingham and D. M. Smith, Book Agents.

FUNERAL OF REV. R. S. SHEFFEY.

The funeral services of the late Rev. Robert S. Sheffey, father of Bro. S. H. Sheffey, were held at Wesley chapel, Giles county, Monday morning at 11 o'clock in the presence of an immense concourse of friends from many counties. Rev. R. F. Jackson, pastor of the Staffordsville circuit, conducted the services, assisted by Rev. G. A. Maiden, D. D., presiding elder of the Radford district, and Rev. Eugene Blake, pastor of the Pearisburg circuit.

Rev. W. C. Crockett, pastor of Bland circuit, preached the funeral sermon, based on the 27th verse of the 19th chapter of Matthew, stating in the outset that he had known the beloved man who had gone to his glad reward since boyhood, and had loved him with a peculiar love. Said the minister in substance: "Robert Sawyers Sheffey was a man gentle and refined, both by nature and grace. He was wont to say, I was born naturally and the son of Henry Sheffey and Margaret White, July 4, 1820, in Wythe county, Va., near Ivanhoe, and was born of the Spirit January 9, 1839, in the third story of John C. Greenway's storehouse in the town of Abingdon. He was pre-eminently a man of faith. He literally left all and followed Christ. He prayed to God in faith, and God heard and answered his prayers. He did his duty. He was faithful. During his long illness, extending over a period of many weary months, not a day passed but that he had family prayers in the kind home which sheltered and shielded him, and when too weak to pray, he would ask or signal others to pray. ## LESSON XI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT 14

Text of the Lesson, Deut. xxx, 11-20.
Memory Verses, 15, 16—Golden Text,
1 John v, 3—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

11-14. The word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

He foresaw that they would wander from Him and be scattered among other nations, and He here instructs them what to do in such a case and what He would do when they returned to Him with the whole heart. In these opening verses of our lesson He tells them that the means of their restoration did not have to be sought in heaven nor at the ends of the earth, but was always nigh them. God chose them to be a righteous people, He Himself being their righteousness. If they wandered from Him into unrighteousness, there was no way for them but to return to Him from whom they wandered. An unappointed eye would not see the death and resurrection of Christ in these words, but that is what Paul by the Spirit saw here when he quoted these words in Rom. x, 6-8, when he was setting forth that Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. When we stand with God and see from His standpoint, we see His way of righteousness set forth everywhere from Gen. iii, 15, 21, on to Rev. v, 9, 10, and onward, and it is always His own work, and His own work alone, by which He brings people near to Him or restores them when they wander away from Him.

15, 16. I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in His ways and to keep His commandments.

This, the Spirit says through Moses, is life and good, fruitfulness and blessing, and He faithfully set it before them that they might choose the right way. Thus also did Joshua before he left them, urging them to fear the Lord and serve Him, and yet telling them to make their choice (Josh. xxiv, 14, 15), and encouraging them to a right decision by telling them how he had decided, whatever they might do. The righteousness which is required is to love the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and strength and our neighbor as ourself (Luke x, 27, 28), and until this is done either by us or for us by another we are unrighteous and cannot inherit the kingdom (1 Cor. vi, 9-11), but the grace of God takes such unrighteous ones and makes them righteous with His own righteousness.

17, 18. Ye shall surely perish.

He plainly forewarns them that if they turn away from God and worship other gods this is what will happen, not because their God desired it, but because if they refused His love and the only way of life there was nothing for them but perishing because of their own willfulness. See the strong words concerning God's unwillingness to have any one perish in Ezek. xviii, 23; xxxiii, 11; John iii, 16; 1 Pet. iii, 9. See the love of God for the wandering and the lost in Gen. iii, when He sought out Adam and Eve; in the beautiful stories of Luke xv, as well as in all His dealings with Israel, and remember that He says: "I am the Lord. I change not;" "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, today and forever" (Mal. iii, 6; Heb. xiii, 8).

19, 20. He is thy life and the length of thy days.

Not anything apart from Him, not anything we can do, but He Himself is our life, and there is no life apart from Him. The New Testament makes this so very plain in such passages as 1 John v, 11, 12; Col. iii, 4; John xiv, 6, and the Old Testament varies not, for hear the soul's cry in such words as these: "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." "Whom have I in heaven but Thee? And there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee." "The Lord is my portion, saith my soul" (Ps. xlii, 2; lxiii, 25; Lam. iii, 24). One cannot read the chapter from which our lesson is taken without noticing the frequent repetition of the name "the Lord thy God," not less than fifteen times. Then if the previous chapters have been read there will come to mind these words, "That thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, the Lord thy God," in xxviii, 58, and there will doubtless come to mind chapter v, 6, 7, as the reason why they should obey and serve Him. But they did not know Him, they did not believe His words, and so they wandered. Israel's need is our need, and that is to see our utter helplessness to keep God's holy law, then to see Him who said: "Thy law is within my heart. I delight to do Thy will, O my God," and, receiving Him, rest in His righteousness. This for our redemption; then for the daily life He who redeemed us must live in us, and as we let Him save us without any works of ours we must let Him work in us, both to will and to do of His good pleasure, working in us that which is well pleasing in His sight (Phil. ii, 13; Heb. xiii, 21). Only as we see His great love to us will we be constrained to yield our whole being to Him in glad surrender. As Dr. Murray says, we must become better acquainted with Jesus Christ in heaven for us. The knowledge of the greatness and glory of Jesus is the secret of a strong and holy life. This knowledge can be found only in the word of God, interpreted to us by the Holy Spirit, but the Holy Spirit cannot possibly lead us into the power and the blessing of God's word unless with our whole heart we hearken to His voice. Jesus Himself said, "The words that I speak unto you are spirit and are life" (John v, 63).

GERMAN DRINK PROBLEM.

Startling Figures Lead to Action by the Prussian Diet.

A resolution has been proposed and adopted without opposition in the Prussian diet requesting the ministry to prepare a bill to impose more rigid restrictions on the liquor traffic, says the Philadelphia Record. Count Douglas asserted that the Germans spend 3,000,000,000 marks ($750,000,000) a year in drink, twice the amount of the combined army and navy budgets. One-third of the inmates of insane asylums in Germany are victims of intemperance, 80 per cent of the idiots are the offspring of intemperate parents, and the number of persons convicted of crimes has increased from 299,249 in 1882 to 478,139 in 1899.

The liquor bill of the United States runs up to something like $1,000,000,000 a year. Adding 50 per cent to this to arrive at the cost of drinks as sold over the bar it will be seen that the nation spends twice as much as the German for this item, says a writer in the New York News.

We are nearly twice as numerous a people as are the Germans, however, and the price of drinks is much higher in this country; moreover, the average earnings of Americans are greater.

The figures quoted by Count Douglas, therefore, may well give German statesmen food for thought. It may be inferred from Count Douglas' remarks that in Germany, as lately in France, there has been observed a tendency toward an enlarged consumption of ardent spirits. The remedy adopted by the French government was a remission of internal taxes on wines and a heavy increase of taxes on distilled liquors, and the effect has been as expected—brandy has been superseded as a drink to a large extent by wine, which of all alcoholic beverages is the least noxious. A similar treatment of the problem by the German government is not possible. Wine grows only in a comparatively few districts of the German empire, and any encouragement of the consumption of beer to offset "schnapps" would probably not be deemed desirable.

Just how the Prussian government will meet the problem remains to be seen. The question is of worldwide interest, and every experiment in the regulation and restriction of drinking adds something to the sum of human knowledge and will be aidful to legislators who may have to deal with the same subject.

TEMPERANCE IN CANADA.

Strong Restrictions Placed on the Liquor Traffic.

Whatever may be the result of the vote it is quite clear that the cause of temperance in Ontario—and, indeed, in the whole Dominion—will not deviate from its onward march, declares a writer in the Review of Reviews. Side by side with the long continued prohibition agitation have been successful efforts in bringing about a greater stringency in the license laws. Strong restrictions have been made in the sale of liquor as it applies to certain persons, hours and legal holidays.

The reduction of licenses during the past quarter of a century has also been most marked. In Ontario during this period tavern licenses have been reduced from 4,793 to 2,621, shop licenses from 1,307 to 308, wholesale licenses from 52 to 21 and vessel licenses from 33 to none. This decrease represents one license to 700 people as against one license to 278 people twenty-five years ago. Of the 756 organized municipalities 141 have no tavern license, 435 have not more than two, while 625 are without a shop license.

These facts will encourage prohibitionists to greater activity and confirm many of those in their opinions who believe that the present license laws best serve the cause of temperance. It may therefore be concluded that if prohibition be defeated temperance will still hold on its way or if successful there will be for the law a general observance.

Valuable Educational Scheme.

A wideawake superintendent of scientific temperance instruction at Grand Junction, Colo., has written to every teacher in her county offering prizes of $8 and $10 for the best essay on "The Effect of Alcohol on the Heart."

How They Signed the Pledge.

"Now that we've signed the pledge," said Dimple to Dot,
"Not to use alcohol and tobacco, why not Ask our dollies that live in Dollikinville To sign the pledge too? I am sure that they will."

"They have not touched tobacco nor tasted strong drink,
It is true," answered Dot; "yet I certainly think That in signing the pledge is the only safe way.
For one never can tell what may happen some day."

So they sat in a row, just as straight could be—
Isabella, Samantha and pretty Marie,
Black Erastus, young Cesar August the prig,
And old Uncle Jediah, with glasses a wig.

Then the maidens explained to each d with much care
That 'twas harmful to drink or to snore or to swear,
And they told how important it was th folks should Take the pledge and then keep it if would be good.

When the pledges were brought, eve doll wrote its name,
While the girls held their hands (whic of course, was the same);
For the dollies could not without h write a word,
But most willingly signed; no object was heard.

Then said Dimple, "I hope that this promise you make
You will ne'er be so foolish, so false, as break."
And they've all kept their word and i sure always will,
And a temperance town is this Dollikinville.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teaching of All Denominations.

Virtue is courage.—Rev. Dr. Carson, Presbyterian, Brooklyn.

Cornerstone of the Republic.

The schoolhouse is the cornerstone of the republic.—Rev. Dr. Felix Adler, Ethical Culture, New York.

A Mighty Factor.

The preached word is a mighty factor toward filling the church with believers.—Rev. I. M. Zimmerman, Lutheran, Baltimore.

A General Principle.

Love is not workable as a general principle. It cannot be extended to things alike.—Rev. A. S. Garver, Unitarian, Worcester, Mass.

The Religious Life.

The Lord calls it "life" when a man is touched into responsiveness to love and lives unselfishly.—Rev. J. Smyth, Swedenborgian, New York.

Stands For Humanity.

As our holy religion becomes more widely humanitarian it will stand humanity against the perils of intemperance.—Rev. Dr. Pickard, Baptist, Cleveland, O.

Right Use of Riches.

Men only develop in daily intercourse with their fellow men. A man should acquire riches that he may be useful to his neighbors.—Rev. Dr. Hyde, Episcopalian, New York.

Christian Stewardship.

The idea of stewardship is the primary conception of Christian duty. The servant of Christ holds all that has in trust for the race. He is no king.—Rev. John L. Jackson, Baptist, Chicago.

"The Cathedral of Character."

Every human soul is a builder, work on what may be a grander cathedral than gigantic St. Peter's, inspired Milan or glorious St. Mark's the city in the sea.—Rev. Polemus Swift, Methodist, Chicago.

No Place For the Slothful.

This busy world of ours has no place for the slothful. It has no patience with incompetence. If we claim to be representatives of religion, we must take our vocation seriously.—Rev. Tomlinson, Universalist, Worcester, Mass.

Competent Authority.

Outside of the church there is no competent authority of the method to determine what revelation teaches what the Bible contains. There remains only the voice of the inspired and divinely founded church.—Rev. F. Smith, Catholic, San Francisco.

Success In Life.

A high minded, honest, truthful young man may sometimes think success is slow in coming, but he will win in the end. The saying that "one can not be honest and live" is as old as the devil, and, like the devil, it is false.—Rev. Arthur Thomas Fowler, Baptist, Chicago.

Things That Are Staple.

The things of righteousness, the things that are pure, the things that are just, are the things that are staple. The pure in heart shall see God, and the pure in heart see God every day. It is one of the hardest things to do to keep our minds pure. To do so we must think about pure things.—Rev. Dr. Alsop, Episcopalian, Brooklyn.

Sowing Evil Seeds.

It would be a happy solution to the sinner if when he sowed one evil seed he should get back only one evil result. But that is not the way the harvests of the flesh grow. One evil seed will become the parent of many evil seeds, the grandparent of a host of evil seeds and the great-grandparent of a lifetime of evil harvests. A sower unto the flesh always reaps more corruption than he expected to gather.—Rev. Dr. Frank De Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago.

The Mission of Afflictions.

Afflictions act upon the nature of the afflicted, preparing him for the glory and enlarging his capacity. Whether you can be made to understand this or not the fact remains, and if you can only convince yourself that it is a fact, that there is not a pain, grief, loss or woe that is not necessary, not one that is not leading to heavenly joys, not one that has not its outcome beyond, and not one that can be dispensed with, you will be satisfied that wisdom and goodness alike are concerned in the welfare of your being.—Rev. Dr. G. C. Lorimer, Baptist, New York.

Shame a Downward Look.

Consider the ground of pride and the causes that underlie and produce shame. Men are never ashamed upward. Shame is a downward look. There are three attitudes possible to ward our fellows. We are proud of relationship to those who are confessedly our superiors, standing above us. We are satisfied and feel approval toward those who stand on our level. We are ashamed of those who confessedly have degraded themselves into moral depths beneath us. Gone forever be the day when men can feel the blush of shame at the thought of the Founder of Christianity.—Rev. Dr. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.

Deepening Spiritual Life.

Working out spiritual problems is one thing; the deepening of spiritual life is another thing. It is very little we know in regard to anything save such things as our hands can handle, but there is not a soul here so utterly involved in spiritual midnight as not to detect the glimmer of a world that such things as hands, rocks and dollars form no part of. The world may have been a great while in coming to it. Physical eyes are very slow in becoming organs of vision. Spiritual eyes may be a great deal slower in becoming organs of spiritual vision; but to you and me there is a glimmer in the air that does not come from the sun.—Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York.

The Ohio State Anti-Saloon League convention (they call it a Congress over there) is to be held in Columbus December. Speakers of national reputation are being engaged, and a strong programme prepared.

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

were these, 'The prettiest and brightest things I have ever seen. How beautiful and bright my star. I am in a good way. The sweet angels. Praise the Lord, praise the Lord; tell Eddie to praise the Lord,' and with these thoughts and visions he quickly sank to rest and slept as a little child to wake in heaven."

Dr. Maiden believed he had never met any one of like faith. No one had so projected his life on the hearts and consciences of the masses of Southwest Virginia as had he, and he believed that Bro. Sheffey had never entered a home or touched a life but that blessings had come therefrom. He believed in God's course, and gave not only all his time without stipulated compensation, but gave more money than many worth thousands, and cited one instance where in services on a circuit he contributed at every church to missions, and subscribed more than the richest man on the blue grass circuit, and the evening before the preacher in charge started for Conference, months afterwards, Bro. Sheffey rode up and made settlement of all he had subscribed. He never forgot his obligations, and discharged them all.

Rev. Mr. Blake testified to the love of the deceased for the poor, and gave illustration of a visit with him to a mountain cabin, in dead of winter, where dwelt a very poor and helpless but good man. During the conversation, Bro. Sheffey excused himself, came back in a few moments, and placed something in the old man's pocket. The preacher afterwards charged him with having taken off his own woven wool socks and given them to the poor man. Said he, "Brother, the Lord told me to do it. He needed them more than I do, and He will take care of me." And He did, for though not possessed of the means of this world, he never lacked for any good thing.

His enmity to the liquor traffic was referred to by Rev. Mr. Blake and Dr. Maiden, and remarkable cases of the annihilation of distilleries in direct answer to his prayers were cited. Mention was made of his having at times spent hours in prayer for the sick, of whose recovery no hope was entertained by the doctors, with the result that the sick lived.

The exercises were concluded by Rev. Mr. Jackson at the grave, where all that was mortal of this true "soldier of the cross and follower of the Lamb" were laid to rest by the side of his beloved wife, and while sweet songs, the songs he loved so well, were floating out on the summer's breeze, loving hands placed beautiful flowers upon the new-made grave and bathed them with their tears.—Lynchburg News.

Potts, of Belle Haven, who was quite sick for a few weeks, is out again.—Times.

Rev. T. Kuginiya, a native Japanese minister, who recently preached at Court Street Methodist church here, visiting and preaching in the various cities of Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Kuginiya is a member of the Japanese Missionary Conference, S.

the pastor of a Methodist church in Hiroshima, Japan. He is now in this country studying American methods in church work, and while travelling around in the interests of the Japanese mission is at the same time taking a special course at Trinity College in North Carolina.—Lynchburg News.

Much interest is felt in regard to the dedication of the beautiful church now nearing completion for the members of Central M. E. church, which is an ornament to our city. The time selected is the third Sunday in this month. Rev. J. C. Granbery will preach the dedication sermon. Bishop Granbery is well known to the Methodists of the city, and the simple announcement that he will be present is sufficient to show that there will be a large number of people present. Some special music will be prepared for the occasion, which will be of a high order.—Herald.

The union revival meetings that have been going on for the past two months in the tent at the corner of Twentieth and Grace streets will begin on the month of September in Trinity church on next Sunday night. It will be remembered that on last Sunday night at the close of the Alliance Convention it was announced that the work would stop for this week to allow the people a week of rest. Rev. Geo. J. Spooner will preach at Trinity on Sunday night. Rev. James E. Cook and Rev. George H. Wiley will be present and help in the meeting. On Monday night the services will be transferred to the tent, and will be continued there for the week, beginning at 7:30 o'clock. Rev. James E. Cook will preach Monday night.—Times.

Rev. Jack Rosser has been holding a successful revival at Pamunkey church the past week. The church has been crowded every night. The sermons have been much enjoyed by all, and much good seems to have been accomplished, and several conversions have resulted. The singing has been very good, and much complimented. Last Sunday was all-day meeting with dinner on the ground. There being about one thousand persons in attendance, it was impossible for half to sit in the church.

In the morning the sermon was considered powerful. Had recess for dinner from 1 o'clock to 2 o'clock. Every one seemed to have had a plenty to eat, and enjoyed their dinner. In the afternoon the preaching was considered more powerful than in the forenoon, and much good done. The meeting will close to-night.—Times.

DR. RAY RESTORED.

Rev. Dr. George H. Ray, of Franktown, on the Eastern Shore, one of the most widely known preachers in the Virginia Conference, and one of the most prominent Masons in the State, has been restored in health to his congregation after an absence of several weeks on account of sickness. He has not been sick for forty-seven years before, and his trouble this time was articular and muscular rheumatism, which has been of several months' duration.

He has now, however, returned to work after several weeks' stay at Craig Healing Springs, entirely restored, to the great delight of his flock.—Times.

REV. MR. WHITLEY RETURNS.

Rev. J. T. Whitley and wife, who have been visiting at Asheville, N. C., Monteagle, Tenn., and Chattanooga, returned home on yesterday. Mr. Whitley will conduct the regular mid-week services at Centenary church this evening, beginning at 8 o'clock, and will fill his pulpit at the regular hours on next Sunday.—Lynchburg News.

ILL WITH FEVER.

The son of the Rev. Dr. G. C. Butts, the Methodist pastor at Gloucester, and his niece, are ill with a malignant form of typhoid fever. The generosity of Mr. Butts' congregation has been marked. They will meet all the expense and have provided a trained nurse for their pastor's home. The young people are now said to be convalescing.—Leader.

TUMOR IN WINDPIPE.

Danville, Va., August 29.—Rev. B. M. Beckham, pastor of Cabell Street M. E. church, who has been incapacitated from preaching for the past eight weeks on account of an affection of the throat, now has hopes of ultimate recovery. He has been under the treatment of Dr. Dunn, of Richmond, for some time. He went to Richmond with very little hope, but it is now almost certain that he will be able to resume his duties within six weeks. Dr. Dunn discovered that the trouble was due to a tumor located on the windpipe. A successful operation was performed, which relieved Mr. Beckham of his unpleasant visitor.—Times.

A METHODIST WARNING.

London, August 31.—In the religious world an important event has been the publication of the Wesleyan Methodist Pastoral.

The Pastoral says that the closeness of intercourse, the immense powers now possessed for the production and distribution of wealth and the almost world-wide co-operation and competition for these ends bid fair to revolutionize the conditions of industrial and commercial life. This state of things, it is added, points to the danger of a period of practical materialism, when the interests of brotherliness and human progress may be sacrificed to considerations both of greed and fear; when the weaker classes and races may be exploited for the benefit of the stronger; when multitudes may live under such conditions of hurry and mental absorption as to endanger not only religion, but all the higher qualities of spiritual character.

METHODIST TRUST FUND.

Nashville, Tenn., August 27.—The Board of Trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, met here today for the purpose of choosing an agent to raise a trust fund of $5,000,000 for the help and support of superannuated preachers, and the widows and orphans of deceased preachers of the denomination.

The last General Conference authorized the creation of the fund, and it was provided that none of the interest should be used until the principal reached $100,000, when 75 per cent. becomes payable to the beneficiaries, and the remaining 25 per cent. is to be added to the principal, until the fund reaches $5,000,000. All of the interest then becomes payable to the beneficiaries. All loans will be made upon improved realty, and the committee is not allowed to lend more than 40 per cent. of the value of the property. The funds will be loaned from and the interest paid in Nashville.

Rev. A. Watkins, of Brook Haven, Miss., was elected agent to collect the fund.—Dispatch.

COMMITTEE TO DECIDE ON PHOTOGRAPH TO-NIGHT.

A photograph of the new $3,500 organ for Union Station Methodist church, of which the Rev. John Hannon is pastor, has been received by R. S. M. Valentine, chairman of the organ committee, and a meeting of the committee and the architect and Contractor Jas. Fox will be held to-night at 8:30 o'clock sharp in the lecture room of the church. As Mr. Valentine has just received the photograph and is anxious to have the committee decide at once whether they will accept the organ, he requests that the members of the committee assemble without further notice.

The organ will be built by M. P. Moller, of Hagerstown, Md., the same firm having built the new Grove Avenue Baptist church organ, and is a gift from the Sunday school of Union Station church. The organ will probably be placed by the first Sunday in November, and will be run by an electric motor. The organ gallery will be lowered on a level with the pulpit, and will be a great addition to the church.

The following compose the committee: R. S. M. Valentine, chairman; Charles E. Brauer, S. Whybrew, Gilbert Parker, Douglas Richardson, R. W. Smithers and several others.—News.

GREAT CONGREGATION AT EPWORTH CHURCH.

Epworth Methodist church has been the scene of many large gatherings of people, but none, perhaps, larger than the congregation which gathered there last night—the special attraction being the singing of Mr. McKenzie Gordon, the magnificent tenor of Bartholomew's church, New York, and Mr. Wm. Richards, Norfolk's splendid basso. Every available chair was brought into service in addition to the large seating capacity of the pews, and then many were left standing in the congregation—and there was also a crowd on the outside, who couldn't get in.

In the opening anthem, Mr. Richards sang a solo, and immediately after the first prayer Mr. Gordon sang "Hymn of Praise" from Mendelssohn. Mr. Gordon and Mr. Richards were to have sung together after the sermon, but the former having to leave the city before the close of the service, the duet, "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah," was sung at the offertory. The congregation greatly enjoyed both the solos and duets, which, in fact, are considered among the finest rendered in Norfolk in recent years. After the duet, a considerable number of those who were standing left the church, but many remained standing throughout the delivery of the sermon, which was a discourse of marked excellence—by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Bennett. His theme was "Making a Living or Making a Life," in which he illustrated how much it is possible for one to get out of life if its opportunities are appreciated—how much beauty and good there is all around to be appropriated, but which is too often not availed of for want of appreciation. Mr. Bennett is apt in illustration and an able reasoner.—Ledger.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF LYNCHBURG DISTRICT.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Lynchburg district, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, which began at Cabell Street Methodist church on Wednesday afternoon, came to a close yesterday afternoon. There was yesterday an all day session, beginning at half-past 9 o'clock in the morning. In the absence of the secretary, Mrs. F. W. Martin, the programme was made out and the meeting was presided over by Mrs. John W. Childs.

Yesterday morning, after the proceedings had been opened, Mrs. E. S. Brown then led in the devotional exercises, during which the hymns, "My Faith Looks Up to Thee," and "The Morning Light is Breaking," were sung. Mrs. T. B. Moorman was elected secretary. The roll of Auxiliaries in the district were called; of seventeen there were delegates present from thirteen and one by letter, only three not being represented. Two new Auxiliaries, which have not been enrolled, are those of Salem in Bedford county, and Trinity, which, however, was represented by the pastor, Rev. J. B. Askew. The reports of the delegates showed the Auxiliaries to be in good condition.

Two interesting papers were read, one on "The Difficulties of the Country Auxiliary," by Mrs. T. B. Moorman, and the other, on "Why Be a Member of the Woman's Missionary Society?" by Miss Sue Terry.

After this the society adjourned to the Sunday school room, where a bountiful dinner was served.

This delicious repast was served by the ladies of the Cabell Street church Auxiliary, whose hospitality and kindness was most heartily appreciated. The character of the viands and the manner in which they were served made it a feast long to be remembered, and everybody voted the Auxiliary enthusiastic thanks for its pleasant attention.

One of the events of the afternoon session was a deeply interesting and instructive address delivered by Rev. B. D. Lucas, a missionary to China, who has returned to this country. Miss Ella Coffey, the well-known missionary to China from the Virginia Conference, was also present at the afternoon session, but having been forbidden by her physician to talk, she was unable to tell of her work in the Orient.

WASHINGTON. — In this discourse Dr. Talmage arraigns the spirit of wild speculation and gives some account of the financial ruin of other days; Proverbs xxiii, 5, "Riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven."

Money is a gold breasted bird with silver beak. It alights on the office desk or in the counting room or on the parlor center table. Men and women stand and admire it. They do not notice that it has wings larger than a raven's, larger than a flamingo's, larger than an eagle's. One wave of the hand of misfortune, and it spreads its beautiful plumage and is gone, "as an eagle toward heaven," my textbook says, though sometimes I think it goes in the other direction.

What a verification we have had of the flying capacity of riches in Wall street! And Wall street is one of the longest streets in all the world. It does not begin at the foot of Trinity church, New York, and end at the East river, as many suppose. It reaches through all our American cities and across the seas. Encouraged by the revival of trade and by the fact that Wall street disasters of other years were so far back as to be forgotten, speculators run up the stocks from point to point until innocent people on the outside suppose that the stocks would always continue to ascend. They gather in from all parts of the country. Large sums of money are taken into Wall street and small sums of money. The crash comes, thank God, in time to warn off a great many who were on their way thither, for the sadness of the thing is that a great many of the young men of our cities who save a little money for the purpose of starting themselves in business and who have $500 or $1,000 or $2,000 or $10,000 go into Wall street and lose all. And if there ever was a time for the pulpit to speak out in regard to certain kinds of nefarious enterprises now is the time.

Stocks rose and fell, and now they begin to rise again, and they will fall again until thousands of young men will be ruined unless the printing press and the pulpit give emphatic utterance. My counsel is to countrymen, so far as they may hear of this discourse, if they have surplus, to invest it in first mortgages and in moneyed institutions which, though paying comparatively small interest, are sound and safe beyond dispute, and to stand clear of the Wall street vortex, where so many have been swamped and swallowed. What a compliment it is to the healthy condition of our country that these recent disasters have in no wise depressed trade! I thank God that Wall street's capacity to blast this country has gone forever.

Wall Street.

Across the island of New York in 1685 a wall made of stone and earth and cannon mounted was built to keep off the savages. Along by that wall a street was laid out, and as the street followed the line of the wall it was appropriately called Wall street. It is narrow, it is unarchitectural, and yet its history is unique. Excepting Lombard street, London, it is the mightiest street on this planet. There the government of the United States was born. There Washington held his levees. There Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Caldwell and Mrs. Knox and other brilliant women of the Revolution displayed their charms. There Witherspoon and Jonathan Edwards and George Whitefield sometimes preached. There Dr. Mason chided Alexander Hamilton for writing the constitution of the United States without any God in it. There negroes were sold in the slave mart. There criminals were harnessed to wheelbarrows and, like beasts of burden, compelled to draw or were lashed through the street behind carts to which they were fastened. There fortunes have come to coronation or burial since the day when reckless speculators in powdered hair and silver shoe buckles dodged Dugan, the governor general of his majesty, clear down to yesterday at 3 o'clock. The history of Wall street is to a certain extent the financial, commercial, agricultural, mining, literary, artistic, moral and religious history of this country. There are the best men in this country, and there are the worst. Everything from unswerving integrity to dtpop'soundrelism—everything from heaven born charity to bloodless Shylockism. I want to put the plow in at the curbstone of Trinity and drive it clear through to Wall street ferry, and so it shall go if the horses are strong enough to draw the plow.

First of all, Wall street stands as a type in this country for tried integrity and the most outrageous villainy. Farmers who have only a few hundred dollars' worth of produce to put on the market have but little to test their character. Let put a man into the seven times heated furnace of Wall street excitement and he either comes out a Shadrach, with hair unslugged, or he is burned into a black moral cinder. No half way work about it. If I wanted to find integrity bombproof, I would go among the bankers and merchants of Wall street, yet because there have been such villainies enacted there at different times some men have supposed that it is a great financial debauchery, and they hardly dare go near the street or walk up and down it unless they have buttoned up their last pocket and had their lives insured or religiously crossed themselves. Yet if you start at either end of the street and read the business signs you will find the names of more men of integrity and Christian benevolence than you can find in the same space in any street of any of our cities. When the Christian commission and the sanitary commission wanted money to send medicine and bandages to the wounded, when breadstuffs were wanted for famishing Ireland, when colleges were to be endowed and churches were to be supported and missionary societies were to be equipped for their work of sending the gospel all around the world, the first street to respond has been Wall street, and the largest responses in all the land have come from Wall street.

Integrity and Villainy.

But, while that street is a type of tried integrity on one hand, it is also a type of unbounded swindle on the other. There are the spiders that wait for innocent flies; there are the crocodiles that crawl up through the slime to cranch the calf; there are the ancondas, with lifted loop, ready to crush the unwary; there are financial wreckers who stand on the beach praying for a Caribbean whirlwind to sweep over our commercial interests. Let me say it is no place for a man to go into business unless his moral principle is thoroughly settled. That is no place for a man to go into business who does not know when he is overpaid $5 he mistake whether he had better take it back or not; that is no place for a man to go who has large funds in trust and who is all the time tempted to speculate with them; that is no place for a man to go who does not quite know whether the laws of the state forbid usury or patronize it. Oh, how many men have risked themselves in the vortex and gone down for the simple reason their integrity had not been thoroughly established! Remember poor Ketchum how soon the flying hoofs of his iron grays clattered with him to his destruction; remember poor Gay, at 30 years of age astonishing the world with his fortunes and his forgeries; remember that famous man whose steamboats and whose opera houses could not atone for his adulterous rides through Central park in the face of decent New York and whose behavior on Wall street by its example has blasted tens of thousands of young men of this generation.

I hold up the polluted memory to warn young men whose moral principles are not thoroughly settled to keep out of Wall street. It is no place for a man who shivers under the blast of temptation. Let me say also to those who are doing legitimate business on that or similar streets of which that is a type to stand firm in Christian principle. You are in a great commercial battlefield. Be courageous. There is such a thing as a hero of the bank and a hero of the Stock Exchange. You be that hero. I have not so much admiration for the French empress who stood in her balcony in Paris and addressed an excited mob and quelled it as I have admiration for that venerable banker on Wall street who in 1864 stood on the steps of his moneyed institution and quieted the fears of depositors and bade peace to the angry wave of commercial excitement. God did not allow the lions to hurt Daniel, and he will not allow the "bears" to hurt you. Remember, my friend, that all these scenes of business will soon have passed away, and by the law of God's eternal right all the affairs of your business life will be adjudicated. Honesty pays best for both worlds.

Speculation and Gambling.

Again, I have to remark that Wall street is a type throughout the country of legitimate speculation on the one hand and of ruinous gambling on the other. Almost every merchant is to some extent a speculator. He depends not only upon the difference between the wholesale price at which he gets the goods and the retail at which he disposes of them, but also upon the fluctuation of the markets. If the markets greatly rise, he greatly gains. If the markets greatly sink, he greatly loses. It is as honest to deal in stocks as to deal in iron or coal or hardware or dry goods. He who condemns all stock dealings as though they were iniquitous simply shows his own ignorance. Stop all legitimate speculation in this country, and you stop all banks, you stop all factories, you stop all storehouses, you stop all the great financial prosperities of this country. A stock dealer is only a commission merchant under another name. He gets his commission on one style of goods. You, the grocer, get your commission on another style of goods. The dollar that he makes is just as bright and fair and honest a dollar as the dollar earned by the day laborer.

But here we must draw the line between legitimate speculation and ruinous gambling. You, a stock operator without any property behind you, financially irresponsible, sell $100 of nothing and get paid for it. You sell 100 shares at $10,000 at 30 days. If at the end of 30 days you can get the same for $2,000, you have made a thousand. If at the end of 30 days you have to pay $11,000, then you have lost a thousand. Now, that is trafficking in fiction. That is betting chances. That involves the spirit gambling as much as anything that ever goes on in the lowest gambling hell.

At certain times almost every prosperous merchant wakes up, and says: "Now, I have been successful in my line of trade, and I have a tolerable income. I think I shall go down Wall street and treble it in a few weeks. There's my neighbor. He is in the same line of business. He has his $300,000 or $400,000 from the simple fact he went into Wall street. I think I shall go too." Here they come retired merchants, who want to get little excitement in their lethargic veins. Here they come, the trustees of great property, to fool everything away. Here they come, men celebrated for prudence, to trifle with the thousands of widows and orphans. Do you wonder that sometimes they become insane? It is insanity. Do you know there are hundreds of young men who are perishing under the passion for stock gambling? Do you know that in all Christian lands this is one of the greatest curses?

It is not peculiar to mercurial Americans. Oh, no! Almost every nation has indulged in it. The Hollanders, the most phlegmatic people in the world, had their gambling seizure 1683. It was called the tulip mania. It was a speculation in tulips. Properties worth half a million dollars turned into tulips. All the Holland nation, their buying or selling tulips. One tulip root sold for $200, another for $1,000. Excitement rolling on and rolling on until history tells us that one Amsterdam tulip which was supposed to be the only one of the kind in all the world actually brought in the market $1,816,000! That is a matter of history. Of course the crash came, and all Holland went down under it.

Great Financial Disasters.

But France must have its gambling expedition, and that was in 1716. John Law's Mississippi scheme, it was called. The French had heard that the American continent was built out of solid gold, and the project was to take it across the ocean and drop it in France. Excitement beyond anything that had yet been seen in the world. Three hundred thousand applications for shares. Excitement so great that sometimes the mounted military had to disperse the crowds that had come to buy the stock. Five hundred temporary tents built to accommodate the people until they could have opportunity of interviewing John Law. A lady of great fashion had her coachman upset her near the place where John Law was passing in order that she might have an interview with the benevolent and sympathetic gentleman. Stocks went up to 2,050 per cent, and one day suspicion got into the market and down it all went—John Law's Mississippi scheme—burying its project and some of the greatest financiers of all France, and was almost as bad as the French revolution.

Sedate England took its chance. 1720. That was the south sea bubble. They proposed to transfer all the gold of Peru and Mexico and the islands the sea to England. Five million worth of shares were put on the market at £300 a share. The books open in a few days it is all taken and twice the amount subscribed.

Excitement following excitement until all kinds of gambling projects came forth under the wing of this south sea enterprise. There was a large com-

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WILLIAM E. ROSS.

A letter from Mr. D. M. Cloninger, Stanley, N. C., dated July 5, 1900, asking for catalogue of our school, contains this statement:

by Bishop Penick, of the Episcopal Church, on the subject of missions, was read by Mrs. A. W. Scott.

An address that proved to be most delightful, and which was accorded the closest attention by all present, was made by Mrs. Alice H. Strother, corresponding secretary of the society in the Baltimore Conference. Lynchburg News.

NORFOLK MINISTERS.

Rev. W. R. Proctor, president of the Methodist preachers' conference, having returned from his vacation at Buffalo Lithia Springs, presided at the regular weekly session held yesterday morning. The deliberations were opened with prayer by Rev. E. T. Dadmun, of Centenary church.

The meeting was somewhat devoid of the interest that usually marks its sessions, there being no subject of general interest before it.

Rev. Charles E. Watts, preacher in charge of the Southampton circuit, who is now on his vacation, was a visitor. He reported the work on his circuit moving on very satisfactorily. He expects to begin a protracted meeting at one of his churches some time this month.

Rev. R. H. Bennett announced that the noted Methodist evangelist, Rev. George R. Stewart, would assist him in a revival meeting at Epworth church two weeks in the month of October, and extended a cordial invitation to his ministerial brethren to attend these meetings and render all the help possible.

Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett stated that the National Convention of the Christian Church in the United States would convene in this city on the 8th of October, and will continue in session six days, and that the daily sessions would be held at the Christian Memorial Temple. He said that it will be the first time that this body has ever met in the South, and that there would be about five hundred delegates and visitors in attendance. He requested the assistance of his Methodist brethren in obtaining homes for some of the delegates. The members of the body assured Dr. Barrett that they would render him all the assistance possible in the premises.

The call of the churches was taken up, and reports heard from the following:

Rev. R. H. Bennett had a large congregation to hear him Sunday morning and at night Mr. McKenzie Gordon, the celebrated tenor soloist of New York, and the preacher had an overflow audience, it being the largest that has assembled there since an annual Conference occasion. Mr. Bennett complimented Mr. Gordon's singing very highly.

Rev. J. B. Merritt preached at the Second Presbyterian church Sunday morning and conducted his usual service at the Seaman's Bethel in the afternoon.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun preached to a good congregation at Centenary church Sunday morning, and to a fair sized one in the afternoon. He had a most excellent Sunday school. At night he preached at Memorial church, Berkley, for Rev. W. Asbury Christian.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt reported a good day at Port Norfolk Sunday, with the usual large attendance at the Sunday school and a most profitable service at 11 A. M. and at 8 P. M. The Home Mission Society workers held a most interesting session in the afternoon.

Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins preached at McKendree church Sunday morning, and at Trinity at night.

Rev. C. W. Cain worshipped at Central Sunday morning and preached at Owens' Memorial church at night.

Rev. George H. McFaden held regular services at Wright Memorial and had large congregations to hear him. He had a fine Sunday school.

Rev. A. A. Jones preached at Trinity church Sunday morning. The pastor, Rev. George Wesley Jones, preached at Denby's church, Norfolk county, Sunday night for the pastor, Rev. W. R. Crowder, who has commenced a protracted meeting. Mr. Jones will preach every night this week.

Rev. E. K. O'Dell reported good congregations at Huntersville, a good Sunday school and live Epworth League.

Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett preached morning and night at the Christian Memorial Temple, and in the afternoon he preached at one of the churches in Norfolk county, and had a very pleasant day.

At Monumental church, Portsmouth, Rev. E. H. Rawlings, who has just returned from a visit to Chautauqua, N. Y., held forth to very large congregations.

Rev. J. K. Joliff reported a good day at Queen Street church Sunday, with a decided increase in the congregations. He received one member on profession of faith.

Rev. W. R. Proctor had a good Sunday school at McKendree, which has a splendid record for the month of August. Mr. Proctor preached at night.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had five additions to the Sunday school at Lambert's Point and a very large congregation to hear him at the 11 A. M. service. At night the congregation was not so large.

Benediction by Rev. Dr. Judkins.—Virginian-Pilot.

CHURCH FEUD DYING OUT.

At a special meeting of the Methodist Board of Missions, held recently at the Methodist Book Concern, No. 150 Fifth avenue, a proposition was adopted whereby a publishing house is to be built in Shanghai, China, by the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, jointly. The action was made unanimous. The meeting, which was attended by many Bishops, clergymen, and lay officers, was encouraged to look for greater fraternity of interests in the two branches of the Church in the future on account of this step.

"No such harmony of interests," said a prominent Methodist clergyman, "between these two great denominations of Methodism has been seen since the crisis in 1844 split the Church." It was pointed out, as further illustrating the growth of this better understanding, that a similar contract has been effected in Mexico, where the Evangelista Mexicana, a weekly paper owned by the Methodist Episcopal Church, is to be consolidated into one weekly representing both branches. It is to be called El Apologista Cristiano.

These two incidents are looked upon by many as pointing to the time, not far distant, when the old breach brought on in the forties by the slavery question shall have disappeared.—Tri-bune.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

August 27, 1902.

At the last regular meeting of the Anti-Saloon League of Washington, the chairman of the Executive Committee submitted a draft of a letter sent to President Roosevelt, urging upon him the consideration of the objects and aims of the League in making his appointment of a commissioner for the District of Columbia to succeed the late Commissioner Ross. The President was urged to remember that the work of the League could be largely benefited by a commissioner friendly to the temperance cause, while the reverse would be equally true. The League determined to adopt a metal badge as the insignia of the association, the same to be made in accordance with a design submitted by the Executive Committee. Mrs. Isabel Helmick gave an interesting account of a recent trip through Ohio. The extent of the knowledge of the League and its efficiency in that State, which Mrs. Helmick described, was a source of gratification to the members. A vote of thanks to Helen M. Watson for substantial aid rendered to the League in this city was passed, and a committee appointed to make arrangements for the next meeting, which will partake of the character of a picnic to be held at Chevy Chase Lake.

Much gratification is expressed in temperance circles at the prediction of the excise board of the District that the new law, placing saloon licenses at $800, will reduce the total number of establishments at which liquor is sold at retail within the District to 400. This means that about 113 of the smaller saloons will be driven out of business. While it is not believed that the large saloons are any less harmful than the smaller ones, the reduction in the total number will enable the police to more effectively enforce the law regarding early closing and the sale of liquor to minors. A further advantage of the new law will be the abolishment of "the little saloon around the corner." While, in the main, Washington is free from saloons in the residence districts, there are a few, especially in the poorer neighborhoods, which are a source of temptation to men who can least afford to waste their earnings in grog-shops, and who are most susceptible to their allurements for the reason that their homes do not afford much comfort to the weary bread winner. These little saloons, with their ample space, comfortable chairs and files of newspapers, are calculated to induce the laboring man to seek comfort and society within their doors with results that are known all too well. Their abolition will prove a blessing to many poor families. The saloon men claim that the brewers will help them to pay the license, but the brewers are too good business men to advance money to a business which is running under too heavy expense, to make it a safe investment.

A strange reluctance comes over many when they try to talk about the soul and its relation to God. It is felt alike by the converted and unconverted persons. Very often the girl whose heart is running over with fun and mirth, and whose speech sparkles with wit and humor, has deep in consciousness the feeling that she is unsatisfied; that she wants something better, purer and higher. She wishes that the Christian woman who is talking with her would ask her a question, would give her a hint, would lead the conversation to the subject of personal religion. The other has no thought of the kind. She has even a faint, undefinable dread that any effort on her part would be received coldly, or made occasion of ridicule. So the opportunity passes. The souls have been within speaking distance, but they have failed to communicate with each other. Each goes on its way. The friend of Christ who might have won a soul to Him has been silent, afraid, ashamed. What wonder if to that too faithless friend there comes the sad experience that the beloved has withdrawn Himself and is gone; that, seeking the spirit, finds Him not, and calling, there returns no answer! Can there be perfect serenity and the full sense of communion with God to one who refuses or neglects so important a duty?—Margaret E. Sangster.

Tom Nolan, the counsellor, who for years kept the New York bar laughing at his conscious and unconscious drolleries, was arguing a case in behalf of clients who were sailors; and, while in the midst of an exhaustive display of lore on nautical matters, he was interrupted by the court. "How comes it, counsellor, that you possess such a vast knowledge of the sea?" "Does your honor think," responded Nolan, "that I came over in a hack?"—The Bar-rister.

The four-year-old daughter of a popular New Hampshire clergyman was ailing one night, and was put to bed early. She said, "Mamma, I want to see my papa." Her mother replied, "No, dear, your papa must not be disturbed." Pretty soon, she said again, "I want to see my papa." The mother replied as before, "No; your papa must not be disturbed." It was not long before she uttered this clincher, "Mamma, I am a sick woman, and I want to see my minister."—Exchange.

In a country graveyard is a stone with this line upon it, "After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well." His mother went to see it, and thus expressed herself: "I don't see what Ellen (his wife) put that on for. He never had a fever in his life. The nearest he came to it was when he had the pneumonia, but he didn't die of that. I sh'd think she'd know that asthma wasn't fever, and that's what he died of."

VIRGINIANS, REMEMBER!

Remember, that there is a judge in Virginia who twice gave a druggist license to sell intoxicating drinks in local option territory, the second time against the protest of Christian people, who appealed the case to the Circuit Court. The license was revoked, but the judge who granted it is still sitting on the bench.

Remember, that when it was proved that the druggist had sold large quantities of intoxicating liquor after his license had been revoked, this same judge ruled that it was lawful to sell "medicated whiskey" in local option territory, AND STILL HE IS SITTING ON THE BENCH.

Remember that, when the above mentioned ruling was sharply criticized in a temperance paper, the judge compelled the editor to travel 150 miles to be tried for contempt of court; that, after hearing the case argued, the judge felt constrained to acquit; that, immediately after the trial, in front of the court-house, in the presence of many witnesses, the judge proceeded to punish with a whip the man he had just discharged.

Remember also, that this was not the first offence of a similar character committed by this man. He had kicked an aged and infirm man across the court-house square. He had attacked an attorney with a pistol, firing at him several times and wounding him in the hand. On another occasion he had attacked the same attorney with a knife. How comes it that such a man can be a judge in the good old Commonwealth of Virginia?

Remember that, having been tried for his latest offence by a judge of his own choosing, and acquitted by a jury of his friends, HE IS STILL SITTING ON THE BENCH.

Virginians, don't forget these things. Don't let your representatives in the General Assembly forget them.

Above all, don't forget that the saloon is responsible for this infamy that has smutched the fair fame of Virginia justice; for the druggist above referred to was a saloon keeper, and his store a saloon, until a local option election made it more convenient for him to do business under another name. Don't forget! The saloon must go!—Christian Federation.

Little George said the other day at table: "Now, when I sit in my chair, my feet won't touch the floor; but, when I walk around, they touch the floor as well as anybody's."—Woman's Home Companion.

In September, 1902, Rev. J. Q. A. Henry, D. D., president of the New York Anti-Saloon League, went to Great Britain to aid the Free Church

Council in its efforts to secure a million total abstinence pledges during the first year of the new century. He has conducted 327 meetings in more than fifty important cities of the United Kingdom, has addressed 600,000 people, and secured 40,000 new total abstinence pledges.

ny formed with great capital for providing funerals for all parts of the land. Another company with large capital—£5,000,000 capital—to develop a wheel in perpetual motion, another company, with a capital of £4,000,000, to insure people against loss by servants; another company, with £2,500,000 capital, to transplant walnut trees from Virginia to England; then to cap the climax, a company was formed for "a great undertaking—nobody to know what it is." And, lo, £600,000 in shares were offered at £100 a share; books were opened at 9 o'clock in the morning and closed at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and the first day it was all subscribed. "A great undertaking—nobody to know what it is!"

An old magazine of those days describes the scene (Hunt's Magazine). It says: "From morning until evening Change alley was full to overflowing with one dense, moving mass of living beings, composed of the most incongruous materials and in all things save the mad pursuit whereof they were employed utterly opposite in their principles and feelings and far asunder in their stations in life and the professions they follow. Statesmen and clergymen deserted their high stations to enter upon this great theater of speculation and gambling. Churchmen and dissenters left their fierce disputes and forgot their wranglings upon church government in the deep and hazardous game they were playing for worldly treasures and for riches, which, if gained, were liable to disappear within an hour of their creation. Whigs and Tories buried their weapons of political warfare, discarded party animosities and mingled together in kind and friendly intercourse, each exulting as their stocks advanced in price and grumbling when fortune frowned upon them. Lawyers, physicians, merchants and traveling men forsook their employment, neglected their business, disregarded their engagements to whirl along in the stream, to be at last engulfed in the wild sea of bankruptcy. Females mixed with the crowd, forgetting the station and employment which nature had fitted them to adorn, and dealt boldly and extensively and, like those by whom they were surrounded, rose from poverty to wealth and from that were thrown down to beggary and want, and all in one short week and perhaps before the evening which terminated the first day of their speculation. Ladies of high rank, regardless of every appearance of dignity and blinded by the prevailing infatuation, drove to the shops of their milliners and haberdashers and there met their stockbrokers, whom they regularly employed and through whom extensive sales were daily negotiated. In the midst of the excitement all distinctions of party and religion and circumstances and character were swallowed up."

Condemned by God.

But it was left for our own country to surpass all about 37 years ago. We have the highest mountains and the greatest cataracts and the longest rivers, and of course we had to have the largest swindle. One would have thought that the nation had seen enough in that direction during the morose multicaulis excitement, when almost every man had a bunch of crawling silkworms in his house, out of which he expected to make a fortune. But all this excitement was as nothing compared with what took place in 1864 when a man near Titusville, Pa., digging a well, struck oil. Twelve hundred oil companies call for a billion of stock. Prominent members of churches, as soon as a certain amount of stock was assigned them, saw it was their privilege to become presidents or secretaries or members of the board of direction. Some of these companies never had a foot of ground, never expected to have. Their entire equipment was a map of a region where oil might be and two vials of grease, crude and clarified. People rushed down from all parts of the country by the first train and put their hard earnings in the gulf. A young man came down from the oil region of Pennsylvania utterly demented, having sold his farm at a fabulous price because it was supposed there might be oil there. Coming to a hotel in Philadelphia at the time I was living there, throwing down a $5,000 check to pay for his noonday meal and saying he did not care anything about the change! Then he stepped back to the gas burner to light his cigar with a thousand dollar note. Utterly insane!

The good Christian people said, "This company must be all right, because Elder So-and-so is president of it, and Elder So-and-so is secretary of it, and then there are three or four highly respected professing Christians in the board of directors." They did not know that when a professed Christian goes into stock gambling he lies like sin. But alas for the country! It became a tragedy, and a thousand million dollars were swamped. There are families today sitting in the shadow of destitution who but for that great national outrage would have had their cottages and their homesteads. I hold up before the young men these four great stock gambling schemes that they may see to what length men will go smitten of this passion, and I want to show them how all the best interests of society are against it and God is against it and will condemn it for time and condemn it for eternity. I do not dwell upon the frenzied speculations in Wall street last month. You all have enough remembrance of that financial horror. I only want you to know that it was in a procession of monetary frenzies, some of which have passed and others are to come.

The Day of Accounting.

O men of Wall street and of all streets, stand back from nefarious enterprises. Join that great company of Christian men who are maintaining their integrity notwithstanding all the pressure of temptation. In the morning, when you open business in the broker's office or in the banking house, ask God's blessing and when you close it pronounce a benediction upon it. A kind of business that men cannot engage in without prayer is no business for you. I wish that the words of George Peabody, uttered in the hearing of the people of his native town, Danvers, Mass. I wish that those words could be uttered in the hearing of all the young men throughout the land. He said: "Though Providence has granted me unvaried and universal success in the pursuit of fortune in other lands, I am still in heart the humble boy who left yonder unpretending dwelling. There is not a youth within the sound of my voice whose early opportunities and advantages are not very much greater than were my own, and I have since achieved nothing that is impossible to the most humble boy among you." George Peabody's success in business was not more remarkable than his integrity and his great hearted benevolence. I pray upon you God's protecting and prospering blessing. I hope you may all make fortunes for time and fortunes for eternity.

"The Church is our right arm of power in this conflict, and emphatically our main reliance for success."—Hiram Price.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course: The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course: This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpful in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian men.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Real Taxes to pay. No Profits to made for owners. The Institute not built to make money. It has one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positive Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

BIBLE STUDY IN SECULAR SCHOOLS.

Extract from speech of Nicholas
Ray Butler, President of Columbia University, New York city, delivered at the annual meeting of the National Biblical Association in 1902.]

I want to call attention to a phenomenon which is so universal that we do not notice it—paradoxical though it sounds—but which, if it is permitted to continue, will one day produce startling results in our life and civilization.

I refer to the fact that owing to a series of causes operating over a considerable period of years, knowledge of the English Bible is passing out of the hands of the rising generation, and with the knowledge of the Bible there is fast disappearing any acquaintance with the religious element which has shaped our civilization from the beginning.

Not so long ago my friend, President Thwing, of Western Reserve University, printed in the Century Magazine the results of an ingenious inquiry into this subject, which he carried on among college students. His purpose was not to find out what they knew of theology or what they believed of religion. His purpose was to find out what they knew about the best work of English literature.

Those of you who have read that paper will remember the astounding results that his inquiry revealed.

"In what I am going to say about the English Bible I want to make myself clearly understood. I want to make this fundamental distinction clear: I am not now talking about instruction in religion, important as many conceive that to be; I am not talking now about instruction in theology, important as some feel that to be; I am merely laying down this thesis: the neglect of the English Bible incapacitates the rising generation to read and appreciate the masterpieces of English literature, from Chaucer to Browning, and it strikes out of their consciousness one element, and for centuries the controlling element, in the production of your civilization and mine. I hold this to be true even if there were not one person living in the United States who subscribed to a single article of any Christian creed. I am speaking now about literature and life, not about religion or theology.

"I hold in my hand an edition of Milton's Paradise Lost, edited and annotated by a member of this association. I want to read in this presence a few of the opening lines and tell you what happened when I read them in another presence not so long ago:

(Opening lines of Milton's Paradise Lost.)

"I read these lines to a company of college students, students who came from cultivated homes, who had enjoyed the advantages of a liberal training, and in that company of students there was not one who could make sense out of any line but the last—'Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme'; I submit, the same remark is probably true of a majority of this audience.

"Teachers all over this land are trying to teach Chaucer and Spencer and Shakespeare, Tennyson and Browning.
How are they to understand men who refer to the Bible, that veritable treasure-house of literature, on every page, if they cannot take children to the source from which the supply is drawn? How are they to discuss and interpret the style of Ruskin, of Carlyle, of Emerson? How are they to teach the history of the heroes of our own independence, many of whom were religious in every fiber of their being, and whose work will continue to bear the stamp put upon it at the beginning utterly regardless of what has become of religious faith in the interval. How is one to teach the truth as history reveals it unless he teaches the whole truth? And yet, see what has happened: The quarrelling of religious sects, of churches, each claiming this book for its own and denying the truth of what other persons found in it, has brought about a state of affairs in which the English Bible, a fountain of English literature, has been practically stricken from the reading of the American people.

"I contend that we are not only on the point of impoverishing life and literature by this neglect of the English Bible, but we have already impoverished life and literature. I am not dealing with a problem that lies in the future, I am speaking of a condition which is at hand. We are impover-ishing life and literature by striking out of our life and our reading one great monument of our literary line, the source from which much of what is best in later centuries is drawn, the inspiration upon which the best English style has been built.

"The feeling is that what has come to pass can only be described by one word, shameful. I regard it as shameful that we have permitted, blindly no doubt, this tremendous sacrifice of literature and life and knowledge because we cannot agree upon questions of religious and theological interpretation. Why must we wait for argument in matters of exegesis before we study matters of history and literature? Why should we not go back to a study of the source from which our noble English speech has come? More than that. How do you propose to teach American history without teaching the pupil who sits in front of you the controlling motive that drove the pilgrims to the New England shore? How are you going to explain that migration unless you teach the cause from which it sprang? How are you going to teach the history of Europe? How are you going to teach anything that has happened since the break-up of the Roman Empire without teaching that the controlling element in most of it was the sum total of the conceptions and feelings which we sum up under the name of Christianity?"

The young ladies of Fremont, Neb., have formed a very sensible and useful organization. It is known as the Young Women's Reform Union. Miss Elizabeth Mackenzie is president. The members of the organization are pledged to refuse the attentions of any man who is known to enter a saloon or to have any habits contrary to high moral ideals. This is business.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

R. N. PRICE.

The Boer generals were recently given an ovation in London, and they were cheered by the multitudes. This cheering did not grow altogether out of admiration for their bravery; but showed a sympathy for the Boers in their unsuccessful struggle for independence. This crushing of a little republic may yet lead to the decapitation of a great kingdom.

The automobile has become quite notorious for its man-killing qualities.
Says "The Commoner": "The automobile has already established a reputation in the man-killing line. In families where serious accidents have occurred a prejudice against the machine has grown up, and relatives of the injured or the dead have deemed it their duty to dispose of their man-killers. Baron George von Bleich-roder, the banker at Berlin, was killed in June last, and it is said that the members of his family have given away or sold their automobiles. One relative of the dead baron sold a French automobile that had cost him eleven thousand dollars for the sum of fifteen hundred dollars; and in order to further show their disapproval, the baron's family have caused to be buried beside his grave the automobile that caused the baron's death; a very novel penalty, indeed, to be inflicted upon the man-killer."

The same paper presents a list of abnormal happenings which occurred in one week: "An American woman, aged forty, suddenly became insane while looking at the engines of the ocean liner Lorraine. A farmer in the course of an innocent controversy mowed off both the legs of his opponent with a scythe. A school teacher, fascinated by revolving knives, jumped into a huge clay mixer in a porcelain factory, and was chopped up like sausage meat. A miller suddenly seized with an insane frenzy while watching the swift moving four rollers, precipitated into the machine his own five year old child, whose legs were ground before the belt slipped, owing to the choking resistance. Two Russians, man and wife, were riding in an automobile down a steep mountain along a precipice, when the woman exclaimed:
'What if we should swerve!' Her companion, before he could resist the impulse, obeyed some insane suggestion provoked by the remark, and whirled the machine abruptly into an abyss, where he was killed and his wife severely injured."

The power of suggestion is wonder-

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

She smiled at this.

"He got me, too," she said. "Nixon was sent to me just before the sports, and I don't think he will break down today, and I am so thankful." And her eyes glowed.

"I am quite sure he won't," I thought to myself, but I said no word.

After a long pause she went on, "I have promised Mr. Craig to sing tonight if I am needed," and then, after a moment's hesitation, "It is two years since I have been able to sing—two years," she repeated "since," and then her brave voice trembled, "my husband was killed."

"I quite understand," I said, having no other word on my tongue.

"And," she went on quietly, "I fear I have been selfish. It is hard to sing the same songs. We were very happy. But the miners like to hear me sing, and I think perhaps it helps them to feel less lonely and keeps them from evil. I shall try tonight if I am needed. Mr. Craig will not ask me unless he must."

I would have seen every miner and lumberman in the place hideously drunk before I would have asked her to sing one song while her heart ached. I wondered at Craig and said rather angrily:

"He thinks only of those wretched miners and shanty men of his."

She looked at me with wonder in her eyes and said gently:

"And are they not Christ's too?"

And I found no word to reply.

It was nearing 10 o'clock and I was wondering how the fight was going on and hoping that Mrs. Mavor would not be needed when the door opened and old man Nelson and Sandy, the latter much battered and ashamed, came in with the word for Mrs. Mavor.

"I will come," she said simply. She saw me preparing to accompany her and asked, "Do you think you can leave him?"

"He will do quite well in Nelson's care."

"Then I am glad, for I must take my little one with me. I did not put her to bed in case I should need to go, and I may not leave her."

We entered the church by the back door and saw at once that even yet the battle might easily be lost.

Some miners had just come from Slavin's, evidently bent on breaking up the meeting in revenge for the collapse of the dance, which Slavin was unable to enjoy, much less direct. Craig was gallantly holding his ground, finding it hard work to keep his men in good humor and so prevent a fight, for there were cries of "Put him out! Put the beast out!" at a miner half drunk and wholly outrageous.

The look of relief that came over his face when Craig caught sight of us told how anxious he had been and reconciled me to Mrs. Mavor's singing. "Thank the good God!" he said, with what came near being a sob. "I was about to despair."

He immediately walked to the front and called out:

"Gentlemen, if you wish it, Mrs. Mavor will sing."

There was a dead silence. Some one began to applaud, but a miner said savagely:

"Stop that, you fool!"

There was a delay of a few moments when from the crowd a voice called out:

"Does Mrs. Mavor wish to sing?" followed by cries of "Aye, that's it!"

Then Shaw, the foreman at the mines, stood up in the audience and said:

"Mr. Craig and gentlemen, you know that three years ago I was known as 'Old Ricketts' and that I owe all I am tonight, under God, to Mrs. Mavor, and," with a little quiver in his voice, "her baby. And we all know why. And what I say is that if she does not feel like singing tonight she is not going to sing to keep any drunken brute of Slavin's crowd quiet."

There were deep growls of approval all over the church. I could have hugged Shaw then and there. Mr. Craig went to Mrs. Mavor and after a word with her came back and said:

"Mrs. Mavor wishes me to thank her dear friend Mr. Shaw, but says she would like to sing."

The response was perfect stillness. Mr. Craig sat down at the organ and played the opening bars of the touching melody, "Oft In the Stilly Night." Mrs. Mavor came to the front and, with a smile of exquisite sweetness upon her sad face and looking straight at us with her glorious eyes, began to sing.

Her voice, a rich soprano, even and true, rose and fell, now soft, now strong, but always filling the building, pouring around us floods of music. I had heard Patti's "Home, Sweet Home," and of all singing that alone affected me as did this.

At the end of the first verse the few women in the church and some of the men were weeping quietly, but when she began the words,

"When I remember all The friends once linked together," sobs came on every side from these tender hearted fellows, and Shaw quite lost his grip. But she sang steadily on, the tone clearer and sweeter and fuller at every note, and when the sound of her voice died away she stood looking at the men as if in wonder that they should weep. No one moved. Mr. Craig played softly on and, wandering through many variations, arrived at last at—

"Jesus, lover of my soul."

As she sang the appealing words her face was lifted up, and she saw none of us, but she must have seen some one, for the cry in her voice could only come from one who could see and feel help close at hand. On and on went the glorious voice, searching my soul's depths, but when she came to the words,

"Thou, O Christ, art all I want,"

she stretched up her arms—she had quite forgotten us; her voice had borne her to other worlds and sang with such a passion of abandon that my soul was ready to surrender anything, everything.

Again Mr. Craig wandered on through his changing chords till again he came to familiar ground, and the voice began in low, thrilling tones Bernard's great song of home, "Jerusalem, the Golden."

Every word, with all its weight of meaning, came whirling to our souls till we found ourselves gazing afar into those stately halls of Zion, with their daylight serene and their jubilant throngs. When the singer came to the last verse, there was a pause. Again Mr. Craig softly played the interlude, but still there was no voice. I looked up. She was very white, and her eyes were glowing with their deep light. Mr. Craig looked quickly about, saw her, stopped and half rose, as if to go to her, when, in a voice that seemed to come from a faroff land, she went on:

"Oh, sweet and blessed country!"

The longing, the yearning, in the second "Oh" were indescribable. Again and again as she held that word and then dropped down with the cadence in the music my heart ached for I knew not what.

The audience were sitting as in a trance. The grimy faces of the miners, for they never get quite white, were furrowed with the tear courses. Shaw by this time had his face, too, lifted high, his eyes gazing far above the singer's head, and I knew by the rapture in his face that he was seeing, as she saw, the thronging, stately halls and the white robed conquerors. He had felt and was still feeling all the stress of the fight, and to him the vision of the conquerors in their glory was soul drawing and soul stirring. And Nixon, too—he had his vision, but what he saw was the face of the singer with the shining eyes, and, by the look of him, that was vision enough.

Immediately after her last note Mrs. Mavor stretched out her hands to her little girl, who was sitting on my knee, caught her up and, holding her close to her breast, walked quickly behind the curtain. Not a sound followed the singing. No one moved till she had disappeared, and then Mr. Craig came to the front and, motioning to me to follow Mrs. Mavor, began in a low, distinct voice:

"Gentlemen, it was not easy for Mrs. Mavor to sing for us, and you know she sang because she is a miner's wife and her heart is with the miners. But she sang, too, because her heart is his who came to earth this day so many years ago to save us all, and she would make you love him, too, for in loving him you are saved from all base loves, and you know what I mean."

"And before we say good night, men, I want to know if the time is not come when all of you who mean to be better than you are should join in putting from us this thing that has brought sorrow and shame to us and to those we love? You know what I mean. Some of you are strong. Will you stand by and see weaker men robbed of the money they have for those far away and robbed of the manhood that no money can buy or restore?"

"Will the strong men help? Shall we join hands in this? What do you say? In this town we have often seen hell, and just a moment ago we were all looking into heaven, 'the sweet and blessed country.' Oh, men," and his voice rang in an agony through the building—"oh, men, which shall be ours? For heaven's dear sake, let us help one another! Who will?"

I was looking out through a slit in the curtain. The men, already wrought to intense feeling by the music, listening with set faces and gleaming eyes, and as at the appeal "Who will?" Craig raised high his hand Shaw, on and a hundred men sprang to their feet and held high their hands.

I have witnessed some thrilling scenes in my life, but never anything to equal that, the one man on the platform standing at full height, with his hand thrown up to heaven, and the hundred men below standing straight, arms up at full length, silent and almost motionless.

For a moment Craig held them and again his voice rang out, louder and sterner than before:

"All who mean it say, 'By God's help I will.'"

And back from a hundred throngs came deep and strong the words, "God's help, I will."

At this point Mrs. Mavor, who had quite forgotten, put her hand to her arm. "Go and tell him," she panted, "I want them to come on Thursday night, as they used to in the old days—go—quick!" And she almost pushed me out. I gave Craig her message. He held up his hand for silence. "Mrs. Mavor wishes me to say she will be glad to see you all, as in old days, on Thursday evening, and can think of no better place to formal expression to our pledge of night."

There was a shout of acceptance, then, at some one's call, the long up feelings of the crowd found in three mighty cheers for Mrs. Mavor.

"Now for our old hymn," called Mr. Craig, "and Mrs. Mavor will us."

He sat down at the organ, played a few bars of "The Sweet By and By" and then Mrs. Mavor began. But a soul joined till the refrain was reached, and then they sang as only with their hearts on fire can sing. After the last refrain Mr. Craig made a sign to Mrs. Mavor, and she came alone, slowly and softly and with looking far away:

"In the sweet by and by

We shall meet on that beautiful shore"

There was no benediction—there seemed no need—and the men went quietly out. But over and over the voice kept singing in my ears in my heart, "We shall meet on that beautiful shore." And after the silences of men had gone and left the street empty, as I stood with Craig the radiant moonlight that made great mountains about come near from Sandy's sleigh we heard in the distance Baptiste's French-English song, but the song that floated down with the sound of the bells from the miners' sleigh was:

"We shall meet on that beautiful shore"

"Poor old Shaw!" said Craig softly

When the last sound had died away I turned to him and said:

"You have won your fight."

"We have won our fight," I replied, "beaten," he replied quickly, offering his hand. Then, taking off his hat and looking up beyond the mountain tops and the silent stars, he said softly, "Our fight, but his victory!"

And, thinking it all over, I could say but perhaps he was right.

Your meeting here had a fine effect. Temperance people and friends of the cause were much pleased. Several liquor men were present Sunday night. One ex-barkeeper said he never carried any "little sweetened bottles" in his pocket. I think the League will have a great work here soon.—Rev. W. Hammond, Manassas.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

ful. The mind and the muscles have a natural tendency to conform to any suggestion received. The will in most cases corrects this tendency where the judgment pronounces against it. But the impulse started by a suggestion is often so sudden and rapid that it cannot be restrained by the will, and disaster is the result. Ideation and action are correlated. The nerve centres that control particular actions are the ones affected by the ideas of those actions.

Also suggestion has a powerful influence over appetite, passion, etc. The suggestion of whiskey excites the appetite of the drinker. A lewd picture excites emotions of lewdness.

Suggestion not only arouses insane impulses, but superinduces permanent desires and purposes. Environment has much to do in creating character. The house we live in, its furniture, its pictures, its filth or cleanliness, the yard, barren and ugly, or green and charming, the prospects lovely or forbidding—all enter into the warp and woof of character. Our companions, their themes, their language, their spirit, all have an influence in making us what we are. To be pure and noble, we should think only on whatsoever is pure, lovely and of good report. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." "I think, and therefore I am." I think beautifully and therefore I am good. I think perversely, and therefore I am bad.

Political prophets seem to think that W. J. Bryan's chances for the Presidency are dead. What if they are? Some one had prophesied that in a very short time the world was coming to an end; a man very much alarmed at the impending ruin, went to Emerson to unbosom to him his fears. "Why," said Emerson, "the world's coming to an end gives me no concern; I can get along very well without the world." So I think I can safely say that Bryan can get along very well without the Presidency. I would like to know what he would want with its cares and responsibilities. It is my opinion that a first rate man can't get into that place. He must be an arch-demagogue and a political weather cock.

It is surprising how towns are springing up, as by magic, all over the land. When the war closed Mercer and McDowell counties, West Virginia, were backwoods counties, with primitive ideas and habits. They were nothing but little eddies along the banks of progress; but now they are the middle of the stream. Coal and railroads have turned the wilderness into thriving towns, and busy, noisy centres of commercial activity. Less than ten years ago there was in Campbell county, Tennessee, a quiet, retired, non-progressive community. Coal was discovered, railroads have been built to it, and now one would imagine that it is a vortex with the whole country revolving around it. It is the new and growing town, LaFollette. I copy the following from the Knoxville Sentinel:

"H. M. LaFollette passed through the city this morning on his way home from a business trip East. He says that the new blast furnace at his town will be completed soon and ready to 'blow in.' This is the largest furnace in the South, and has a capacity of 350 tons.

"We have already built the fires in it," says Mr. LaFollette, "and hope to be ready to charge it in a week or ten days. I have not been out there for some days, but understand that the work has been progressing rapidly since I have been gone. The 210 coke ovens are all completed, and are in operation now. We intend to make coke enough to supply the furnace. The iron ore is being mined and stocked ready for the furnace to open. The coke ovens are in full blast making coke for the opening, and all the material is being put on the ground ready to blow in. There is a great demand for houses, and we have in now 490 applications for houses from the men who are employed in our work. Most of them came and left their families behind until they could find houses. In order to supply the demand we are building 300 houses as fast as we can. The order is in at the mill for the sawing of the patterns, and most of them are under contract. There are at present a population in LaFollette of 7,880, and I think we will have 12,000 or more there by the first of the year, provided there is house room enough for them. We have twenty-five general stores, and six saloons. They are all doing a good business. The saloons are taxed $5,000 a year, which goes to the schools. We are now building a fine two-story brick school house, which will cost $12,000, and a house for the colored children that is to cost $3,000.

"Iron is bringing a splendid price, and we are anxious to get to making it, so that we can begin to realize something from the immense investment."

You will observe that the 25 stores and 6 saloons are all doing a good business! It is a matter of gratulation that the saloons are doing a good business; that they are selling much spirits; that hundreds of men, women and children are drinking; that laborers are spending their hard earnings for strong drink; that their families are suffering for lack of what goes down the throats of husbands and fathers; that quarrels and fights are being instigated by the whiskey devil; that the saloons are fountains of vice and immorality, debasing, corrupting, damning! All this is matter of gratulation, because the saloons furnish $5,000 a year for the education of the children! Thus we build up with one hand and tear down with the other. We crysallize avarice, crime, tears, woes into germs of science and literature. We waste $20,000 in the service of the devil to make $5,000 for the service of humanity!

VIRGINIA'S "DRY" COUNTIES.

The following summary of wet and dry territory is taken from the Christian Federation:

Wet and dry territory in Virginia, June, 1902—A survey of the State by counties.

The following information has been gained by sending blank reports to all the counties in the State. Most of these have been returned with the desired information, but a number have not, hence the lack of information concerning some counties. Will not friends in each of the counties from which we have no report see that the omission is made good immediately? Please let us hear from you. If our information concerning any county is inaccurate, we shall be glad to be corrected:

Accomac.—No territory dry through local option, but in Tangier Island and some other sections of the county the sentiment against the saloon is so strong that it cannot exist. The county had local option several years ago, but the law was so poorly enforced that a large number of good people persuaded themselves that the licensed saloon was better.

Albemarle.—Ivy and Samuel Miller districts dry, leaving four districts wet.

Alexandria.—No dry territory.

Alleghany.—No dry territory.

Amelia.—No territory dry through local option, still there is but one saloon in the county, so strong is temperance sentiment.

Amherst.—The Courthouse District dry. The remainder of the county wet.

Appomattox.—Dry. Local option election March 31, 1900, carried by over 400 majority.

Augusta.—All six districts and the town of Waynesboro' dry. Staunton and Basic City wet.

Campbell.—Otter River, Seneca and Rustburg districts dry, but considerable liquor shipped into dry territory from Lynchburg in jugs, beside some moonshining.

Charles City.—Wet.

Charlotte.—No local option elections have been held, yet the county is dry owing to the active opposition of the people to the saloons, and the fact that the judge refuses to grant any liquor licenses.

Chesterfield.—Wet.

Clarke.—No report.

Craig.—Dry.

Culpeper.—No local option laws in force, yet the whole county is dry on side of the Courthouse, owing to the fact that the court has refused licenses in all other parts of the county.

Cumberland.—Report incomplete.

Dickenson.—The whole county under the local option law, but a great deal of moonshine whiskey made and sold.

Dinwiddie.—Wet.

Elizabeth City.—No report.

Essex.—Rappahannock district dry. Fairfax.—Falls Church, Providence and Dranesville districts dry; a Falls Church, Vienna, Fairfax Courthouse, Herndon, and Wehlie, incorporated towns. Temperance sentiment very strong in the dry territory, owing to the activity of the Good Templars.

Fauquier.—Scott and Lee districts dry—two out of five. Of the three incorporated towns in the county, Upperville and Remington are dry. Warrington, the Courthouse, wet.

Floyd.—No report.

Fluvanna.—No local option territory, but only one bar in the county outside of Columbia.

Franklin.—Wet.

Frederick.—No report.

Giles.—Dry.

Gloucester.—The question of local option has never been voted on in the county, yet the Courthouse is dry.

Grayson.—No saloons in the county and have not been for the past years.

Greene.—No report.

Greensville.—Wet.

Halifax.—Mount Carmel, Black Walnut, and Meadsville districts dry. Other five districts wet.

Hanover.—Wet.

Henrico.—Wet.

Henry.—No local option laws in force, yet the town of Ridgeway has saloons. Martinsville has a distillery.

Highland.—Not a saloon in the county. Local option obtained in one district. No vote has been taken in other two, there being no apparent necessity for it. The temperance people fight all applications for license before the court, and for several years have been successful.

Isle of Wight.—Wet.

James City.—Jamestown district. Williamsburg under local option, the law nullified to a considerable extent in Williamsburg by clubs.

King and Queen.—No report.

King George.—Dry, and has been ten or twelve years.

King William.—No report.

Lancaster.—Dry. There has been much violation of the local option by speak-easies, but this is now very derfully small, and growing very less. The Anti-Saloon people are active, and are prosecuting offenders with marked success. Some ke $1,500 have been imposed in fines since Christmas.

Lee.—Dry.

Loudoun.—Broad Run, Lovettsville, Jefferson, Mount Gilead, and Mercer districts dry. Leesburg, which includes the Courthouse, the only wet district.

Patrick.—Wet. Two whiskey distilleries and thirty or forty brandy distilleries in the county.

Pittsylvania.—No territory under local option. Bar-rooms barred from Northampton, the Courthouse, by high license. Pigg River district has no bars, and their number is greatly reduced in other districts by the opposition of the temperance people, favored by a temperance judge.

Powhatan.—No local option territory, but only four or five bars in the county. Formerly there were ten, and in the years twelve. A number of dealers have of their own accord discontinued the business.

Prince Edward.—Wet.

Prince George.—Wet.

Princess Anne.—Pungo District dry. Balance of county wet.

Prince William.—Dumfries district through local option. Gainesville district dry, because, on petition of the people, the judge refused license in the district. The other four districts

Rappahannock.—The town of Washington is under local option, but the law is much violated. Balance of the county wet.

WET AND DRY TERRITORY IN VIRGINIA.

(Issue of July, 1902.)

Some additional information has been given us concerning counties from which we received no report, or from which the report in our last issue was imperfect.

Buchanan, Dickenson, Giles, and Tazewell counties, excepting the town of Pocahontas, in Tazewell county, are all under the prohibitory law, known as the Harman bill. It is against the law to manufacture, sell, or import intoxicating drinks into these counties.

Mecklenburg county is wet, excepting Chase City and South Hill, incorporated towns. Boydton, an incorporated town, has a dispensary.

Though Norfolk county is wet, the village of Port Norfolk has no saloons in it.

Wythe county has no saloons outside of Wytheville, the only incorporated town in the county. This is not due to local option, but to the fact that the judge has, in every instance, at the request of citizens, refused to grant licenses in places that were not incorporated and had no police protection.

WHEN THE UNIVERSITY TREMBLED.

ARTHUR CHAPMAN, IN OUTLOOK.

When the President of Argo University told the reporters for the morning papers that, unless somebody advanced twenty thousand dollars in the next twenty-four hours, the mortgage on the main buildings would be foreclosed, people shook their heads and said what they were in duty bound to say in such a case.

Everybody liked President Buckwalter. He was not only a mentally well-poised sort of chap, with some pleasing ideas about hammering sense into young men, but he exhaled the kind of unconscious brotherly love that would make even a theatre usher unbend and look pleasant. The world says nice things about the fellow who says nice things about the world, and President Buckwalter was such an outspoken believer in the goodness of mankind that he basked comfortably in his own sunshine. These things, however, did not alter a monumentally ridiculous proposition as a whole. There was no excuse for the existence of Argo University, so the people said who figured that a boy in school after thirteen years was simply "eating his head off." In the first place, it couldn't even be rated in the fresh-water class, for it was out among a lot of cactus and sagebrush, without so much as an irrigation ditch in sight, and, on a reasonably warm day in summer, a man making his way across the treeless grounds hardly dared put out his tongue for fear it would crack open.

To be sure, the professors who had cast their individual lots with the institution were loyal to the extent of struggling along with low salaries and consequent shabby overcoats, and there was no doubting their earnestness and their abiding faith in the ultimate greatness of the University. One of them, too, had written a book on sociology or something of that sort, which had brought him an offer of a chair in a big Eastern university that figured in the Associated Press football reports. Then the students were intensely enthusiastic, even if they did not have so much as a glee club. Some of them punched cows on the range during vacation, and several did odd jobs of laboratory work for the chemists in the employ of the big smelters. Others worked in the mines, at union wages, long enough to give them the wherewithal for a term membership in a student "prune-club," and one or two of the young women graduates had gone into politics and had been elected to the State Legislature. But all this did not alter the fact that Argo University had come face to face with ruin, after a plucky struggle to keep on the map, and President Buckwalter received twenty-three "I-told-you-so" letters in the afternoon's mail following the interview in the newspapers. The twenty-fourth letter, however, did not go into the waste basket. It was a curt note informing President Buckwalter that a check had been drawn by the undersigned and was ready to be devoted to relieving the distressed financial condition of Argo University. There was no provision about a like sum being raised in a certain time. The gift was unconditional, save that the donor's name was to be kept secret. The note was signed by one of the city's millionaires—a man of whom a reporter had once said: "In the matter of closeness, Senator Edgren would make the bark on a tree look like a Mother Hubbard wrapper."

When President Buckwalter strode into Edgren & Co.'s office he found the harsh lines of the Senator's face softened into something like amiable tracings, owing to the cajolery of a good cigar. It was a condition just bordering on good nature, but no man had ever seen the distinguished capitalist step quite across the line.

"Well, Buckwalter," he growled, as the professor sunk into the visitor's chair, where the light was always in a man's eyes, "how is your institution for teaching intellectual fancy-work?"

"Much better than before I received your kind letter," began the professor, but the Senator cut him short with another growl.

"Don't start anything of that sort. Cut it all out. You know I don't believe in this university business. It makes a complicated fool of a young fellow who might have been just a natural, simple sort of a fool to begin with. But I've had some of your long-haired cattle in my mines and smelters and on some of my stock ranches, and I believe you're pounding better ideas into 'em than most of those hifaluturs are doing in the East. Then you've got a Western shebang, and there's the question of patriotism. The West's made me what I am, and I can't go back on any of her institutions that are more'n half-baked. That's what brought you this check, I guess—set it down as sentiment."

The professor took a long blue slip of paper in his trembling fingers. With an effort he managed to reduce the figures to twenty thousand dollars, though his eyes at first extended the ciphers into a dancing, interminable row.

"It's a fine thing—a generous thing!" exclaimed the professor, when he had mastered the emotions that seemed to clutch at his throat. "I wish that you would let me announce the name of the man who has saved the University."

"No, no—you'll be naming a hall, or a window, or a fence post for me next. Keep it dark. It's easy money, anyway. I picked it up and ten thousand more in a few minutes on the board yesterday. I don't mind telling you how it was done—it was in that little raid on Horseshoe Agnes."

The professor, who had risen at the deepening note in the Senator's growl, dimly remembered that he had read of a sensational break in Horseshoe Agnes mining stock. There had been a long period of depression, owing to the

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 21.

Text of the Lesson, Deut. xxxiv, 1-12.
Memory Verses, 10-12—Golden Text.
Ex. xxxiii, 11—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Copyright, 1903, by American Press Association.)

1-3. And the Lord shewed him all the land.

Read with prayer and reliance upon the Holy Spirit the parallel passages in Num. xxvii, 12-17; Deut. iii, 23-29; xxxii, 48-52, and notice Moses' great desire to go over into the land, his prayer to God that he might be permitted to do so, God's refusal to allow him, Moses' meek submission and his request that some one be appointed in his stead, so that Israel might not be as sheep which have no shepherd. Observe that it was Moses' sin when he disobeyed God at Kadesh in striking the rock instead of speaking to it and thus failed to sanctify God in the eyes of Israel that kept him from entering the promised land at that time. See Num. xx, 7-13, in connection with the above passages.

4. I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go over thither.

When Moses pleaded to be permitted to go over, the word from the Lord was, "Let it suffice thee, speak no more unto Me of this matter" (Deut. iii, 26), and that was enough. It was Israel's sin in murmuring and rebelling that led Moses to sin, but that did not excuse Moses. How holy is our God, and what holiness He requires in us! And who is equal to it? Failure is seen in Adam, in Noah, in Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in Moses and Aaron, in David and Elijah, in the apostles and everywhere. There is none good but one. That is God. And Jesus was God manifest in the flesh. It is only as He is manifested in us by His Spirit that our life will be what He desires.

5-7. Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died. His eye was not dim nor his natural force abated.

When Aaron died, Moses and Eleazar were with him, but no one was with Moses when he died. He had often been alone with God, on two different occasions for forty days and nights at a time, but previous to this occasion he had always come back to continue with the people. Now in health and vigor of body and in the use of all his faculties he went up into the mountain alone and returned to Israel no more. Out from the earthly tabernacle in which he had sojourned for 120 years Moses, the servant of the Lord, went to live with God forever. No sickness, no suffering, as far as we know, but he just closed his eyes to earth and entered into the presence of God and of the redeemed and of the holy angels, absent from the body, present with the Lord, which was very far better for him (Phil. i, 21, 23). He is still there alive and well, and after more than 1,400 years from the time of his departure Peter and the others saw him on the Mount of Transfiguration with Jesus Christ, as he and Elijah spake with our Lord of His approaching decease (Luke ix, 30-32). The body of Moses was buried, but, no man being present, no man knows where, for God has not seen fit to tell. To bury bodies in the earth is Scriptural, to burn with fire is heathenish, though it matters little how the body is disposed of, for God will raise it up (John v, 28; vi, 39, 40, 44, 54).

8. And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days.

Although the great enemy death can only bring gain to the believer, yet his work on the body is to be deplored, and our Lord Himself wept at the grave of Lazarus. Death came by sin, but in due time both death and sin shall be found no more on earth, but shall be destroyed (1 Jos. xiii, 14; 1 Cor. xv, 20; Rev. xxi, 3, 4).

9. And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom, for Moses had laid his hands upon him.

When Moses asked that some one might be appointed to take his place, God designated Josua as his successor (Num. xxvii, 18, 19), and now the people hearken to him as they had done to Moses. His story will come before us in the next quarter's lessons. Meanwhile let all be looking up the past mention of him and thus getting better acquainted with him.

10-12. And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face.

In many respects Moses stands alone; none like him. It is written of him, "And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face as a man speaketh unto his friend" (Ex. xxxiii, 11). But in Heb. iii we see how much greater Christ is than Moses, and in that epistle it is set forth how much higher Christ is than angels, than Moses or Aaron or Joshua or any other, our High Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. The last two verses of our lesson set forth the way in which Moses was greater than any other prophet in the matter of the signs and wonders which God wrought by him in connection with Israel's deliverance from Egypt. A greater deliverance for Israel is drawing nigh, when with similar but greater wonders she shall be delivered from all nations and placed in her own land forever to the glory of God and the blessing of all nations (Jer. xvi, 17, 18; xxiii, 7, 8; Mic. vii, 15-20). Death may remove from earth a Joseph or a Moses or a Joshua, but the Lord liveth, and all the promises of God are yea and amen in Christ Jesus, and, like Isaiah when Uzziah died, we may look up into heaven and see a Priest-King who never dies, who said to John, "I am He that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive for evermore, amen, and have the keys of hell and of death" (II Cor. i, 20; Isa. vi, 1; Rev. i, 18).

HAVE NONDRINKERS RIGHTS?

Some Questions Raised by a Pastor of Joliet, Ill.

The Rev. D. C. Milner of Joliet, Ill., in a recent letter to the Chicago Record-Herald says:

"There should be cordial indorsement of your vigorous editorial commending the action of railroad and other corporations in forbidding their employees to drink liquor or to frequent saloons. It is certainly in the interests of life and property as well as for the welfare of the men themselves. What are these men to do, however, in the face of the constant and pressing temptations to drink, especially when these temptations come from reputable people and from supposed to be friendly hands?"

"It seems to me there is great and pressing need of a discussion of the question of the rights and privileges of people who do not want to drink. Many of the fraternal societies that profess to be organized for the benefit of their members always supply liquors at their banquets and compel their fellow members who are abstainers, even if they do not drink, to share in the responsibility of offering temptation to their brothers or to leave the society."

"Some of these fraternal societies have become notorious institutions for the making of drunkards out of sober young men. Not long ago a great athletic association that ought to teach temperance had a large reception, and men and women who are supposed to be ladies and gentlemen vied with each other in their drinking until some of them were in a maudlin condition.

"It would seem sometimes that a conscientious abstainer had no rights that drinking people are bound to respect. Last summer a majority of the men of the labor unions of a city planned a 'dry picnic,' but immediately the brewery and saloon men rallied their forces and made the count go the other way.

"Many people who are fond of these societies would like to know if the supply and the drinking of liquors have any proper place in connection with any of their meetings.

"Do you think there are place and propriety in the agitation of this subject? Can there be any reform, or do these clubs and organizations or their leaders and the leaders of so called good society claim that there can be no proper entertainment, without liquors?"

PROGRESS IN CANADA.

Review of Temperance Affairs Across the Line.

Perhaps no country within the past fifty years has made more marked progress in temperance matters than the Dominion of Canada, says a writer in Christian Work. The decrease in drinking is everywhere apparent. In the earlier days of Canada it was almost impossible to hold a "logging bee," a "barn raising" or a social gathering of friends or neighbors without a plentiful supply of liquor. Now all is changed. In country districts are many buildings once used as taverns, but now closed or turned into private dwellings. The reduction, too, in liquor licenses during the last twenty-five years is significant of the onward march of temperance.

Since 1875 the tavern licenses have been reduced from 4,793 to 2,621, the shop licenses from 1,307 to 308, the wholesale licenses from 52 to 21, and the 33 vessel licenses have been done away with altogether. These figures apply to the province of Ontario, where there are 756 organized municipalities, 141 of which have no tavern license, while 435 have only 1 or 2, and 625 are without a shop license. Ontario no doubt stands at the front in the increasing temperance sentiment, but other provinces are making a like forward movement.

Prohibition now is the goal in view. Manitoba has long been a storm center. When the legality of the last prohibitory measure, passed twenty months ago, was assured after a long and weary conflict in the courts, it was thought that no obstacle remained in the way of the act becoming a law at the end of the license year, but a reckoning must be made with the politicians. Premier Rabin now proposes a referendum, and this the prohibitionists are determined shall not be submitted, inasmuch as the act is already on the statute books, as in the province of Prince Edward Island, where it will be allowed to take its course. The outcome of the Manitoba situation is being watched with interest.

A Fallacy Exposed.

An incident occurring in Chicago demonstrates again the fallacy of the old saying, "Leave whisky alone, and it will leave you alone." A drunken man, reeling down one of the streets ran against and grossly insulted a lady who was walking with her husband. The husband resented the negro's conduct and as a result was shot five times with probably fatal results. The incident, says The New Voice, is merely one of a great number of similar occurrences in the course of every year, one of the fruits of the saloon system that neither personal temperance, local option, saloon substitutes nor state control in any way grapples with.

From Japan.

Cablegrams from Tokyo, Japan, report that a bill prohibiting the sale of alcoholic liquor to minors has passed the Japanese diet. This is probably in line with the agitation which has been going on in Japan for two or three years past. Such a measure failed of passage a year or two ago largely because the bill had been amended so as to introduce exceptions that in the judgment of the temperance leaders made it practically worthless.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Submission to the divine mind is essential for our personal happiness and future safety.—Rev. George Adams, Methodist, Brooklyn.

Elements of Commanding Power.

In all things obedience and self abnegation are the elements of commanding power.—Rev. Dr. Frank W. Luce, Methodist, St. Louis.

Using the Gospel Gun.

The gospel gun is Satan's dread, and the soul that has the courage to use it will put him to flight.—Rev. Dr. William J. Holtzclaw, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Returning From the Far Country.

The far country is never so far away but that the penitent prodigal can find his way back from it to the heavenly homestead.—Rev. Dr. Frank De Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Seeing the Good.

The very best trait one can develop is the art of seeing only the good, the perfect and the true, and these are discerned from the God standpoint.—Rev. E. E. Mason, Spiritualist, Brooklyn.

Only Remedy For Ills.

The Christian religion is not only the philosophy of the social fabric, but it is also the only remedy for the ills under which the race lies and from which the gospel sets men free.—Rev. Dr. Beattie, Louisville, Mo.

The Infinite Beauty.

Paul declared that eye hath not seen the good things God had for them that love him. It is only finite beauty that the eye can see; the infinitely beautiful is beyond its ken.—Rev. Dr. Charles W. Byrd, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Voluntary Choice.

The aggressive useful character is produced by the voluntary choice of Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour and following him as leader. By such characters God blesses the world.—Bishop Joyce, Methodist, Pittsburg.

Reliable Truth.

It is a blessed comfort to know that the large majority of the people desire an unchanging, reliable truth that will hold both in life and in death. Only let the anchor hold fast and we shall rest.—Rev. J. L. Lee, Presbyterian, New York.

For Poor as Well as Rich.

Christianity was made as much for the poor man who cannot make research as for the wealthy and cultured. The church is not narrow. She is only loyal to God and the teachings of Christ.—Rev. William Pardon, Roman Catholic, New York.

The Spiritual Sight.

Reason is better than sight. Reason is spiritual sight. Reason builds evidences on which faith, which simply confidence in God or right reason leaning on God, can rest satisfied and secure.—Rev. Dr. Landrum, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

Unselfish Service.

Man or woman can "enter into" have eternal life, unless there is unselfish service in their lives. Unselfish service is what gives life chief interest, brings us into its fullness, does not feed us on husks.—A. Bilkovsky, Universalist, Baltimore.

The Equipment of Life.

The knowledge that seeks no expression in service is absolutely worthless. The best thought and highest knowledge are the equipment for life. We live nobly. All vocations must be considered sacred. Industry is the power of the conscience of the race, and you are to stand by and serve.—Dr. George A. Gordon, Boston, to the Seniors.

First Sin the Hardest.

The first lie is the difficult lie to tell, the tenth, not the twentieth, not the fiftieth. It is the first glass of icy which is the hardest to drink, the one which the drunkard takes before he enters the reptile infested dungeons of delirium tremens. The first seed of sin which is hard to sow, not the fiftieth nor the one hundred.—Rev. Dr. Frank De Wint Talbot, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Intellectual Honesty.

Intellectual honesty is intellectual action, clearness and vigor. It is to know how to relate the truths of life, so as to give to each its due in a clear and constructive tone. To be courageous and make the deepest belief of the church conform to deep faiths of the heart of which has never been wholly barren and under Jesus Christ's teaching, been in the life of man.—Rev. G. Cunningham, Universalist, Kansas Mo.

Remorse and Repentance.

Cannot emphasize too deeply the difference between remorse and repentance. If sorrow for ill doing could assure of absolution, we might find that not only Judas, but all who have felt the overwhelming retribution, will be received into heaven's city, but the sorrow for which commends itself to God is a which takes cognizance not of the sin's consequence, but of its character as offensive to God.—Rev. Dr. Burrell, Dutch Reform Church, New York.

Teaching the Gospel.

Teaching is before teaching, but in teaching the knowledge of Christ it is not long before. Thus the gospel has spread from man to man, when a man acquired the grace of God first imparted this fact to his intimate friend and attempted to bring him in personal contact with Christ. This was but natural, but yet the gospel did not confine their teaching to men of their own race alone. Christianity spread over the world, as the gospel tells us, at the end, but the gospel says nothing where it shall end.—Rev. E. C. Congregationalist, Providence.

At recent church entertainment, a pastor made the announcement that Miss Blank would sing, "O that I have wings of a dove, that I might fly," accompanied by Mr. Also.—St. Paul Methodist Church

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

WHEN UNIVERSITY TREMBLED.

reported playing out of the main vein, and the decline had finally culminated in a frantic scramble for cover on the part of stockholders when Senator Ed-gren and a few other bears had made a determined raid on the floor of the exchange. Suddenly it came to the professor that he had heard the name of the Horseshoe Agnes in connection with other matters, and he sat down again, with a numb sensation in his limbs.

"The Horseshoe Agnes, did you say, Senator? That's the mine which the Seatons floated, isn't it?"

"Yes; and there's no reason why the stock should be where it is to-day, even though the lead is lost. The company has plenty of good acreage that has never been touched. Stockholders are a lot of sheep when it comes to a scare, however, and young Seaton couldn't hold 'em together when a few of us insiders sold short. Things went to the bottom, and, from what I hear, young Seaton may go, too."

"That is how I got the check, is it?"
asked the professor.

The Senator nodded, and walked to the window, where he looked down on the busy street. The professor gazed weakly at the broad back of the famous financier. The iron-gray hair, cut smoothly, rounded at the bottom, showed a sickle edge of bull neck. The strong, knotted hands, clasped at the man's back, told eloquently of his long fight as a poor prospector before he quit counting all his gold in one palm.
Even the back of such a man was discouraging to a non-belligerent nature, but the professor pulled himself together manfully.

"Senator Edgren, I return your check," he said, quietly.

The Senator gave a snort as he wheeled about.

"What's that?" he asked, the space between his brows narrowing perceptibly.

Many a clerk had changed his mind about asking for a raise in salary at hearing those two words, spoken in that particular tone, but the professor's face cleared as he laid the check on the desk.

"If you made that money in such a way as you have described, I cannot take it, Senator," he said. "Mr. Seaton, who is principal owner of the mine, is the holder of the mortgage on the university. He has always been more than generous, and I know that this foreclosure has been forced because this sudden break in Horseshoe Agnes has straitened him financially."

"But if you take up the mortgage you'll be doing him a greater benefit than if you let him foreclose, besides saving the University," said the Senator. He seldom argued, but certain aspects of this case were beginning to interest him.

The professor's hand fluttered a moment at his throat before he spoke.
The words "saving the University" had struck home. A picture flashed across his vision—the picture of his plans of a lifetime wrecked almost in an instant. He had only to pick up that slip of blue paper once more and the University would be given another chance. The Senator looked at it with something of curiosity in his eye.

Perhaps he understood a little of the struggle that was going on, for he considerately said nothing. Finally the professor backed two or three steps away from the hypnotizing influence of the blue check.

"It's something more than saving University, Senator," he said. "My voice was quite steady now. "It's a simple question of right or wrong. I know that, according to business ethics, I should take that check without questioning how the money was made. Perhaps if I were running a bank, or—or a saloon, it might be different. But the foundation of a university must be broader than that. Manifestly it would not be right me to pay young Mr. Seaton in money that had been wrung from him in this well, to put it frankly, in a questionable deal on the mining stock change."

A wave of purple surged into Senator's face.

"What do you call a questionable deal?" he shouted. "You fellows split hairs for a living generally and like children. Why, every dollar you handle, or that I handle, or that has gone into your university fund, has represented some disreputable transaction for each day of its existence, according to what you preach. I've taken a good deal of my money right from the grove where God put it in the solid rock.
I've taken a good deal from my fellows in the course of business, and I want to tell you that I consider my check to be as clean as the bright bar of gold that ever went from the smelter to the mint. It was won in a game in which every man had his share. We all knew that it was winning when we went on the floor of exchange to drive the last nail in Horseshoe Agnes. I won and you Seaton lost, and yet you say it was a questionable deal. You couldn't rouse young Seaton believe that."

"Probably not," said the professor.
He was sure of himself now, and spoke as clearly as if at chapel. "But I say that you think the Horseshoe Agnes is a good property, yet you've deliberately and hammered the stock down, as I believe you call it. You your utmost to create the impression that the mine was worthless, and, in all appearances, you succeeded. In your own statement I cannot take purity are wide apart, but I know where it leaves off, and I'll not go the line, even if the University is wrecked to-morrow and I am confronted with it."

The Senator tore the check and the pieces in his waste basket. To press his feelings he fell back on vocabulary of the old prospecting
He ran the gamut of his most curses forward and back, and then began in the middle and played ward both ends. When he had finished, he looked at the professor no protest came. The professor's was fastened on the window, but saw nothing of the hurrying thro low the great office building, and had heard not a word of the Senatirade. He saw the University ruins, and in his head was clashing one refrain:

"Going, going, gone!"

Something in the pathetic droop to the man's shoulders put a new note in the Senator's voice.

"Think it over, Buckwalter," he said, "and I'll write out a new check. Don't let your foolish conscience wreck your life. Where'd I be to-day if I'd weighed everything to a hair?"

"It's very kind of you, Senator," murmured the professor, "but I can't. It's all too plain to be disregarded. There's no misreading the signs."

And he walked out steadily enough, as many a man has walked among the ruins of his hopes.

But when the President of Argo University received a letter from young Seaton the next day, it was not the looked for notice of foreclosure. It told, in a somewhat disconnected way, how the superintendent of the Horseshoe Agnes had put a shot in the deserted twelfth level of the mine, where nobody had thought of looking for ore, and had opened a vein of sylvanite that would make any six other veins in the camp look like a knife-blade. In consequence, Horseshoe Agnes stock had simply gone skyward when the exchange opened. At the time Seaton's note was scrawled, the stock was twenty points higher than on the day of the big bear raid, and still climbing, and, provided the faculty had no objection, the holder of the mortgage wished to make a present of that paper, duly cancelled, to his alma mater.

"It is good to live," said the professor, as he raised his streaming face from his arms, "but I hope I'll never be put to such a test again. Ugh! I could fairly hear my conscience creak."

DAY OF PRAYER FOR PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SCHOOLS.

An appeal has gone out widely for the observance in all homes, churches and Sabbath schools of the second Lord's day in September in each year as a day of prayer for public and private schools. The movement was begun by the National Reform Association, and the suggestion has been endorsed by the Executive Committee of the Alliance of Reformed Churches, by the Presbyterian General Assembly (North), the General Synod of the Reformed Church (German), and other ecclesiastical bodies. Leading men in many churches have seconded the proposal, among whom are Mr. John R. Mott, of the Students' Christian Federation; the Rev. M. Rhodes, D. D., of the Lutheran Church; Bishop Foss, of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Dr. Henry C. Minton, Moderator last year of the Presbyterian General Assembly (North), and Dr. Francis L. Patton, late president of Princeton University.

Among the reasons assigned for this appeal is the magnitude of the moral and spiritual interests involved in the vast work of education. More than sixteen millions of pupils, or one-fifth of the whole nation, are in the schools, and nearly four hundred thousand teachers are employed in the work of instruction. This work is moulding the character and determining the destiny of the nation. The day of prayer for colleges has been observed for many years and with marked results for good, but there are almost one hundred times as many pupils in our schools as there are students in all our colleges, universities and technical and professional schools combined.

The general observance of such a day of prayer will deepen public interest in the whole work of education, will exalt and dignify the vocation of the teacher, will deepen in the mind of both teachers and pupils their sense of the importance of their work, and will help to call down on the vast work of education, both public and private, the blessing of Him who is the Father of lights and the Hearer of Prayer.

The Christian Statesman, published for thirty-five years under private ownership, has become the property of the National Reform Association, and has been changed into a monthly magazine of 32 pages. Dr. T. P. Stevenson, of Philadelphia, who, in conjunction with Dr. David McAllister, founded the paper in 1867, is editor-in-chief, and Dr. R. C. Wylie is associate editor and business manager. The magazine will be devoted to the cause of Christian citizenship in the public schools, the defense of the Sabbath, the Christian reformation of our marriage and divorce laws, and kindred movements of reform. Its price is $1 a year. The office of publication is 209 Ninth street, Pittsburg, where requests for sample copies may be addressed.

CONNECTIONAL.

The Board of Trustees of the Superannuate Fund met in the Publishing House on Wednesday, August 27th. Those present at the meeting were: Dr. Anson West, of Alabama; W. S. Baker, of St. Louis; J. L. Parkes, of Franklin, Tenn.; Jordan Stokes, Dr. J. J. Tigert, and Dr. J. R. Stewart. Dr. B. F. Lipscomb, of Virginia, was absent. Rev. A. F. Watkins, of Brookhaven, Miss., was chosen agent to collect the endowment fund for the support of superannuates. Dr. Watkins was, until recently, the president of Whitworth College, Mississippi, but he had resigned his position and returned to the pastorate. As our readers will learn from the news columns of this issue, Rev. A. F. Watkins, D. D., of the Mississippi Conference, has been put in the field as agent of the Fund for Superannuates. Dr. Watkins is a young and strong man, with a heart for this work—as who would not have? The proper care of our worn out preachers and of the helpless families of fallen soldiers is a cause which will promptly find its way to the heart of the Church. Now we have a plan and a man; why should not our great communion do this thing, and that handsomely?—Nashville Advocate.

ORPHANAGE OPENED.

The Methodist Orphanage was formally opened last Wednesday for the reception of children and several little ones were taken in. The public exercises incident to the opening will be held next month. Dr. J. Wiley Bledsoe, superintendent of the Orphanage, has not yet reached Richmond, but will probably be here in a few days.—Leader.

The discourses of the pastor, Rev. W. G. Burch, and his able assistant, Rev. S. Otto Wright, both young men, have attracted large crowds from a distance.—Dispatch.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, late pastor of Washington Street Methodist church, bade good-bye to his friends in the city to-day, and with his family left this afternoon to take up his residence in Ashland, as secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College. He bears with him the loving remembrances of the people of Petersburg.—Times.

Rev. Dr. Henry E. Johnson, pastor of Laurel Street Methodist church, is confined to his home, No. 603 west Main street, as a result of overtaking his strength.

He was on a visit to his farm in Chesterfield county, and while assisting in unloading a wagon-load of melons and vegetables, he injured his back. It is not thought to be anything serious, although he is suffering much pain.

There were no services at his church on last Wednesday night on account of his indisposition.—Dispatch.

The Methodist Preachers' Association resumed weekly meetings this morning. The secretary was not present, hence the absence of a detailed report. Rev. L. W. Guyer, vice-president, was elected president to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of the former president, Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, from the city, and all the local churches reported fine congregations yesterday.—Petersburg Progress.

Mr. J. F. Purdum, from Memorial church, attended the Quarterly Conference at Mt. Comfort on Tuesday. He reports a good work all over the circuit, and that Dr. Whitehead, who presided, preached good sermons. The meeting, which is conducted by Rev. E. V. Carson, of Amherst, and Mr. Dunkley, is growing in interest, and a great meeting is expected.—Appomattox and Buckingham Times.

The Anti-Saloon League of Onesterfield county held a meeting Wednesday at the court-house. The president and secretary were elected at the last meeting, and the following additional officers were elected yesterday: First Vice-President, Rev. T. R. Sanford; Second Vice-President, C. L. Ivey; Third Vice-President, P. B. Clarke; Treasurer, W. N. Perdue.

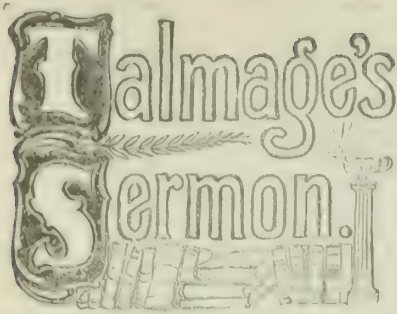

A meeting of the League has been called for September 13th, at which time plans will be discussed for holding another mass-meeting for the county, about October.

Rev. A. S. J. Rice, of Charlotte county, who, with his family, is visiting his aunt, Mrs. R. A. Jett, by request of the pastor, Rev. W. D. Litsinger, preached at Fairfields M. P. church on last Sunday at 11 A. M. At the close of Mr. Rice's sermon he was the recipient of kind complimentary words, and Mrs. E. T. Smith presented him with a bouquet formed of beautiful flowers. At the request of Rev. J. W. S. Robins, pastor, Mr. Rice will preach on next Sunday at 11 A. M. at Bethany.—Northern Neck News.

The Church Recorder says: The British and Foreign Bible Society have recently added to their list of publications copies of the New Testament translated into four hitherto unknown tongues. The New Testament is to be turned into Nyanja, for the tribes of the Shire river bank Nyassaland, and in this work the Livingstonia Mission of the United Free Church of Scotland, the Blantyre Mission of the Established Church of Scotland, and the Myera Mission of the Dutch Reformed Church are collaborating. A version in Yulunka is nearly ready for natives of the Falaba District of Sierra Leone, and in Bugotu for the inhabitants of Ysabel Island—one of the Solomon group. Lastly, a translation into Visayan, spoken by some two million per-

WASHINGTON. In this discourse Dr. Talmage raises high expectations of the day when that which is now only dimly seen will be fully revealed; text, Job xxvi, 11: "Lo, these are parts of his ways. But how little a portion is heard of him? But the thunder of his power who can understand?"

The least understood being in the universe is God. Blasphemous would be any attempt by painting or sculpture to represent him. Egyptian hieroglyphs tried to suggest him by putting the figure of an eye upon a sword, implying that God sees and rules, but how imperfect the suggestion! When we speak of him, it is almost always in language figurative. He is "Light" or "Day-spring From on High," or he is a "High Tower" or the "Fountain of Living Waters." His splendor is so great that no man can see him and live. When the group of great theologians assembled in Westminster abbey for the purpose of making a system of religious belief, they first of all wanted an answer to the question, "Who is God?" No one desired to undertake the answering of that overmastering question. They finally concluded to give the task to the youngest man in the assembly, who happened to be Rev. George Gillespie. He consented to undertake it on the condition that they would first unite with him in prayer for divine direction. He began his prayer by saying, "O God, thou art a spirit, infinite, eternal and unchangeable in thy being, wisdom, power, holiness, justice, goodness and truth." That first sentence of Gillespie's prayer was unanimously adopted by the assembly as the best definition of God. But after all, it was only a partial success, and after everything that language can do when put to the utmost strain and all we can see of God in the natural world and realize of God in the providential world we are forced to cry out with Job in my text: "Lo, these are parts of his ways. But how little a portion of him is heard? But the thunder of his power who can understand?"

Archbishop Tillotson and Dr. Dick and Timothy Dwight and Jonathan Edwards of the past and the mightiest theologians of this young century have discoursed upon the power of God, the attribute of omnipotence. And we have all seen demonstration of God's almightiness. It might have been far out at sea when in an equinoctial gale God showed what he could do with the waters. It might have been in an August thunderstorm in the mountains when God showed what he could do with the lightnings. It might have been in South America when God showed what he could do with the earthquakes. It might have been among the Alps when God showed what he could do with the avalanches. Our cheek was blanched, our breath stopped, our pulses fluttered, our whole being was terrorized, but we had seen only an instance of divine strength. What was the power of that storm compared with the power which holds all the oceans? What was the power that shook the hills compared with the power that swings the earth through all the centuries and for 6000 years and in a formative and incomplete shape for hundreds of thousands of years? What is that power that sustains our world compared with the power which rolls through immensity the entire solar system and all the constellations and galaxies and the universe? The mightiest intellect of man would give away if for a moment there came upon it the full appreciation of what omnipotence is. What you and I see and hear of divine strength are only "parts of his ways. But how little a portion is heard of him! But the thunder of his power who can understand?"

God's Omnipotence.

We try to satisfy ourselves with saying: "It is natural law that controls things. Gravitation is at work; centripetal and centrifugal forces respond to each other." But what is natural law? It is only God's way of doing things. At every point in the universe it is God's direct and continuous power that controls and harmonizes and sustains. That power withdrawn one instant would make the planetary system and all the worlds which astronomy reveals one universal wreck, bereft hemispheres, dismantled sunsets, dead constellations, debris of worlds. What power it must be that keeps the internal fires of our world imprisoned, only here and there spurring from a Cotopaxi or a Stromboli or from a Vesuvius, putting Pompeii and Herculaneum into sepulcher, but for the most part the internal fires chained in their cages of rock and century after century unable to break the chain or burst open the door! What power to keep the component parts of the air in right proportion, so that all around the world the nations may breathe in health, the frosts and the heats hindered from working universal demolition! Power, as Isaiah says, "to take up the isles as a very little thing"—Ceylon and Borneo and Hawaii as though they were pebbles; power to weigh the "mountains in scales" and the "hills in balances"—Tenerife and the Cordilleras. To move a rock we must have lever and screw and great machinery, but God moves the world with nothing but a word; power to create worlds and power to destroy them, as from the observatories again and again they have been seen red with flame, then pale with ashes and then scattered.

What is that power to us? asks some one. It is everything to us. With him on our side, the reconciled God, the sympathetic God, the omnipotent God, we may defy all human and satanic antagonisms, and when we are shut in by obstacles we can say, as did one of Frohisher's men when the sailor was describing how their ship was surrounded by icebergs in the Arctic sea, "The ice was strong, but God was stronger than the ice." And, whatever opposition we may have, our God is mightier than the opposition. All right with God, we may have the courage of the general dying on the battlefield. He asked to be turned, and when they said, "Which way shall we turn you?" he said, "Turn my face toward the enemy." What a challenge that was uttered by the old missionary hero, "If God be for us, who can be against us?" Think of it! God is the only being in the universe who has power to do as he pleases. All human and angelic forces have environments. There are things they cannot do, heights they cannot scale, depths they cannot fathom.

Evidences of Divine Power.

We get some little idea of the divine power when we see how it buries the proudest cities and nations. Ancient Memphis it has ground up until many of its ruins are no larger than your thumb nail, and you can hardly find a seventh large enough to remind you of your visit. The city of Tyre is under the sea which washes the shore on which are only a few crumbling pillars left. Sodom and Gomorrah are covered by waters so deathful that not a fish can live in them. Babylon and Nineveh are so blotted out of existence that not one uninjured shaft of their ancient splendor remains. Nothing but Omnipotence could have put them down and put them under. The antediluvian world was able to send to the postdiluvian world only one ship, with a very small passenger list. Omnipotence first railed the seas over the land and then told them to go back to their usual channels as rivers and lakes and oceans. At Omnipotent command the waters pouncing upon their prey and at Omnipotent command slinking back into their appropriate places. By such rehearsal we try to arouse our appreciation of what omnipotence is, and our reverence is excited, and our adoration is intensified, but after all we find ourselves at the foot of a mountain we cannot climb, hovering over a depth we cannot fathom, at the rim of a circumference we cannot compass, and we feel like first going down on our knees and then like falling flat upon our faces as we exclaim: "Lo, these are parts of his ways. But how little a portion is heard of him? But the thunder of his power who can understand?"

So all those who have put together systems of theology have discoursed also about the wisdom of God. Think of a wisdom which can know the end from the beginning, that knows the thirtieth century as well as the first century. We can guess what will happen, but it is only a guess. Think of a mind that can hold all the past and all the present and all the future. We can contrive and invent on a small scale, but think of a wisdom that could contrive a universe. Think of a wisdom that can learn nothing new, a wisdom that nothing can surprise, all the facts, scenes and occurrences of all time to come as plainly before it as though they had already transpired. He could have built all the material universe into one world and swung it, a glorious mass, through immensity, but behold his wisdom in dividing up the grandeur into innumerable worlds, rolling splendors on all sides, diversity, amplitude, majesty, infinity. Worlds, worlds, moving in complete order, shining with complete radiance. Mightiest telescope on one hand and most powerful microscope on the other, discovering in the plan of God not one imperfection. What but divine wisdom could have planned a human race and, before it started, built for it a world like this, pouring waters to slake human thirst and giving soils capacity to produce such food and lifting such a canopy of clouds, embroidered with such sunlight, and surrounding the world with such wonders that all the scientists of the ages have only begun to unroll them? Wisdom in magnitude and in atom, in archangel and in mollusk. Think of a wisdom that was able to form without any suggestion or any model to work by the eye, the ear, the hand, the foot, the vocal organs. No wonder that Galen, the most celebrated of medical authors among the ancients, fell on his knees at the overwhelming wisdom of God in the constitution of the human frame.

Our libraries are filled with the wisdom of the great thinkers of all time. Have you considered the far superior wisdom which fashioned the brain for all those thoughts of the Infinite mind that built those intellects? But it is only the millionth part of that wisdom that has come to mortal appreciation. Close next to every discovery is a wonder that has not been discovered. We see only one specimen among 10,000 specimens. What we know is overwhelmed by what we do not know. What the botanist knows about the flower is not more wonderful than the things he does not know about the flower. What the geologist knows about the rocks is not more amazing than the things which he does not know about them. The worlds that have been counted are only a small regiment of the armies of light, the hosts of heaven, which have never passed in review before mortal vision. What a God we have!

Past Understanding.

A tradition says that Abraham of the Old Testament was, when an infant, hidden in a cave because of the persecutions of Nimrod. The first time the child came out of the cavern it was night, and he looked up at a star and cried, "This is my God!" But the star disappeared, and Abraham said, "No, that cannot be my God." After awhile the moon rose, and Abraham said, "That is my God." But it set, and Abraham was again disappointed. After awhile the sun rose, and he said, "Why, truly, here is my God." But the sun went down, and Abraham was saddened. Not until the God of the Bible appeared to Abraham was he satisfied, and his faith was so great that he was called "the Father of the Faithful." All that the theologians know of God's wisdom is insignificant compared with the wisdom beyond human comprehension. The human race never has had and never will have enough brain or heart to measure the wisdom of God. I can think of only two authors who have expressed the exact facts. The one was Paul, who says: "Oh, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments and his ways past finding out!" The other author was the scientist who composed my text. I think he wrote it during a thunderstorm, for the chapter says much about the clouds and describes the tremor of the earth under the reverberations. Witty writers sometimes depreciate the thunder and say it is the lightning that strikes, but I am sure God thinks well of the thunder, or he would not make so much of it, and all up and down the Bible he uses the thunder to give emphasis. It was the thunder that shook Sinai when the law was given. It was with thunder that the Lord discomfited the Philistines at Ebenezer. Job pictures the war horse as having a neck clothed with thunder. St. John in an apocalyptic vision again and again heard the thunder. The thunder, which is now quite well explained by the electricians, was the overpowering mystery of the ancients, and, standing among those mysteries, Job exclaimed: "Lo, these are parts of his ways. But how little a portion is heard of him? But the thunder of his power who can understand?"

So, also, all systems of theology try to tell us what is omnipresence—that is, God's capacity to be everywhere at the same time. "Where is God?" said a heathen philosopher to a Christian man. The Christian answered, "Let me first ask you where he is not?" The child had it right when, asked how many Gods are there, and he answered, "One." "How do you know that?" he was asked again. He answered, "There is only room for one, for he fills earth and heaven." An author says that if a man were set in the highest heavens he would not be any nearer the essence of God than if he were in the center of the earth. I believe it. If this divine essence does not reach all places, what use in our prayer, for prayers are being offered to God on the other side of the earth as well as here, and God must be there and here to take suppl-

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

sons in the Philippine archipelago, is being undertaken. All are enterprises of great importance to philologists.—Dispatch.

The revival last week at Bethel church, Lancaster, was a glorious and refreshing season to all in attendance. Rev. Richard Ferguson, of Saluda, did the preaching in such an earnest and impressive manner as to completely win the hearts of the people. Many Christians date a deeper consecration from it and a goodly number were received in the church, with more to follow. The pastor, Rev. R. E. Bentley, has had a most successful year here, and is held in high esteem.

Rev. J. W. S. Robins begins a three weeks' revival next Sunday at Bethany, in lower Northumberland. Rev. C. R. James, of Irvington, leaves Monday to assist the first week. Revs. Wray and Bentley will assist the remainder of the time.—Virginia Citizen.

WILL BE ORGANIZED SUNDAY.

The new Ghent M. E. Sunday school, South, was organized in the lecture room of Central Baptist church, corner Olney road and Manteo street, at 4 P. M. Sunday, September 7th. Miss Lucile Newell sang a solo at the opening services.—Landmark.

LAST QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.

The fourth and last Quarterly Conference of this year of the Epworth M. E. church was held last evening by the Rev. Dr. William E. Judkins, presiding elder of this district. All of the present officials of the church were re-elected to serve for the coming Conference year, and Mr. Stevens was elected as the superintendent of the Sunday schools of the church.

The reports that were submitted to the presiding elder show the church to be in a most excellent state, both financially and religiously.—Landmark.

NEW CHURCH DEDICATED.

Newport News, Va., September 8th.—The new Grace Methodist Episcopal church, on Forty-sixth street, of which Rev. J. T. Green is pastor, was dedicated at the Sunday morning service, Bishop A. Coke Smith preaching the dedicatory sermon. The attractive and well-appointed little church was filled to overflowing, and the congregation heard an able and instructive discourse.

At night Rev. James Cannon, Jr., who is the father of the mission, which has developed into a self-sustaining church of no small proportions, preached to a large congregation, delivering a splendid sermon.

Rev. Mr. Cannon was one of the first pastors of old Washington Avenue Methodist church, now Trinity Methodist church, which recently abandoned the frame structure on Washington avenue for the large and handsome brownstone edifice it now occupies on Twenty-ninth street.—Dispatch.

THE VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

The Virginia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be held this year in Richmond, and preparations are now being made for the great gathering.

Owing to the fact that the past year with the churches of the Virginia Conference has been a most successful one in all lines of religious work, it is the expectation of prominent men identified with the denomination that the coming meeting will be one of the best of the one hundred and twenty annual meetings held yet.

The terms of four of the presiding elders in the Conference will expire with the Conference year, and just that many districts will have new heads after the appointments are given out. These are Rev. J. H. Amis, of the Rappahannock district; Rev. Paul Whitehead, of the Lynchburg district; Rev. W. C. Vaden, of the Portsmouth district, and Rev. William E. Judkins, of the Norfolk and Eastern Shore district.—Lynchburg News.

THE HOLINESS MEETING.

The Wakefield Holiness camp-meeting closed last Friday night with gratifying results in the edification of believers and in the conversion of sinners. The attendance was good and the interest increased to the close. Messrs. Brown, Oakey, and Harrell assisted in the preaching. This meeting is regarded as one of the most helpful held on the grounds in the years past.

Misconceptions of the whole work are being dissipated. Prejudice is giving away. Candid people are coming to see that the camp-meeting and the holiness movement, with which it stands connected, mean only good to the souls of men. Especially is this true of thoughtful people who have not yet settled the matter of personal religion.

Let it be repeated here that holiness is wholeness (not wholesome, as your types made it in my letter in last Thursday's Dispatch) in Christian character. It is in line and on the level with the teachings of the Word of God in regard to Christian experience. Holiness interprets the Bible as the statement of a system of practicable and reasonable requirements at the hands of men. Holiness realized makes consciously true to the believer's heart the declaration of the Lord: "My yoke is easy and my burden is light."

It is believed that the holiness camp-meeting here will be a permanent institution. It is easily accessible to the populations of the larger Virginia cities, as well as to the surrounding country.

A ten days' meeting will be held next year, date to be announced.—Dispatch.

THE NEW CENTRAL CHURCH.

The scantling is down, and the new Central stands gracefully out, "a thing of beauty." That it will be "a joy forever" to the worshippers who bow in reverence at its shrine is certain. Thirty-odd years ago, when the Rev. Joe Martin, then in the hey-day of his usefulness, thundered eloquently the doctrine of Wesley from the pulpit of modest, unpretentious little Wesley chapel, which was far too small to accommodate the multitudes that flocked to hear this marvel of oratory, a new and larger church became a necessity.

Martin, aggressive, zealous and with a tenacity of purpose that boded success to all his undertakings, started the ball, and in a little while sufficient encouragement was given to the godly people of their pent-up chapel to move earnestly in the direction of which the old house of worship, that has just passed into other hands and closed its doors to them, was the outcome.

Ives and Thomas, Butt and Owens, Neville and Thompson, Hunter and Warren, and a host of others whom The Landmark cannot now call to mind, boldly faced what was then deemed almost an impossibility.

The ladies, indomitably industrious, ardently zealous, put their shoulders to the wheel and in a little while a new, spacious structure—the one that has just passed out of the keeping of those who erected it—sprang into existence.

There are many now living who remember well the struggle to rear it, its dedication, and the crowd which filled the lecture room of the now cherished old edifice as its apparently inspired young divine proclaimed to the immense throng the beautiful story of the Cross. His face beaming, he seemed another man as he stood facing a multitude of people, that hung with rapture on his burning words, eloquent, thrilling and impressive.

The old congregation of old Central enters the new Central to-morrow. As with its predecessor, its lecture room will be the scene of its inaugural ceremonies, and will doubtless be packed, as the structure they are leaving was in the long ago.—Landmark.

METHODIST PREACHERS.

The Methodist preachers convened in their usual weekly session at 10:30 A. M. yesterday, with the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, in the chair.

Rev. John Jefferson, a local Methodist divine from Petersburg, and Rev. Joseph Smith, D. D., of New York, who is conducting a ten-days series of evangelistic meetings in Portsmouth, were visitors at the meeting.

The deliberations were opened with prayer by Rev. John Jefferson.

Reports from the following pastors of how Sunday was observed at their churches were rendered:

Rev. George H. McFaden had a fine Sunday school at Wright Memorial and good congregations at the 11 A. M. service. At night he had a very large congregation. The services of the entire day were hopeful and uplifting.

Rev. W. R. Crowder reported a most delightful day at Denbys church, Norfolk county. He preached at the 11 o'clock morning service and Rev. Geo. Wesley Jones preached at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The revival meeting which has been in progress during the past week is beginning to take hold of the congregations, and there is prospect ahead for a successful meeting. Rev. George Wesley Jones, who has been preaching since the beginning of the series, will preach every night this week.

Rev. George Wesley Jones said that the Holy Spirit was visible in its work at Trinity church Sunday. He preached morning and night. At the evening service three gentlemen in the audience manifested a deep concern on the subject of salvation.

Rev. C. W. Cain worshipped at Park View in the morning, and on Sunday afternoon and night heard Rev. Joseph Smith, D. D., the evangelist, with pleasure and profit.

Rev. Mr. Wray preached at Huntersville Sunday morning for the pastor Rev. E. K. Odell, and conducted the communion service. At night Mr. Odell conducted the service. He reported having the largest attendance at the Sunday school during his pastorate, and that the collections were an increase over former Sundays.

Rev. W. Asbury Christian preached morning and evening to large congregations at Memorial church, Berkley.

At Liberty Street church, South Norfolk, Dr. S. S. Lambeth preached to fine congregations and had pleasant and profitable services.

Rev. R. H. Bennett preached to a large congregation at Cumberland Street Sunday morning on the "Issue of Life," and at 8 P. M. another fine audience heard Rev. Graham H. Lambeth preach on "Moses' Faith," which enabled him to see Him who is invisible.

Rev. Daniel T. Merritt had altogether a very profitable day at Port Norfolk. He had a most excellent Sunday school session, a good congregation at 11 A. M. and a most helpful Epworth League meeting in the afternoon. At the evening service the audience was an unusually large one.

Rev. Dr. W. E. Judkins preached at Epworth church Sunday morning to a large congregation, and at night the pastor, Rev. R. H. Bennett, preached to an overflow audience the first of a series of sermons on "Marriage and the Home."

Rev. J. B. Merritt, chaplain of the Seaman's Bethel, went his usual round Sunday and had a very good day.

Rev. E. T. Dadmun, pastor, preached at Centenary church Sunday morning, and Rev. Dr. Judkins preached at night. Mr. Dadmun left yesterday morning for Kellar, on the Eastern Shore of Virginia, to assist the Rev. W. G. Bates in a protracted meeting.

Rev. C. H. McGhee reported a good Sunday school at Lambert's Point. He preached to a good congregation at the 11 A. M. service, baptized an infant the afternoon, and preached again at night.

Rev. J. K. Joliff reported a steady increase in the congregations at Queen Street church. The Sunday morning congregation was unusually large and the communion service a most helpful one.

Rev. Dr. J. P. Barrett had a busy and profitable day at the Christian Memorial Temple Sunday. All of the services were well attended.

At McKendree church, Rev. W. R. Proctor was greeted both morning and night with very large congregations, who were most earnest and attentive hearers of "The Word." Mr. Bennett received two members by certificate.

Rev. John Jefferson, of Petersburg, gave a most interesting and encouraging account of Methodism in Petersburg. He said that it was on the upward grade spiritually and otherwise. He referred to the warm reception Dr. Starr had received at Washington street church, and said that the church will have a prosperous career under his ministry.

Rev. Dr. Joseph Smith said that he had a most delightful day Sunday, and that there is a blessed outlook at the tabernacle church. He said that the meetings Sunday were remarkable for the number of seekers for religion and seekers of full salvation. He said the meetings would continue ten days, closing Tuesday of next week.

On motion of Rev. C. W. Cain, Dr. Smith was invited to attend the preachers' meeting next Monday morning and give a Bible reading or a talk on any subject he may select.

The session adjourned with the benediction by Dr. Smith.—Virginian-Pilot.

THE EDUCATED WOMAN.

It is announced that the colleges and universities of the United States graduated, this year, between four and five thousand young women; and it is also officially given out at Washington that, while in the decade 1890-1900 the men students in colleges and universities had increased sixty per cent., the women students had increased one hundred and forty-eight per cent. Such facts as these are rather terrifying to us of the sterner sex.—Western Advocate.

Sunshine Lodge, in Fairfax county, expects to commence the erection of a hall in the near future.

SPECIAL RATES TO CALIFORNIA AND THE NORTHWEST, VIA SOUTHERN RAILWAY.

During the months of September and October the Southern Railway will sell one way second class settlers' tickets to California and the Northwest at greatly reduced rates. Superb service is offered via this route. Before arranging your trip it will pay you to see a representative of the Southern Railway for detail information. The schedule and service via this popular route is without equal, in many respects.

Sep 11-3t

The September number of The American Illustrated Methodist Magazine opens with a brightly written scientific article by Evander McIver Sweet, entitled "Why the Sun is Not Our Time Standard." The article is well illustrated, and brings together a great many facts that deserve to be known.

Coulson Macneille tells the story of the Doukhobors, a Russian sect which, after suffering much persecution in their native country, and making an experiment of Cyprus as a colony, finally removed to Western Canada.

"Concerning Gray's Elegy," by William Andrews, describes Stoke Pogis and its neighborhood, and deals with the circumstances that called forth that great masterpiece. The illustrations are interpretive.

cartons which are offered thousands of miles apart. Ubiquity! No one but God. And what an assurance of edness, an everywhere presence, and what a re-enforcement when we need help! God on the throne and God with the kneeling child—yes, even ing prayer at his mother's lap. God above you, God beneath you, God on the right of you, God on the left of you, God within you. No pantheism, for that teaches that all things are God, but Jehovah possesses all things, as our souls possess our bodies. God at the diameter and circumference of everything, as close to you as the food you put to your lips, as the coat you put upon your back, as the sunlight that shines in your face. Appreciation of that, if through Jesus Christ, the atoning Saviour, we are right with God, ought to give us a serenity, a tranquillity, that nothing could upset. Would it make us gloomy? No, for God is the God of joy and will augment our happiness.

God's Infinite Love.

We have all been painfully reminded in our own experiences that we cannot be in two places at the same time, and yet here comes the thought that God can be in all places at the same time. Madler, the astronomer, went on with his explorations of the heavens until he concluded that the star Alcyone, one of the Pleiades, was the center of the universe and it was a fixed world and all the other worlds revolved around that world, and some think that that world is heaven and God's throne is there and there reside the nations of the blessed. But he is no more there than he is here. Indeed Alcyone has been found to be in motion, and it also is revolving around some great center. But no place has yet been found where God is not present by sustaining power. Omnipresence! Who fully appreciates it? Not I; not you. Sometimes we hear him in a whisper; sometimes we hear him in the voice of the storm that jars the Adirondacks. But we cannot swim across this ocean. The finite cannot measure the infinite. We feel as Job did after finding God in the gold mines and the silver mines of Asia, saying, "There is a vein for the silver and a place for the gold where they find it." And after exploring the heavens as an astronomer and finding God in distant worlds and becoming acquainted with Orion and Mazzaroth and Arcturus and noticing the tides of the sea the inspired poet expresses his incapacity to understand such evidences of wisdom and power and says: "Lo, these are parts of his ways? But how little a portion is heard of him? But the thunder of his power who can understand?"

So every system of theology has attempted to describe and define the divine attribute of love. Easy enough is it to define fatherly love, motherly love, conjugal love, fraternal love, sisterly love and love of country, but the love of God defies all vocabulary. For many hundreds of years poets have tried to sing it, and painters have tried to sketch it and ministers of the gospel to preach it, and martyrs in the fire and Christians on their deathbeds have extolled it, and we can tell what it is like, but no one has yet fully told what it is. Men speak of the love of God as though it were first felt between the pointing of the Bethlehem star and the pounding of the crucifixion hammer. But no! Long before that existed the love of God.

The nature of God never changes, and from all eternity that holy passion glowed in the Infinite, and I think he was throwing out worlds into space and inhabiting them and more worlds for the application of that love. He may not have told the other worlds what he did for this world, as he has not told us what he did for them. I think the love of God was demonstrated in mightier worlds before our little world was fitted up for human residence. Will a man owning 50,000 acres of land put all the cultivation on a half acre? Will God make a million worlds and put his chief affection on one small planet? Are the other worlds and larger worlds standing vacant, uninhabited, while this little world is crowded with inhabitants? No, it takes a universe of worlds to express the love of God. And there are other ransoms and other rescues and other redemptions, as there may be other millenniums and other resurrection mornings and judgment days than those of our world. But in the space of six feet by five was comprised the mightiest evidence of God's love that any world ever saw or ever will see. Compressed on two planks joined together as a cross, there was enough agony there concentrated, if distributed, to put whole nations into torture. That God allowed the assassination of his own Son for the rescue of our world is all the evidence needed that he loved the world. Go ahead, O church of God! Go ahead, O world, and tell as well as you can what the love of God is, but know beforehand that Paul was right when he said, "It passeth knowledge." Let other poets take up the story of God's love where William Cowper and Isaac Watts and Charles Wesley and Horatius Bonar left it, and let other painters improve upon the "Sistine Madonna" and the "Adoration of the Magi" and the "Crucifixion" as Raphael and Titian and Claude and Correggio presented them. Let the German pulpit orator take up the theme of God's love where Frederick Tholuck left it, let Italian pulpit take it up where Gavazzi left it, let French pulpit orator take up the theme where Bourdelone left it, let the Swiss pulpit orator take up the theme where Merle D'Aubigne left it, let the English pulpit take it up where George Whitefield left it, let the Scotch pulpit take it up where Dr. Candlish left it, let the Welsh pulpit take it up where Christmas Evans left it, and let the American pulpit take it up where Archibald Alexander and Dr. Kirk and Matthew Simpson left it. But the world will never appreciate fully the love of God until they hear from his own lips the outburst of his infinite and everlasting affection.

A Glorious Hour.

Only glimpses of God have we in this world. But what an hour it will be when we first see him, and we will have no more fright than I feel when I now see you. It will not be with mortal eye that we will behold him, but with the vision of a cleansed, forgiven and perfected spirit. Of all the quintillion ages of eternity, to us the most thrilling hour will be the first hour when we meet him as he is. This may account for something you have all seen and may not have understood. Have you not noticed how that after death the old Christian looks young again or the features resume the look of 20 or 30 years before? The weariness is gone out of the face; there is something strikingly restful and placid; there is a pleased look where before there was a disturbed look. What has wrought the change? I think the dying Christian saw God. At the moment the soul left the body what the soul saw left its impression on the countenance. I think that is what gave that old Christian face after death the radiant and triumphant look. The bestormed spirit has reached the harbor; the hard battle of life is ended in victory.

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

OPENING EXERCISES OF THE BLACKSTONE FEMALE INSTI- TUTE.

The opening exercises of the Blackstone Female Institute will take place as follows: The opening sermon, September 21st, 11 A. M., by Rev. T. J. Taylor, Crewe, Va., at Crenshaw's church; sermon before the Young Woman's Christian Association, 8 P. M., by Rev. Bascom Dey, Hollydale, Va., at the Institute chapel; the opening address Monday evening, September 22d, 8 P. M., by Rev. J. B. Winn, Boydton, Va., at the Institute chapel.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND MOD- ERN CIVILIZATION.

We take from the Christian Advocate (New York) some extracts—we wish we had space for the entire sermon—of the baccalaureate sermon preached in Syracuse, N. Y., on Sunday, June 8, 1902, by the Rev. James R. Day, LL. D., Chancellor of Syracuse University. It is a just, but terrific, arraignment of the liquor traffic. We especially commend it to the members of our churches who think dispensaries the proper attitudes of Christians to the liquor traffic:

"For what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?"—2 Cor. 6: 14.

The Lord never has made compromises with sin that holiness might become more effective; never has made concessions to forms of iniquity that He might get a right of way for forms of truth. He gave in the beginning and always has given unmixed truth. The commandments are unqualified and for all. His people were a peculiar people and separate. They were not allowed for purposes of what sometimes seemed wise expedients to join with outside peoples, or to partake of anything heathen at whatever profit. Again and again they were miserably slain for forgetting this. It was a long discipline of undeviating, uncompromising truth. In the new kingdom the principle is laid down clearly, "Be ye separate." "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?" The great expounder of that kingdom, who illustrated its spirit with a greater fullness than any other, said: "Shall we do evil that good may come? God forbid."

DOCTRINE THAT THE END JUSTIFIES THE MEANS REPUDIATED.

Righteous people are still a peculiar people. Their code is a high and holy one. It is not one of expediency. They are to do right, and only right. They are to do nothing, have nothing, go nowhere that is not right. Intelligent Christians always have repudiated the thought that the end justifies the means. Christ did not practice it. He did not teach it. His Gospel squarely antagonized the evils of the world, and that was what made it unpopular. It was an age in which many religions were tolerated at Rome. Christianity was not. It was uncompromising. It did not try to conform to usages or to incorporate them if they had any mixture of evil. It faced them with a bold front and overthrew them. It was only when its teachers became sunken and corrupted and blinded by personal ambition, power, luxury, that it affiliated with the world. And you know the history. The story of darkness, the Middle Age story, is a familiar one. The Church got in a hurry and incorporated heathenism, and brought in as a compromise many of its views, tastes and forms. Instead of being content to let the leaven work, it took the coarse meal unleavened and tried to work it without leaven. It got in a hurry for the mass of mankind—rulers, tribes, nations, whole peoples were accommodated with a place in the Church of Christ, without its spirit or character, with no affinity or likeness or sympathy. Was it a wise and prudent policy? It seemed to pay! It made converts! Christianity seemed to succeed marvellously. The heathen became heathen Christians. There were plenty of them—heathen priests at the altars and heathen worshippers. But they all called Christ Lord. That was the gain. They were the same old characters, but they called themselves by the Christian name. You know the result. Civilization was set back a thousand years.

We have learned that Christianity must have the Spirit of Christ. It cannot compromise. It must stand for purity, for separateness. For nineteen centuries a minority has uttered its protest against compromise with sin. Its voice has rung out in unmistakable tones at the price of life and reputation and this world's goods. The Christian Church to-day stands for that principle, is that protest.

Its mission is to purify the world. Not to lessen evil, but to extirpate it; not to change its form, but to annihilate it in all forms; not to mix it in, in moderate quantities, and absorb it, but to destroy it root and branch. Its golden text is, "Be ye not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind." The attitude is absolute. The power is not an adjustment of worldly prudence and expedients, but the regenerative life and light of the divine Gospel in a soil cut through and turned up and torn apart by the gleaming plow-shares of the commandments. These prohibitions are sent ahead. And the commandments and the regenerating power of the Gospel co-operating, clean of all forces and forms of sin, are the hope of the world's salvation.

CHRISTIANITY CANNOT COMPROMISE WITH SIN.

Christianity as compromise with sin, even a little of it, even a modified form of it, is impossible to your thought. That is not the Christianity which you have been taught. It must be all clean and separate institutionally from all uncleanness of every kind. It must not institutionally bear the name or take on any form of those things which harm men. It must avoid the very appearance of evil. You insist that it shall stand far and away and apart from those practices that are tracked through the ages by wrecked homes, ruined manhood, graves of shame, lost souls. From all this it must be as widely separate to your thoughts as heaven is from hell. As well put spots on the sun to overcome the darkness of midnight as to mix into Christianity the institutions and practices that curse the race, in order to relieve the race of such curses. This principle must be conceded by intelligent men.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC IS A SIN.

But what are the sins with which the Gospel must not compromise? Perhaps what we call sins are not sins; therefore what we disallow may be allowed, and the Gospel may have no war with it except in excessive forms. We come to the Gospel for our light upon that point. A man who stood for it said of an innocent practice which confused the thought of men concerning the truth, "I will not do it again while the world stands if it offend my brother." The effect of a thing upon your neighbor is the gauge. And a practice which is disastrous to men, which interferes with their happiness and prosperity, which impoverishes and disgraces, which brings upon the children and wife dishonor, distress, and hurries the man to the grave is a sinful practice. The man who requires any argument upon that point is of too dull moral sense to discuss New Testament ethics. Whether you find it in codified and specified form or not, it is as plain as light that that human practice which makes widows, orphans, fills penitentiaries and asylums, and digs a hundred thousand graves every year, is sin. And that thing which carries forward that work as a traffic is a sinful traffic; that practice to which may be traced the woes of the living and of the damned is a monstrous practice. And anybody who sympathizes with it or acquiesces in such a practice sins. If he does not sin there are no sinners. And a man who engages in a practice which he knows betrays thousands into ruin sins in so far as his example or business goes in that direction. Sins are not all codified in the Ten Commandments. You voice Cain, not Christ, when you say, "Am I my brother's keeper?" One of the most sacred of all of the commandments of the Gospel is that you love your neighbor as yourself. And if you harm that neighbor by a traffic that despoils him, in his moments of weakness and temptation, of his character, and blights and curses his home, you violate the all-inclusive new commandment left us by our Lord, and sin a horrible sin against your brother. THE CHRISTIAN ATTITUDE TOWARD THE

LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

What should be the Christian attitude toward such a traffic or practice that destroys men? Should it excuse, apologize, extenuate, or should it fight it in every form to the death, to the end of time, if need be? Should it substitute something of like kind with this evil in order to overcome it? What was the attitude of Christ? Did He teach the disciples how to run kindergartens of evil? Did He tell them to have some schools of little Pharisees of the less objectionable kind—kind of undistilled Pharisees—because He knew

CHAPTER IV.

MRS. MAVOR'S STORY.

THE days that followed the Black Rock Christmas were anxious days and weary, but not for the brightest of my life would I change them now, for, as after the burning heat or rocking storm the dying day lies beautiful in the tender glow of the evening, so these days have lost their weariness and lie bathed in a misty glory. The years that bring us many ills and that pass so stormfully over us bear away with them the ugliness, the weariness, the pain, that are theirs, but the beauty, the sweetness, the rest, they leave untouched, for these are eternal. As the mountains, that near at hand stand jagged and scarred, in the far distance repose in their soft robes of purple haze, so the rough present fades into the past, soft and sweet and beautiful.

I have set myself to recall the pain and anxiety of those days and nights when we waited in fear for the turn of the fever, but I can only think of the patience and gentleness and courage of her who stood beside me, bearing more than half my burden. And, while I can see the face of Leslie Graeme, ghostly or flushed, and hear his low moaning or the broken words of his delirium, I think chiefly of the bright face bending over him and of the cool, firm, swift moving hands that soothed and smoothed and rested, and the voice, like the soft song of a bird in the twilight, that never failed to bring peace.

Mrs. Mavor and I were much together during those days. I made my home in Mr. Craig's shack, but most of my time was spent beside my friend. We did not see much of Craig, for he was heart deep with the miners, laying plans for the making of the league the following Thursday, and, though he shared our anxiety and was ever ready to relieve us, his thought and his talk had mostly to do with the league.

Mrs. Mavor's evenings were given to the miners, but her afternoons mostly to Graeme and to me, and then it was I saw another side of her character. We would sit in her little dining room, where the pictures on the walls, the quaint old silver and bits of curiously cut glass all spoke of other and different days, and thence we would roam the world of literature and art. Keenly sensitive to all the good and beautiful in these, she had her favorites among the masters, for whom she was ready to do battle, and when her argument, instinct with fancy and vivid imagination, failed, she swept away all opposing opinion with the swift rush of her enthusiasm, so that, though I felt she was beaten, I was left without words to reply. Shakespeare and Tennyson and Burns she loved, but not Shelley or Byron or even Wordsworth. Browning she knew not and therefore could not rank him with her noblest three, but when I read to her "A Death in the Desert" and came to the noble words at the end of the tale,

"For all was as I say, and now the man Lies as he once lay, breast to breast with God."

the light shone in her eyes, and she said: "Oh, that is good and great! I shall get much out of him. I had always feared he was impossible." And "Paracelsus," too, stirred her. But when I recited the thrilling fragment, "Prosper," on to that closing rapturous cry,

"Then a light, then thy breast—
Oh, thou soul of my soul, I shall clasp thee again."

And with God be the rest!"

the red color faded from her cheek, her breath came in a sob, and she rose quickly and passed out without a word. Ever after Browning was among her gods. But when we talked of music she, adoring Wagner, soared upon the wings of the mighty "Tannhauser," far above, into regions unknown, leaving me to walk soberly with Beethoven and Mendelssohn. Yet with all our free, frank talk there was all the while that in her gentle courtesy which kept me from venturing into any chamber of her life whose door she did not set freely open to me. So I vexed myself about her, and when Mr. Craig returned the next day from the Landing, where he had been for some days, my first questions were:

"Who is Mrs. Mavor? And how, in the name of all that is wonderful and unlikely, does she come to be here? And why does she stay?"

He would not answer then. Whether it was that his mind was full of the coming struggle or whether he shrank from the tale I know not. But that night when we sat together beside his fire he told me the story while I smoked. He was worn with his long, hard drive and with the burden of his work, but as he went on with his tale, looking into the fire as he told it, he forgot all his present weariness and lived again the scenes he painted for me. This was his story:

"I remember well my first sight of her as she sprang from the front seat of the stage to the ground, hardly touching her husband's hand. She looked a mere girl. Let's see, five years ago—she couldn't have been a day over twenty-three. She looked barely twenty. Her swift glance swept over the group of miners at the hotel door and then rested on the mountains standing in all their autumn glory.

"I was proud of our mountains that evening. Turning to her husband, she exclaimed:

"Oh, Lewis, are they not grand and lovely too?"

"Every miner lost his heart then and there, but all waited for Abe, the driver, to give his verdict before venturing an opinion. Abe said nothing until he had taken a preliminary drink, and then, calling all hands to fill up, he lifted his glass high and said solemnly:

"Boys, here's to her."

"Like a flash every glass was emptied, and Abe called out:

"Fill her up again, boys; my treat!"

"He was evidently quite worked up. Then he began, with solemn emphasis:

"Boys, you hear me: she's a No. 1, triple X, the pure quill with a head on it; she's a!"

"And for the first time in his Black Rock history Abe was stuck for a word. Some one suggested 'angel.'"

"Angel!" repeated Abe, with infinite contempt. 'Angel be blowed!' I paraphrase here. 'Angels ain't in the same month with her. I'd like to see any blanked angel swing my team around them curves without a shiver.'

"Held the lines herself, Abe?" asked a miner.

"That's what," said Abe, and then he went off into a fusillade of scintillating profanity expressive of his esteem for the girl who had swung his team round the curves, and the miners nodded to each other and winked their entire approval of Abe's performance, for this was his specialty.

"Very decent fellow, Abe, but his talk wouldn't print."

Here Craig paused, as if balancing Abe's virtues and vices.

"Well," I urged, "who is she?"

"Oh, yes," he said, recalling himself.

"She is an Edinburgh young lady; met Lewis Mavor, a young Scotch-Englishman, in London, wealthy, good family and all that, but fast and going to pieces at home. His people, who own large shares in these mines here, as a last resort send him out here to reform. Curiously innocent ideas those old country people have of the reforming properties of this atmosphere. They send their young bloods here to reform—here in this devil's camp ground, where a man's lust is his only law and when, from sheer monotony, a man must betake himself to the only excitement of the place, that offered by the saloon. Good people in the east hold up holy bands of horror at these godless miners; but I tell you it's asking these boys a good deal to keep straight and clean in a place like this. I take my excitement in fighting the devil and doing my work generally, and that gives me enough, but these poor chaps, hard worked, homeless, with no break or change—God help them and me!" And his voice sank low.

"Well," I persisted, "did Mavor reform?"

Again he roused himself.

"Reform? Not exactly. In six months he had broken through all restraint, and, mind you, not the miners' fault. Not a miner helped him down. It was a sight to make angels weep when Mrs. Mavor would come to the saloon door for her husband. Every miner would vanish. They could not look upon her shame, and they would send Mavor forth in charge of Billy Breen, a queer little chap who had belonged to the Mavors in some way in the old country, and between them they would get him home. How she stood it puzzles me to this day, but she never made any sign, and her courage never failed. It was always a bright, brave, proud face she held up to the world, except in church. There it was different. I used to preach my sermons, I believe, mostly for her—but never so that she could suspect—as bravely and as cheerily as I could, and as she listened, and especially as she sang—how she used to sing in those days!—there was no touch of pride in her face, though the courage never died out, but appeal, appeal! I could have cursed aloud the cause of her misery or wept for the pity of it. Before her baby was born he seemed to pull himself together, for he was quite mad about her, and from the day the baby came—talk about miracles!—from that day he never drank a drop. She gave the baby over to him, and the baby simply absorbed him.

"He was a new man. He could not drink whisky and kiss his baby. And the miners it was really absurd if it were not so pathetic. It was the first baby in Black Rock, and they used to crowd Mavor's shop and peep into the room at the back of it—I forgot to tell you that when he lost his position as manager he opened a hardware shop, for his people chucked him, and he was too proud to write home for money—just for a chance to be asked in to see the baby. I came upon Nixon standing at the back of the shop after he had seen the baby for the first time, sobbing hard, and to my question he replied:

"It's just like my own."

"You can't understand this, but to men who have lived so long in the mountains that they have forgotten what a baby looks like, who have had experience of humanity only in its roughest, foulest form, this little mite, sweet and clean, was like an angel fresh from heaven, the one link in all that black camp that bound them to what was purest and best in their past. "And to see the mother and her baby handle the miners—oh, it was all beautiful beyond words! I shall never forget the shock I got one night when I found Old Ricketts nursing the baby. A drunken old beast he was, but there he was, sitting, sober enough, making extraordinary faces at the baby, who was grubbing at his nose and whiskers and cooing in blissful delight. Poor Old Ricketts looked as if he had been caught stealing and, muttering something about having to go, gazed wildly round for some place in which to lay the baby, when in came the mother saying in her own sweet, frank way: "Oh, Mr. Ricketts—she didn't find out till afterward his name was Shaw—would you mind keeping her just a little longer? I shall be back in a few minutes." And Old Ricketts guessed he could wait.

"But in six months mother and baby between them transformed Old Ricketts into Mr. Shaw, fire boss of the mines, and then, in the evenings, when she would be singing her baby to sleep, the little shop would be full of miners, listening in dead silence to the baby songs and the English songs and the Scotch songs she poured forth without stint, for she sang more for them than for her baby. No wonder they adored her. She was so bright, so gay, that she brought light with her when she went into the camp, into the pits, for she went down to see the men work, or into a sick miner's shack, and many a man, lonely and sick for home or wife or baby or mother, found in that back room cheer and comfort and courage, and to many a poor broken wretch that room became, as one miner put it, 'the anteroom to heaven.'"

Mr. Craig paused, and I waited. Then he went on slowly:

"For a year and a half that was the happiest home in all the world till one day"—

There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

WOMAN'S COLLEGE COURSE prepares directly for Randolph-Macon Woman's College. An extract from a letter written by President Smith, of the Woman's College, is to the point: "I take pleasure in saying that the three students who came to us last year as graduates of your excellent institution entered college classes, and showed themselves qualified for them. This is no more than must reasonably be expected, seeing that your course has been so carefully adjusted to ours and ten of your faculty are Randolph-Macon graduates."

LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND MODERN CIVILIZATION.

men would in certain numbers always be insincere and hollow in their pretenses? Did He set up some genteel and well-regulated orderly harlot houses because He knew the social evil would be restrained with difficulty only after long years? Did He arrange for schools to teach men to steal in moderation because we always should have thieves? Did He arrange to have men taught to lie within bounds? These things are no more monstrous than is the proposition made to us that the Church of Christ establish kindergarten beer shops and give her young men lessons in the genteel drink habit.

Such things are entirely impossible to your thought of the Gospel. You properly associate all of these things with darkness. Between Belial and Christ there can be no concord.

Things that harm men the Gospel can have no sympathy with whatever. It refuses to use them even for good purposes. It assumes but one attitude toward them, that of uncompromising hostility. Whatever harms the race it purposes to destroy. And it destroys by its own inherent power and its own agencies. It does not remove ignorance by being a little ignorant, or superstitions by being a little superstitious, or bigotry by being a little bigoted, or uncleanness by being a little unclean, or drunkenness by being a little drunk. It is altogether holy and sober, and requires its friends to be so. There is not a hint anywhere that it will be satisfactory for the people to be partially good or good gradually; to leave off harmful things and to remove harmful institutions by slow stages. The demand is unconditional and all-comprehensive. All quit, quit now, and quit forever, everything that harms men and women and hinders the progress of the race in that which is noblest and best. Sin cannot be used as an antidote to sin.

ANSWER TO A FANTASTIC TEMPERANCE PHILOSOPHY.

The answer to Dr. Rainsford's fantastic temperance philosophy is in placing it and Christ's Church side by side—that Gospel of which I have spoken and that horrible rum traffic. You can see whether there is any compatibility between that church of the earnest men and women who prayerfully are trying to give to the spirit ascendancy over the sensual, and that saloon which is pouring out day and night, Sunday and week-day, into dishonored homes, into prisons, into asylums, into graveyards, a ceaseless procession of ruined and cursed men of all ages and of all social estates and conditions. Put them side by side and watch the two congregations going in and watch them coming out, and follow them where they go, and ask yourself if there is any part of that saloon, any smell of it, any light of its eye, any color of its face, any measure of its footstep, any breath, any brain, any heart of the best there is in it or the best you could make out of it that would fit into the Gospel or assimilate with a grand spiritual church of Christ. If there is, then it is a revelation to the rumseller. He never has thought of elevating his trade and conciliating Christians by putting a chapel in the rear of his saloon. It has seemed to him more consistent, more logical, more in keeping with the character of the business to make the rear of his saloon into a gambling den or a resort of vile as signation. These are in agreement.

To have in one end of a place an institution to damn men, and in the other an institution to save them is entirely original. The Church would have the monopoly of the whole business, both the damning and the saving. While it was holding a prayer-meeting to lead men to repentance and conversion, it could at the same hour be teaching its young men to become drunkards on wines and beers, and in that way keep itself supplied by a constant and unfailing source of sinners of its own make. And perhaps if its supply ever ran low some of those saved could be taken around into the other end of the Church by some of the deacons or class leaders and come up with the procession again.

It is claimed, however, for this plan that it would remove the evil of the saloon. The evil of the saloon, as we understand it, is drunkenness. But perhaps church beer would not make anybody drunk! And drinking church champagne would not make the young men want wicked saloon champagne! The habit of using church wines would not create an appetite for distilled liquor! What is the universal verdict of men concerning the effect of light liquors upon young men? It is the way drunkards are made.

What different is the effect of the thing going to be whether in a church or a grogshop? Will not liquor be the same thing, and will not it make men drunk in one place as in another? But our new apostle says, "Do not give them any more after they have had enough." How are you going to regulate that? It is what you give a man before he gets enough that makes him drunk! But when the new order of things is established you are going to have all of the churches in it. He would go to the church saloon where he could come the nearest getting drunk! O, it would work splendidly! You can see what a mighty motive there would be in the churches to keep the shades up so the people could see the comparative merits of the church drink shops. Where men can get the most!

But we are told that the saloons would then be respectable. Some people are very anxious to make liquor-selling respectable. If your Sunday school teacher got church saloon boozy it would not be a disgrace, I suppose—not so great a disgrace as it would be to get tipsy in a saloon. To illustrate: to tell lies in a church, for instance, would be more respectable than to tell them in Wall street. Some of us have been so dull as to think that the more shameful you could make this drink habit the safer our young men. Indeed, that seems to be recognized by the saloons. They try to screen the young men by those artistic little doors and shades and evergreens. The dry goods store doesn't have them, because it is perfectly respectable to go in there. But as it is a disgrace for any self-respecting young man to go into a saloon, they put up a door so that nobody can see him, and he has to take only the risk of dodging in and out, which he manages by looking before entering, with one eye up the street and the other eye down the street.

ON MAKING RUMSELLING RESPECTABLE.

To make rumselling respectable is to give it the middle of the highway. To have the thing made respectable for our best people to go there undoubtedly the rumsellers would give a hundred million dollars in the next thirty days. And it would be the best investment they ever made. But when the churches get to running saloons the rumseller will have the respectability without money and without price. They can take down their screen doors and put up their shades. They will be doing only what the churches are doing. It is a church privilege to drink moderately in a saloon with the shades up! And the moral sense that drinks champagne and beers in the church saloon with the deacons and class leaders will not be troubled much by drinking whiskey in the secular saloon with the shades down without the deacons and the leaders.

The mighty evil of your fashionable club we had thought was in the fact that it provided a respectable way for young men to learn the drink habit. You put into it the respectable kommer or grill with its respectable beer keg and stein, under sanction of highly respected citizens. The one thing on the Lord's earth which we thought we did not want to do is to secure respectability to the rum traffic. We had supposed that the one thing that prevented the awful traffic from spreading over the whole land like a rotting mildew, and blighting every school district and farm community and village and town, was that the Church always has put the brand of infamy upon it, and taught that it was a frightful evil; that it is a sin to put the cup to your neighbor's lips, and a burning disgrace for a man to get drunk anywhere. Make it now a church practice, and who will withstand the horrible inundation of woe—how could any voice be lifted against it?

Would one saloon close? Forty would open where there is not one today. It simply would be a competition between limited drunks and unlimited drunks. Limited drunks would soon become unlimited drunks everywhere. If they have 20,000 saloons in New York city, against the protest and preaching of the churches, what will they have when the churches go into the business themselves? You simply would furnish a ceaseless supply of wine-made drunkards, from your fairest young people, to the whiskey saloon for their final damnation. The proposition is about as rational as it would be to propose to furnish the orphan asylums with the harmless and playful kittens of the tigers' jungles. They grow up.

The reason assigned which perhaps is calculated to arrest the popular attention more than any other is in the statement that some such course is necessary, as you cannot fight evil with success negatively. What a mistake the Almighty made in sending forth the Ten Commandments, nearly every one negative and interdictive! And they remain as the code to-day as when first given. The ceremonial law was abrogated, but they were not. Upon the negative we have builded our whole system of criminal jurisprudence. "Thou shalt not" confronts every citizen in every criminal law and almost every ordinance of the land. The whole struggle of life is in opposing the negative to evil. However much of ideal of aspiration for the good there may be, it is negative in private and public morals that we constantly enforce.

THE CHURCH CANNOT BE A PARTNER IN THE LIQUOR BUSINESS.

Upon looking the matter all over, am convinced that it is a good plan except for one reason. There is only one objection to it, and all there is to that is that it is not within a thousand eternities of the Gospel of Christ. There isn't a thing about it that suggests the Gospel. But, then, as that no objection to some minds, no doubt you will find people who will think the scheme a good one. The rumseller will. But there are some of us who believe that the Lord is a jealous God that Christ has not gone into partnership with Belial to run His kingdom on a company plan; some of us believe that darkness is not to be fought with darkness, nor impurity with impurity, but that pure, unadulterated light is the thing with which to overcome darkness. We believe that the men who are to help their fellow-men leave off drink are sober men and not drinking men; that the Church is the citadel of spiritual power and the source of spiritual agencies, and not a den of refined sensualists; we believe that the Gospel is sufficient of itself, and that it would have won its way to millennium success long ago but for the compromises with sin which have been made from time to time by its mistaken teachers at the price of politics, luxury, fame, or vanishing popular applause. Believing these things, we hold on our way preaching total destruction of drink traffic in all forms.

We will insist, and it will be the voice of all Christendom, that the church that puts a bar inside its doors and peddles wines and beers in a drunkard shop, and its minister is forfeiture of the name of a Christ teacher. We have passed the point of the possibility of such a caricature of the pure Gospel, and I warn the man who has that crazy pulse in his body that such a church or minister can not remain a member of any Christian denomination thirty days after inaugurating the infamy.

It is the most horrible proposition that has escaped the lips of any preacher of morals in modern times, lacking every element of sound method and ethics, lacking sound sense in plain economics, and opposed to the letter and spirit and instinct of Christianity. It is a reform backward, a surrender to darkness, a debauch of religion.

CAN MEN BE LEGISLATED INTO GOOD MORALS?

Sometimes the method is opposed on the ground that men cannot be legislated into good morals. But the

He teaches us that the law is "a school-master to bring us to Christ." No one expects statutes to regulate men. But they are safeguards, they help to answer that prayer, "Lead us not into temptation." The two mountains, Sinai and Calvary, are the high peaks of the same range extending from the creation to the final judgment. The law came down upon the top of the one, the cross was set up on the other. The cross was the vindication of the law.

It is high noon when every man upon principles of good citizenship, to say nothing of high Christian ethics, should anxiously inquire as to how the uncompromising Gospel may be applied to every form of our natural and national life. There is peril in temporizing. The reasons why we cannot compromise truth are apparent.

We are a great people. We have inherited most terrific forces. We have become heirs of everything that has been thought and done before us. With these we are to do greater things than have been done. All of this calls for the soundest, strongest, wisest, and noblest type of manhood. It calls upon all to be men, to place every faculty and gift and power upon the altars of this age and of our land. We must clear the deck for the mightiest conflict of all ages, a conflict which shall be the sum of all conflicts. The Almighty has brought us to a summit from which we may see His plans and get some little measure of our responsibilities and possibilities. It is morning. It is time to sober off and come forth with every power at the fullest capacity.

It is an enormous crime to waste ourselves and our substance with beclouding intoxicating drinks in such a morning. There is no measure to the infamy of that man who brings a clouded brain by his own act to the magnificent problems of the hour. What shall be said of a nation that encourages institutions that clog and fog the brains of its citizens? Do not talk of revenue. Sober men are the surest sources of revenue. Where now a dollar comes to the treasury from the rum traffic a hundred would come from sober, saving industry, and thousands would be released from reformatories and prisons. But what are dollars? There is that which is of infinitely greater value.

We are a self-governing people. That means that what appeals to a national ruler appeals to all of our people—virtue, intelligence, sobriety, clear thinking. Any drunken man in this country is a drunken ruler. Every drunkard maker is an anarchist assassinating our rulers. Where shall the balance of power be? There must be no balance of power. All power must be of God and truth. All power must be sober. It is the morning. It is no time for drunkenness. The saloon becomes more monstrous, more hideous as the sun arises, as light beams abroad, as men are called to lighter responsibilities.

NO TIME FOR COMPROMISE.

The argument of temperance is in man's opportunity. Its judgment is in his responsibility. It is no time to resort to compromising expedients, to incriminate intelligent and earnest men who go before us because they feel, as we do not, the force of the great question. Their mistakes are better than our sloth and indifference. And when I speak of this great matter, upon which we are too often silent because of rash advocates and fanatical methods to which we cannot commit ourselves, I have in mind more than a solitary sin, if any sin can be solitary and alone, more than a traffic, more than a morality. I believe in every fiber of my being that this nation, that civilization, that the progress of the race, must have their foundation in a just and ethical sense, and it must be a whole ethical sense. Its light cannot be mixed with darkness. Its good must not be tainted with evil.

The foundations of the republic were laid in faith and prayer and reverence. Its stability arose out of those foundations. It came near destruction by a great sin against human right and liberty, and escaped only on rivers of blood, by the lurid torch of war.

There is no perpetuity of any interest that is worth preserving except in righteousness. All that righteousness must mean temperance and charity, honesty and generosity, purity and helpfulness, the right use of sacred things, and the fear of God.

The world cannot give free rein to appetite. Its business is not sensual gratification and pleasure. These are incidental and subordinate means to the great end of earnest, strenuous living. Life is a stewardship. It has a tremendous accountability. Men have no right to withdraw their powers from the mighty strife, to blunt them, to deprave them. They stand for too much; they are related to interests the value of which all human wisdom cannot compute.

The whole people have a right to demand that every man stand at his post and do his best. When he does not it imperils your interest. It may cost your life. It depreciates and perhaps destroys your property. All sound and sober thinking men must see that no man liveth to himself and no man dieth to himself. "Ye are members one of another." The hand cannot be indifferent when there is gangrene in the foot. The eye cannot say, "We must live and let live," when there is cancer in the throat.

THE SALOON AN AGENCY OF DESTRUCTION.

As sure as time goes on the unrestrained activity of the rum traffic will destroy the nation that is deceived by it. To-day it dictates to Legislatures from the Atlantic to the Pacific on easy terms. It answers the men who oppose it, who lift up a warning voice, with a cloud of ashes. It abides its time.

Hundreds of thousands of graves are a mute but terrible warning. Hundreds of thousands of widows and more orphans piteously plead. It is the morning of a new century. We stand among the graves—graves as far as we can see. Did the yellow fever do it? Did small-pox make these graves—a million graves? No; had it been so we would have driven them out by processes of sanitation long ago. No, some men whom we call citizens did it. They paid us to do it with revenue for taxes. They voted for our party. They were our neighbors. And we let them do it. We said we could not help it because it is not right to make laws against them, and if we did sometimes they would break them. They would fill fifty thousand graves instead of one hundred thousand. And so they go on. And last year they dug in among these graves a hundred thousand new ones.

And we have gotten ourselves into such a condition that a voice from the pulpit speaks for a part of the business. And a Bishop slanders the earnest soul that strives to prevent the people from exposing themselves to a calamity that kills like a deadly fire-damp those whom it touches.

The misplaced confidence of the people is the opportunity of the volcano. He who instills false confidence in a time of peril is not a friend to the people. The Church and the saloon are as separate as the belching, sulphurous fire of a volcano and the gentle, fructifying sunshine of the springtime. One is a messenger of death, the other of life. One leaves in its track a denuded, excoriated, and blasted earth, horrible and decaying corpses piteously slain. The other wakes the earth to joy and beauty and peace and health. The Church and the saloon are as widely separated as the shower of ashes from the burning mountain and the shower of rain from the kidney cloud that waters the new-mown grass.

Christ and Belial never have been within speaking distance of each other. They have nothing in common. Light and darkness never agree; when one is present the other is always absent. The coming of the one always means the destruction of the other.

NO AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE RUM TRAFFIC AND CIVILIZATION.

There is no agreement between the rum traffic and civilization. There is nothing that it touches that it does not blight. Its victims damn it from every quarter of the globe and out of every part of the earth, in voices that moan up from shipwrecks of the sea, from the crash of railway wrecks, from conflagrations, from desolated homes, from murderers' cells, from imbecile asylums, from destroyed business, from delayed and imperiled civilization.

If the rum traffic would go out of business and set itself to work to repair the horrible damage it has done it would not pay the debt it owes in a thousand centuries. It must reckon also with immortal issues and eternal cycles.

I do not speak as a politician. I am not a third party man. I plead the cause. I would be untrue to this position of opportunity if I did not warn you that the teachings of Jesus Christ can have no part with anything that harms men, and if I did not summon you to the morning of a new creative epoch which calls upon every man to awake and soberly and in his right mind offer his best powers to God, his Creator, to serve his fellow-men.

Ah, what a sublime figure that Paul in an age of darkness, when men were groping their way! No concord between Christ and Belial. One personification of truth. No agreement between light and darkness. There is one north star, one magnetic meridian, and that line coincides in the top of the stars and on the earth where men sail their ships on varying seas. If men had held to that bold, uncompromising attitude until this time! If all called of God, opposing those who obtrude without sense or authority into the awful responsibility of teaching the people in religion and morals, had held firmly to this single standard, if all the people had walked by it, can any one doubt that we long since would have passed the millennial stone?

The time is at hand. The hour has struck. The issue is plainly drawn. The blind must not lead those who see. The drunken man must not lead the temperate. The apologist must not lead the servants of God. Gold must not purchase from us the commandments. Pleasure must not deceive lives all too short for their serious stewardship. There are mighty issues to live for. Their hereafter is beyond our present sight. "Therefore let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober."

ANDREW NORFLEET OSBORNE.

Andrew Norfleet Osborne, only child of John N. and Grace Williams Osborne, died August 9, 1902, aged nearly two years.

The life of this bright and interesting little boy was short, but he lived long enough to win his way to the hearts of all who knew him. The place he filled was all his own, and in the home among a large circle of relatives and friends he will be sadly missed. Beautiful flowers were laid by loving hands on casket and on grave as the little body was given back to earth, but brighter and sweeter far than any flower of earth is the pure spirit of the little child that lives with Jesus now.

THE MITHER AT THE BOTTOM OF IT.

"It's meself that jist come into the manin' of thim two wurruds folks is takin' sides on," said Pat. "He-red-tee! That manes that whin the child-her do be bad it is not thimselves at all, but their daddy or their mither. An' it's their ancisthurs that's gainin' credit from their vartues."

"Indade!" said Bridget. "An' ye tell me that it's meself that schlapped the baby an' not Timmy at all, at all—an' maybe it's me that deserves the lickin'?"

"You'll likely be takin' up with the other side—en-vir-on-ment," continued Pat, impressively. "That manes it's nayther their father nor their mither, but the house they are livin' in an' the things they are gazin' at that do be makin' saints of the crathures or young devils."

"Och!" said Bridget, scornfully, "a child might be livin' forever in a nate house, an' gazin' on runnin' wather an' be as dirty as an owld pig. Tell them folkles it's the mither that is thim two wurruds, for it's livin' with a crathure who can use a washrag that makes childher tidy—that's en-vir-on-ment; an' if the faces of thim are clane, it's the mither that has the credit of it—that's he-red-tee."

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON XIII, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, SEPT. 28.

Text of the Lesson, a Comprehensive Review, of the Quarter's Lessons.
Golden Text, Deut. viii. 18.—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

LESSON I.—The giving of manna (Ex. xvi. 1-15). Golden Text, Matt. vi. 11, "Give us this day our daily bread." If we would as the people of God please Him, we must remember that in Him we live and move and have our being, that He giveth life and breath and all things and that in His hand are our breath and all our ways (Acts xvii. 25, 28; Dan. v. 23). Therefore without a murmur we should gratefully accept day by day all He sends or permits to come and daily feed on Him in His word (John vi. 57).

LESSON II.—The Ten Commandments—duties to God (Ex. xx. 1-11). Golden Text, Luke x. 27, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Because He delivered them from the bondage of Egypt by His great power that they might for their own happiness and the happiness of others be a special people unto Himself He asks their whole heart, and no true lover would like less from one he loved.

LESSON III.—The Ten Commandments—duties to men (Ex. xx. 12-17). Golden Text, Matt. xix. 19, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." The Golden Text tells us the only way in which we can show to man that we love God is by loving our fellow men.

LESSON IV.—Worshiping the golden calf (Ex. xxxii. 1-35). Golden Text, Ex. xx. 3, "Thou shalt have no other gods before Me." One of the most amazing things recorded in Scripture is the love and the long suffering of God, and another is the great sinfulness of man. These people who had said to God, "All that Thou sayest we will do," are seen in a few days making an idol and calling it their God; yet He bears with them.

LESSON V.—The tabernacle (Ex. xl. 1-38). Golden Text, Ps. c. 4, "Enter into His gates with thanksgiving and into His courts with praise." Although they were such as they were and He knew them thoroughly, yet He commanded a tabernacle to be built that He might dwell in it among them. The Lord Jesus was indeed the true tabernacle, God manifest in the flesh (Heb. viii. 2; I Tim. iii. 16), and now each believer is a temple of God (I Cor. vi. 19, 20).

LESSON VI.—Nadab and Abihu (Lev. x. 1-11). Golden Text, I Thess. v. 6, "Let us watch and be sober." God had sent from heaven the fire to consume the sacrifice (chapter ix. 24) and had appointed the way in which everything should be done, but these men, like Cain, disregarded God's way and preferred their own way before the Lord, and before the Lord they died. All in our churches today that is not of God may be counted strange fire.

LESSON VII.—Journeying toward Canaan (Num. x. 11-13, 29-36). Golden Text, Ps. xxxi. 3, "For Thy name's sake lead me and guide me." God never left them, although they oft provoked Him to do so, but the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night was their faithful guide and oracle and shield. Moses seemed inclined to lean a little upon his father-in-law, but in that he was wrong.

LESSON VIII.—Report of the spies (Num. xiii. 1-12, and xiii. 25-xiv. 4).

Golden Text, Ps. xl. 4, "Blessed is that man that maketh the Lord his trust." This looking to see if God was as good as His word and if the land was what He said it was gave no evidence of faith in God. But because they desired to send the spies God permitted them (Deut. i. 20-23), and we see the result.

LESSON IX.—The brazen serpent (Num. xxi. 1-9). Golden Text, John iii. 14-15, "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness," etc. There are many foreshadowings of God's way of redemption, such as the shedding of blood and the coats of skins of Gen. iii. 21, and the sacrifice of Isaac in Gen. xxi. 12, but none more suggestive than this of the serpent upon the pole to which our Lord refers.

LESSON X.—The prophet like Moses (Deut. xviii. 9-22). Golden Text, John vi. 14, "This is of a truth that prophet that should come into the world." Every prophet, priest and king, as well as every sacrifice and the whole tabernacle and its ritual, all foreshadowed the true Prophet, Priest and King, the true tabernacle, the true and only Lamb of God, of whom the Father said, Hear Him!

LESSON XI.—Loving and obeying God (Deut. xxx. 11-20). Golden Text, I John v. 3, "For this is the love of God that we keep His commandments." The New Testament comment upon this lesson in Rom. x points us to Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one who believeth, the only one who ever truly loved and obeyed God and who becomes the righteousness and the life of every believer.

LESSON XII.—The death of Moses (Deut. xxxiv. 1-12). Golden Text, Ex. xxxiii. 11, "The Lord spake unto Moses face to face." The greatest of earthly prophets died; all kings and priests die; it is appointed unto men once to die, but our great High Priest, Prophet and King tasted death for every man, died, rose from the dead, is now at the right hand of God in heaven, crowned with glory and honor, and will come again to restore all things of which Moses and all the prophets have spoken (Heb. i. 1-3; ii. 9; Acts iii. 19-21). Every believer is one with Him in the glory, shall take part in the first resurrection and reign with Him in His kingdom.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Sept. 28, "Cheerful Amid Adversity."
Text, Acts xxvii. 22-36.

"I exhort you to be of good cheer."

There is no possible way to avoid trouble in this world. No one entirely escapes. Some appear to be freer than others, but none is immune. We need, then, to learn how to best bear it. Some counsel us to drown our sense of pain and by some anæsthetic of pleasure try to get the most possible of joy and escape so far as we can all consciousness of discomfort.

To many this seems weak and unworthy, and to others it is impossible. Suffering comes in spite of all our attempts to dull and cheat our senses. So we are told to endure with grim fortitude and harden ourselves into a callousness and carelessness and so defy and overcome our pain.

But this fails with most, for the ache becomes greater than the power of endurance.

What makes much of our trouble heavier is the fact that so much of it is unnecessary. If others would only be reasonable, we could escape much damage. The faults of others cause us an immense amount of suffering. This aggravates the matter with many.

Paul found the only way out. He had suffered from shipwreck more than once before this voyage. He was a veteran traveler and knew the dangers of the sea. He warned centurion, captain of the vessel and owner against the risk to property and life and was not heeded. He had endured a long, enforced fast with all the others on the ship, but his abstinence gave him occasion to commune with his God and grow strong while the others grew weak. The angel from the Divine presence gave him assurance of something better to him than mere security of life. He was made confident of God's care for him and his guidance. Life was to be continued that he might witness still further for God before the great and lowly. Adversities awaited him to which shipwreck and hunger were small. Death itself was likely to come in some form particularly trying. But in life and death he was God's man and messenger, and God would care for His own.

He was cheerful, not at prospect of escaping death by drowning, but because no death, no adversity, could separate him from the love of God which was in Christ Jesus his Lord.

He was made glad by the angel that he should stand before Caesar, not as so many of his countrymen had done, to ask some favor, but to witness for Jesus the Lord of lords. He could eat now, even if the tempest was unabated, for the end was assured. He could encourage others to break the long fast. He could give them counsel in saving themselves from the wreck and assist in all the work necessary in landing on an unknown shore.

The only way to be cheerful under adversity with real heart cheer is to have the heart fixed by faith on God and rest confidently in His protecting care. Come what may, He knows our need and our strength. He can and will make all things work together for our good if we trust Him.

How Character Is Formed.

Character is formed as the years go on. Final character is what a man is when he has finished his earthly years. In the Christian it is the lines of the likeness of Christ furrowed and scarred upon his soul by the Divine Spirit, through the means of grace and the experiences of his own life. I saw a beautiful vase and asked its story. Once it was a lump of common clay. Then it was crushed and ground in the mill, then put upon the wheel and shaped, then polished and tinted, then put into the furnace and burned. At last it sat on the table, a gem of graceful beauty. In some such way nearly every noble character is formed. Common clay at first, it passes through a thousand processes and experiences until at last it is presented before God faultless in its beauty, bearing the features of Christ Himself.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

Making or Marring the Past.

We make or mar the past. A son takes his father's or his grandfather's name, and that name, whatever it has been in the past, is going to be a different thing by what that son shall make of it. It may have been high in an honor which shall be almost obliterated in its degradation. It may have been wholly unknown and become widely, honorably mentioned. A nation takes the heritage of the pilgrim's travels and trials, and what that nation goes on to become shapes in a measure the reputation of the founders. They become greater and more worthy as it becomes greater and more worthy. So we of the present day hold in our hands not only our own welfare and reputation and the shaping of our future, but the reputation of those who went before us, whose works we pass on to their final fulfillment or their final failure.—Sunday School Times.

Perplexity and Prayer.

Trouble and perplexity drive us to prayer, and prayer driveth away trouble and perplexity.—Melancthon.

Submission.

Sorely troubled, weak and weary,
Never knowing what is best;
Oh, to see this truth more clearly—
In submission there is rest!

Why should worldly cares perplex me
When my Father knows it all?
Naught can harm and naught should Vex me;
Saviour, at Thy feet I fall!

Holy Spirit, teach me ever
On this blessed truth to rest,
Naught from God my soul can sever;
What He sends is always best.
—Christian Work.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

Christianity is the religion of justice as well as mercy.—Rev. Dr. Cortland Myers, Baptist, Brooklyn.

The Test of Wealth.

If a man can say, "I am a man, and nothing that is human is beyond my care," then I say he is rich.—Rev. Dr. Savage, Unitarian, New York.

A Face to Be Loved.

The sweetest thought to me of all is that Christ's is a face that wants to be loved.—Rev. Dr. Frank De Witt Talmage, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Deference to Others.

We help ourselves and help each other in living and working in deference to the rights of others.—Rev. C. A. Langston, Unitarian, Atlanta, Ga.

Man Walks by Faith.

From the first step of the child to the last step into the cold waters of what we call death man walks by faith.—Rev. Dr. Lowry, Baptist, Kansas City, Mo.

The One Basis.

There is but one basis of a happy life—the practice of virtue and the love of truth.—Rev. Dr. Elwood Worcester to Students of Pennsylvania University.

The Condition of Entrance.

Character is the condition of entrance into the presence of God. A character of holiness—Christ in you—is the hope of glory in an endless eternity.—Rev. J. L. Caughey, Presbyterian, Rochester, N. Y.

Warning the Young.

There is no office of a faithful preacher or of the schoolteacher or of the college professor or of the newspaper more important than to swing the red light of danger in the eyes of the boys and girls.—Rev. J. C. Hall, Congregationalist, Denver.

Purpose in Everything.

God has a purpose in everything. But the mysteries of God have been hid from the ages, a purpose too profound for the finite mind, too far-reaching for human comprehension, unaided by the divine spirit.—Rev. M. P. Fikes, Baptist, Baltimore.

Crowned With a Halo.

God takes the life we have to live here, with all its varying conditions, and crowns it with a halo, makes living a joy in that it is a foretaste, a faint gleaming, of the life that is to come.—Rev. Dr. J. W. Walden, Presbyterian, Athens, Ga.

Under Scrutiny From Above.

Every man is a creator, and on him rests the responsibility of making his work what it should be, working for the satisfaction of his own conscience, always remembering that he is under scrutiny from above.—Rev. Dr. Alsop, Episcopalian, Brooklyn.

Moral Responsibility.

Every man has a conscience and a sense of some sort of moral responsibility. He will either worship the true God or some false god. All character is either positive or negative. God blesses the world by true characters.—Bishop Joyce, Methodist, Chicago.

Getting Away From Vice.

The tendency of human life is to move out of contact with vice, to get as far away from it as possible. The tendency of the Christian gospel is to move into contact with vice as fast as possible and to overcome it with good. As people gain a competence they move away from the home in which by frugality and righteousness they have prospered.—President Faunce of Brown University, Providence, R. I.

Will Keep His Promise.

The dear Lord, who watches the sparrow's flight and fall and who has given us some faint glimpses of what is to be, will keep the wonderful promise, "I go to prepare a place for you," and we need have no disturbing thoughts, but, on the contrary, perfect confidence. Our chief concern should be how to make the best and the most of this life, for if we are in the right now we surely cannot go wrong hereafter.—Late Rev. Dr. George H. Hepworth, Congregationalist.

True Friendship.

As dews to the parched earth, as the sail to the shipwrecked mariner, so is friendship amid the cares and trials of life. If men decay friendship, it is because they have selected those unworthy of trust or because they themselves are inconstant. Falsity in friends is impossible. It only occurs where a masked friendship has been the counterfeit of virtue. So called friends deceive because they never should have been selected as friends.—Rev. Dr. Levy, Hebrew, Pittsburg

The Age Demands Facts.

This is an age of facts. Men are demanding the facts before they accept anything. Every claim, whether made for a new machine, a new industrial enterprise or a new theory, must meet this test. Christianity must meet it also. "You claim your religion transforms the character of the person embracing it? Very well, let us see if it does." And it is a duty we owe such questioners to show them by our keeping of our Lord's commandments that our companionship with him is transforming our lives.—Rev. Milton J. Norton, Congregationalist, San Francisco.

No Need of a Church Trust.

This world does not need a church trust. The church today would not be so powerful, either in numbers or in influence, had it not been for the distinct work of the different divisions. Neither would its men and machinery be so efficient. The world owes a debt to every denomination that has been true to the gospels of Jesus Christ and the New Testament. One unmistakable sign of the times is that we are getting farther away from organic church union and closer to the more important thing, unity of effort and unity of spirit in the name of Jesus Christ.—Rev. C. J. Hall, Denver.

During the first seventy-five days of the operation of the Beale local option law in Ohio 173 saloons have been turned out of wet towns that have gone dry. The American Issue estimates that if thirty feet front be allowed for each saloon a solid mile of saloons, lacking ninety feet, has been banished through these elections in this short space of time.

The Union Central LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

A great revival meeting closed on Sunday night last at Mt. Comfort church, in which many souls were converted to God. The pastor, Rev. H. W. Dunkley, was ably assisted by Rev. E. V. Carson, of Amherst.—Buckingham and Appomattox Times.

The Methodists held the Quarterly District Conference of the Chase City charge here this week. Presiding Elder J. C. Reed preached to a large congregation Sunday morning and evening, also Monday morning, after which the business meeting was held.—Progress.

The Ghent Methodist Sunday school, which was started with 93 members a week ago as a nucleus for the proposed Methodist church to be established at Raleigh avenue and Stockley Gardens, showed an increase of 24 yesterday afternoon, and the promoters of the work are greatly encouraged. The school is held for the present at the new Central Baptist church, in Ghent.—Ledger.

Newton in the Sunday School Hall at Trinity M. E. church, South, next Monday evening at 8 o'clock. Dr. Newton resided many years in Japan, and is the author of a history of the Japanese nation, and is therefore qualified to speak of that strange people, whose history is remarkable. The proceeds are for benefit of Sustentation Fund of Miss Coffee, missionary to China.—Salisbury Advertiser.

The Methodist preachers, at their weekly meeting to-day had a fine talk from Evangelist Smith, who is conducting the Holiness Tent meeting in Portsmouth. He took as his theme "Pastoral Evangelism." He only incidentally referred to the doctrine of "Holiness; or, the Second Blessing," of which he is a very ardent advocate. He had a large attendance to hear him. Some of the ministers from the surrounding section, who are not usual attendants upon this meeting, were present; also some of the laymen.

The Methodist Ministers' "Christian Thought Club" met to-day and was to have had a paper from Rev. J. K. Joliff, in review of Rev. Dr. Tillet's book on "Personal Salvation," but Mr. Joliff not being ready that subject was deferred. A meeting of the club was then appointed for next Monday, with Rev. R. H. Bennett as the speaker, his subject to be "Evolution in Modern Theological Thought."—Ledger.

SERIES OF MEETINGS.

The union meetings of the Methodist Episcopal churches, which will be held in this city, will begin on the third Sunday in September. The Rev. Geo. Stuart, of Cleveland, Tenn., the well-known evangelist, will conduct the meetings at the Broad Street Methodist church, and the congregations of all denominations are invited to attend. The Rev. Mr. Stuart will devote a month to Virginia, conducting meetings in Richmond, Norfolk and Portsmouth, and the Virginia Methodists consider that they are very fortunate in securing him this year, as he has had more calls than he could respond to, and has been repeatedly invited here, but had to decline, owing to the great demand for him in other places.

Mr. Stuart is a simple Gospel preacher—effective, practical, spiritual and non-sensational. He is a man about forty-five years of age, and possesses much magnetism.

During the recent series of meetings given in Danville, consisting of morning and evening services, his meetings were so largely attended that many of the business houses closed during the hour of the morning meeting.—News

If Bishop Smith should de later on to make Charlotte his nanent home, the Methodists of place will build him a home of ele proportions on the western outts of the city, and one of the most rable sections in Charlotte.

he Methodists of Norfolk, whom Bishop has served as pastor of its ing church for two terms, greatly red the Bishop to make his home his city, and would have built him me after the most modern archiural design, but after a careful and ightful consideration of the mathe Bishop now thinks it best to ke his residence for the present at rlotte.

7TH PENTACOSTAL MEETING.

Salem, Va., September 13.—The 7th annual Pentacostal Meeting and Bible onference which will be held here om the 18th to 28th of September under the auspices of the Virginia Soety for the Promotion of Bible Holiness, will far exceed any previous meeting in interest and in the number of distinguished teachers and pulpit orators who will take part.

The railroads will sell reduced rate tickets, and it seems evident that the splendid new auditorium, with a seating capacity of between 1,500 and 2,000, will not accommodate the audiences.

The services will be in charge of Dr. Clarence B. Strouse, president of the Mountain Lake Park and Florida Bible Conferences, who recently successfully conducted the evening services at the great Ocean Grove, N. J., meeting.

Prof. A. P. Fitt, son-in-law of the late D. L. Moody and president of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, will talk during the meeting, and Rev. Dr. Gross Alexander, of Vanderbilt University, will lecture on Romans.

Dr. Len. G. Broughton, the celebrated Baptist preacher of Atlanta, Ga., will give a series of addresses, as will also Dr. E. I. D. Pepper, editor of the Christian Standard, of Philadelphia.

Rev. Henry Clay Morrison, of Kentucky, who is said to be one of America's most eloquent pulpit orators, will preach every day, and Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, will be present and speak on the subject of missions.

A large choir and orchestra will lead the singing, and Mrs. J. C. Wilson, a noted vocalist, of Philadelphia, will be the soloist.—Times.

CONTRACT LET.

For some time the Methodists of the Seventh ward residing in Park and Virginia Place have been actively interested in the movement to erect a new and commodious edifice for the accommodation of the members of that denomination in these rapidly growing sections of Norfolk.

This active interest was brought on through the earnest and indefatigable efforts of Rev. George Wesley Jones, who realized the importance that would be attached to Methodism in these two closely identified communities. After first rehabilitating the Sunday school that had been first organized in Park Place by Rev. Daniel T. Merritt when he was pastor of the Huntersville Methodist church, and placing it upon a firm footing, he began to take a survey of the field with the view to erecting a house of worship in Park Place that would open up a wide field for usefulness in the vineyard of Christ.

He made a house-to-house canvass of all the Methodists and adherents of Methodism residing in the two communities, and after arduous work enlisted their full sympathies in the enterprise. Four lots in an eligible section and of easy access for the members of the denomination living in Park Place, Kensington and Virginia Place, were purchased. A part payment was made by the Methodists of these sections on the lots, who afterwards held a meeting at which a proposition was made to the Methodists of Norfolk that if they would give the remainder of the debt on these lots the members of the denomination in these communities would build a house of worship that would be an ornament to the Seventh ward and an honor to Methodism.

The proposition was readily acceded to by the Methodists of the city proper, each church in Norfolk contributing its portion of the amount needed, thus wiping out the entire indebtedness. This part of the project having been consummated, there was nothing left for the Methodists of Park Place and Virginia Place but carry out their original design, which they have now set about doing.

A meeting of the building committee, composed of Messrs. J. T. Deal, G. J. Huster, E. L. Myers, Hon. John Whitehead, E. G. Garrison, L. W. Machen, A. S. Machen and L. B. Hyslop was held at the residence of Mr. W. J. Huster, Thirty-fifth street, Virginia Place, at 8 o'clock last night.

The session was called to order by Rev. George W. Jones, who presided over the deliberations, with L. B. Hyslop as secretary pro tem.

The matter of erecting a new church was thoroughly discussed and a decision reached.

A rough sketch of the plans of the new structure, previously drawn, were accepted and the contract for building the church was awarded to Mr. E. L. Myers, who is to erect it on commission.

The new church will be of brick and of modern architecture, with a lecture or Sunday school room attached and arranged so as to throw the two rooms into one, giving a seating capacity of 650 people. The auditorium will, of itself, be large enough to accommodate an audience of 400 and the lecture room 250.

Work on the lecture room will be commenced at once and will be completed before the meeting of the Annual Conference, which convenes in Richmond in November next. The church will then be organized by the election of its officers and application will be made to Bishop Duncan, who will preside at the November term of the Conference, to appoint a pastor to be a shepherd over the new flock.

The completion of this new edifice will give the Methodists of Norfolk ten churches, with the new church, which is to be built in Ghent.—Virginian-Pilot.

METHODIST PREACHERS.

The Methodist preachers' meeting was more largely attended yesterday morning than for several weeks. In addition to the increased number of pastors that were present, several lay members were in attendance. They came for the purpose of hearing Dr. Joseph Smith, of New York, who had been previously invited to give a Bible reading or a talk on some subject of his own selection.

The session was called to order at 10:30 A. M. by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, and prayer was made by Rev. Ernest Stevens, of Owens Memorial church.

Dr. Smith was then introduced by Mr. Proctor.

The doctor, after saying that he was happy to be with his brethren, made allusion to the tent meetings that he has been holding in Portsmouth during the past week. He said Sunday was a very remarkable day; that the success that had marked the meetings during the week had led up to the wonderful meetings of Sunday, seven in all. That without any special effort there had been a full and free provision made for the expense of the meetings, an amount being raised that would more than cover the expense, the sum being between $400 and $500, which would leave about $100 on hand over and above all expenses.

Dr. Smith then took as his subject "Pastoral Evangelism," and discussed it in its broadest view in its effects upon the health, pay, studies, results and experience of the pastor evangelist, and showed that it had tended to and did improve him along these lines and largely strengthened his spiritual life and enabled him to control the will of the man, and thus bring him under the direct influence and power of the Holy Spirit, because the Holy Spirit, which is in the evangelist, is seen and felt in the manner in which he presents the "Word of Life."

"Then his work should be directed to expository studies; and in the graduation of his study should not be merely theoretical, but of a practical character; in order to be successful in his work his whole system should take in the cardinal doctrines of the Gospel and he must use as his weapon the 'Sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God.' He should be relieved of all heavy weights in his study so as to make it possible for him to avail in presenting the full plan of salvation and to be constantly inspired by the Holy Spirit, which will enable him to rescue immortal souls from eternal death, and thus reach the orbit of his life and make this great factor the throne of the pulpit, which will draw the congregation to the preacher and the preacher to the congregation. His should be a life of permanent purity in order to show faith in his life and preaching the Word of the Lord Jesus."

In closing, Dr. Smith spoke beautifully of the faithful pastor evangelist's crown in the world to come.

REPORT OF CHURCHES.

The call of the churches was taken up, and reports heard from the following:

Rev. J. B. Merritt conducted his usual services at the Seamen's Bethel Sunday and had a pleasant day.

The congregation at LeKies Memorial Sunday showed a perceptible increase. The pastor, Rev. Graham H. Lambeth, took up his Conference collections, and will realize the full amount. The Methodist Sunday School Association met with his church in the afternoon and reorganized for the new year by electing the following officers: S. S. Lambeth, Jr., of Epworth church, president; L. W. White, of Centenary church, secretary, and Fred Peterson, of Queen Street church, treasurer.

At Owens Memorial, Rev. Ernest Stevens had his usual congregations and pleasant services.

Rev. R. H. Bennett had a most delightful day at Epworth church. He had a very large congregation to hear him Sunday morning, and an overflow audience at night, his subject being "Marriage Without Love."

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.
FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,
Pastor of Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago

Chicago, Aug. 10.—A plea for forbearance and the magnanimous treatment of offenders is made by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage in this sermon on the text Matthew vii, 1, "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

After Massillon, the great court preacher of France, had finished one of his sermons, Louis XIV. summoned him to his side and said: "Massillon, how is it you impress me as you do? I have heard many great orators preach. They nearly always please me. But when you preach, instead of being pleased with you I am always discontented with myself. I always feel that I want to be a better man as well as a better king." "Well," answered the great preacher, "the only way I can account for it, your majesty, is because I am always preaching against myself. When I am about to make up a sermon, I say to myself, 'Massillon, what is the sin which you have hardest work to battle today?' And when I preach against my own sins I generally find that there are similar sins in other hearts which I am also preaching against." If there is any truth in the words which Massillon spoke to Louis XIV., this sermon will carry a message to every pew. Of all sins there is none more easy for speaker as well as hearer to fall into than the sin of hypercriticism.

The sin of censorious criticism is almost universal because one is apt to commit it at first unconsciously and without premeditation or forethought. If a party of young people are together, it is not hard to find fault with the minister, and the doctor, and the dress-maker, and the neighbor's wife and child and house and all that he has. It is not difficult to lay the reputation of an absent member upon the dissecting table of traducement and cut and hack it into pieces with cruel, sharp, merciless tongues. It is not always a disagreeable opportunity to repeat the slanders and the vilifications and the defamations and the wholesale condemnations which have been circulated about the neighborhood in reference to other people's characters.

Now, my text is a divine protest against the hasty and the unjust judgments with which we condemn our fellow men. It is a divine protest to bring men and women to the realization of the awful damage they are doing themselves, as well as others, by the pernicious habit of censorious criticism. It is a protest to prove that, though we can honor men and love men and praise men and help men, yet we must not hate men or deride men or condemn men. Condemnation is a divine prerogative. Condemnation is a thunderbolt which will shatter every human hand that tries to grasp it and to hurl it. Condemnation is a poisonous fang which will destroy our own lives as well as lacerate and instill the fatal poison into their flesh.

Sin of Hypocrisy.

Personally we should not condemn men, because, having imperfections in ourselves, we have no right to expect and demand perfection in others. If we were holy, perhaps we might have a right to expect other people to be holy.

If we were pure minded, we might have a right to expect other people to be pure minded. If we loved the Lord our God with all our heart and soul and mind and strength; if we were perfect husbands and perfect wives, perfect parents and perfect children, perfect in our love for our fellow men, we might expect others to be perfect. But what right has the kettle to complain about the pot being unclean? What right has the raven to croak because her young have wings as black as the night? What right has the Pharisee to stand up and condemn the poor publican, who stood afar off and beat his breast, moaning, "God be merciful to me, a sinner," when the Pharisee himself was so sinful that he was like a whitened sepulcher, "which indeed appeared beautiful outward, but was within full of dead men's bones and all unclean?" And what right have you, O hearer, to say your neighbor is a bad man or a bad woman and should be condemned when you yourself have an evil eye and have not yet, by the grace of God, plucked it out? When you yourself have an evil hand or foot and have not yet amputated it? When you yourself have an evil tongue to speak or an evil ear to listen against the deeds of your neighbors?

What would you think of a dissolute judge condemning a prisoner at the bar for the same sins of which he himself was flagrantly guilty? Why, such a hypocritical and unjust judge would be submerged under a tidal wave of popular scorn. Such a dishonest judge would be treated as mercilessly as was that judge who in the darkest days of Rome's infamies undertook to sentence some conspirators to death while he himself was one of the conspirators. He would be dragged from the judicial bench. And yet this sin of condemning others when we ourselves are guilty of sin is a habit which can be laid at many a door. We superciliously demand perfection in others while we ourselves are imperfect.

Judge Not.

To illustrate the truth that the more we ourselves have gone astray the more we are apt to condemn shortcomings in others, I would read from a leaf out of the book of memory. I remember many years ago a lady's character was being assailed on a hotel porch. A member of the party at that time denounced the absent woman so severely that I turned and said: "Madam, you have no right to publicly make a charge like that against any one. Even if you had positive proof that what you say is true, you should keep your lips firmly sealed, because no one knows but that some day the bloodhounds of slander may be hunting your own tracks." This lady was very indignant. She said that I charged her with the same crimes of which the absent woman was supposed to be guilty. Within one year that woman who was so bitter in her criticism of her sister was proved guilty of the same offense which she charged against another.

My father in his younger days had almost the same experience. When he was about to be licensed for the Christian ministry, a minister was being tried before the church court. While my father stood waiting to be called for his examination he heard a conversation between a merciless old minister and a forgiving young minister. The old minister was very bitter against his brother minister who was up for trial. "But," said the young minister to the old minister, "perhaps there is some mistake." "No!" exclaimed the old minister. "I do not want to hear anything in that man's favor. I feel and know he is guilty and therefore should be condemned." "Within one year," said my father, "that old minister who was so hard in his criticisms upon his brother minister was charged with the same crime. Within one year not only was that old minister condemned in the church court, but in the criminal court of the state he was convicted by a jury which did not leave their seats." So my text has a more far-reaching effect than at first might be supposed. The words "Judge not, that ye be not judged," imply that when we are harsh and unforgiving and merciless and bitter and cruel in our criticisms of others then we ourselves are in all likelihood goaded on by our own sins in making these criticisms about others. Therefore if you and I feel bitter against the sins of others it is high time for us to examine our own sinful hearts; it is high time that we fall upon our own knees in supplication and plead with the Lord God Almighty that he might cleanse us, that he might purify us, that he might forgive us. It is the sin in our own lives that urges us on to condemn the sins in others. It is our own evil eyes that are able to see only the imperfections in others.

Be Not Hasty to Condemn.

No man should rashly condemn another, because it is often impossible for him to realize what were the mitigating circumstances in which the sin was conceived. If all men were born free and equal, as the American Declaration of Independence optimistically declares, you could judge them in the bulk. You could judge any two men as you might test two bars of steel which come from the same mold. You could judge them, as you might say that a pound of coffee ought to weigh as much as a pound of tea; but all men are not born free and equal. We are different in hereditary tendencies. Only a short time ago at a convention of the Women's Christian Temperance union a delegate read the record of a woman with criminal tendencies who died in 1827. The name of this woman, for obvious reasons, was not told. This woman of criminal tendencies has had up to date over 800 descendants. Seven hundred of these descendants have been criminals, and all were convicted at least once and most of them more than once for crime. Thirty-six of those descendants have been murderers. "And," said the speaker, "the blood of that one woman of criminal tendencies has cost the nation in eighty years over $3,000,000 for trials and executions and for the property stolen or destroyed." Is not the blood that flows in your veins happily different from that which flowed in the veins of those children?

We are different in the surroundings of babyhood and boyhood and young manhood. Some men never knew the love of a parent. Their father and mother died when they were very young. Instead of being able to get an education, as you and I have been, they were pushed out into the great world unprepared for the struggle of life and told to shift for themselves. We are as different as flowers are different. Some are planted in rich soil, others in poor. Some are cared for by loving hands; others have to fight for their lives among the bristly thorns and the overshadowing weeds. Some have enough sunlight to incubate and develop them and just enough showers and dews to slake their thirst. Other flowers are continually being scorched by the droughts and deluged by the freshets.

Faith's Saving Grace.

We are all different in our inherited temperaments and our power to resist temptation. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the quaint poet and philosopher, once wisely said, "Every child's training should begin at least 100 years before that child is born." Have you and any right to condemn a man's action unless we can put ourselves in the man's place? Then after we have put ourselves in our erring brother's place have we a right to affirm that we, our own strength, would have done other than he has done? If we thus affirm, we are not honest and true to ourselves, for some of the mightiest and best men of God have testified just the opposite. Glorious John Newton, trumpet-throated John Newton, Holy Spirit inspired John Newton once declared that he never saw a murderer being led away to the gallows but he always said to himself, "I go as John Newton unless he had been saved by the grace of God." Horatio Seymour, twice governor of New York in a large religious meeting once solemnly declared: "In my time, as chief executive of the state of New York, I have had to examine hundreds of applications for pardons. After I had carefully examined them and full entered into the lives of the convicts and realized the influences which caused those crimes I am free to confess that had I had the same influences about me as those men had, in every case I should have committed the same crimes, if not blacker ones. Oh, my brother, instead of condemning your brother put yourself in your erring brother's place. Get down on your knees and offer a prayer of gratitude that you have not been tempted as he is tempted. You ought to get down on your knees and thank God that even in your lesser temptation you have been saved solely by an inspiring faith in a divine love which may never have been kindled in your brother's sinful heart."

No human being should condemn his neighbor, because it is only the loving tear of pleading sorrow that can quench the fires of sin and the sharp tongue which "breaketh the bone." It is only the warm, gentle protecting, outstretched arm of a friend that draws the sinner toward God and heaven; not the clinched fist of an enemy. Did you ever see a minister who became a better minister through the fault finding of his congregation? Did you ever know of a wife who became a better wife because her husband talked against her to his neighbors? Do you know of one human being who was brought close to your heart and to God by being demeaned in the eyes of his fellow men through bitter denunciations that you hurled against him? No! No! Slander and vilification and traducement and disparagement and evil rumor, repeated by your lips, never softened or purified a sinful heart. The only drove the sinner farther away from you and farther from God.

Guard Carefully the Tongue.

Most people are influenced in life by sharp words and fault findings a great deal as was the little boy who was left in the care of an elder brother by the death of his parents. The older brother wanted to bring his younger brother up to be a good man, so he was very sharp and strict with him. Whenever the younger son would do wrong the older brother would scold or punish him. The result was that the younger instead of growing better seemed to become worse. One day the elder brother was going down street, utterly discouraged, when he met the village minister. "What is the matter, John?" said the pastor. "You look very blue." "Well," answered the young man, "I am blue. You know father died some months ago and left Charley in my care. It seems as though I can do nothing with the boy. He becomes more and more perverse every day."

THE SUPERCILIOUS SEED.

Little seed lay in the ground,
and soon began to sprout.
Now, which of all the flowers around,
I mused, "shall I come out?"
The lily's face is fair and proud,
but just a trifle cold.
The rose, I think, is rather loud,
and, then, its fashion's old.
The violet is very well,
but not a flower I'd choose;
Yet the Canterbury bell—
never cared for blues.

Tunias are by far too bright,
and vulgar flowers besides;
The primrose only blooms at night,
and peonies spread too wide."
So it criticised each flower,
his supercilious seed;
Till it woke one summer hour and found itself a weed.

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 21, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same. When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Every one interested in good morals will be pleased to learn of the active measures recently inaugurated by the Secretary of the Treasury to eradicate certain violations of good conduct which have been prevalent among the clerks of that department. These violations took the form of gambling by one means or another. The Secretary has proceeded with great caution because he feared to do an injustice to any one and some of his critics have condemned his lack of action in what appeared to be palpable offences against good discipline. Such criticism was not warranted, however, for the Secretary was merely waiting until he had sufficient evidence to act forcibly and justly. Within the past week he has materially reduced the salaries of two men whom he knew to be in the habit of playing poker, explaining that only his consideration of their families prevented their dismissal from the service. Tuesday he discharged a clerk who had made use of his position with the Treasury to float a company which had for its object the exploitation of a scheme for making money through book makers at the races by an alleged system. The Secretary expresses the hope that he will not find it necessary to take further equally drastic steps, and that the example he has made of these three men may prove efficacious; however, the men who have been guilty of similar conduct will find that their promotion will not be easy of attainment for some time to come. There is another form of gambling to which the Secretary will now turn his attention. It consists of the buying and selling of futures in the local bucket-shops. This form is perhaps the most prevalent of any among the Treasury employees, and unless its devotees take heed, their heads will fall in the near future.

An incident which is interesting because it is characteristic of Secretary Shaw, occurred one day this week. Mr. Shaw had been out of the city and returned unexpectedly. On entering his office he was amused to hear the colored porter singing a hymn at the top of his voice. When the porter turned and discovered the Secretary, he turned as pale as possible for one of his race, but Mr. Shaw reassured him, saying: "Never mind, Richard, never mind. I see nothing in the rules of this department which prohibits the singing of church hymns. If more of that kind of music were rendered here we would all get along better. You can sing hymns in this building as much as you want to, but remember, Richard, that I want you to sing only hymns when you sing at all."

Much interest is being manifested in the Sunday School Teachers' College for the training of students in the study of the Bible, which will open in this city in October. The college, which is to be under the auspices of the American Society of Religious Education, will probably hold its sessions in some church at first, but later a suitable building will be rented or built. The year's course will consist of thirty-two weeks, with one lesson per week, and the curriculum, covering two years, will embrace Biblical introduction, biblical history, biblical literature, biblical doctrine, life of Christ, religious experience, Church history, comparative religion and sacred pedagogy. The faculty will include Rev. J. E. Gilbert, D. D., dean; Rev. George O. Little, D. D., Rev. J. C. Nicholson, D. D., Rev. John M. Schick, D. D., Rev. F. W. Moot, Rev. J. F. Prettyman, and Mr. W. H. H. Smith. Two members of the faculty remain to be selected. An advisory board, consisting of Rev. Drs. Wallace Radcliffe, Luther B. Wilson, J. H. Elliott, J. J. Muir, W. E. Parson, M. Ross Fishburn, E. B. Bagby, L. D. Clark and John M. Gill, has already been appointed. These gentlemen will not take an active part in the management of the college, but will render such assistance and advice as may be possible.

There is evidence of a renewed activity in Church circles in Washington, and many plans are being formed looking to the increase of membership, the paying off of church debts and the extension of philanthropic work under church and church society auspices. Pastors are returning to the city refreshed from their summer outings, and many members of their congregations are coming home enthusiastic over new plans which they have observed in successful operation elsewhere. Next week, or the week after, the churches will resume their usual services, which have been somewhat curtailed during the heated term, and many choirmasters are already at work on the music to be rendered during the winter. Several of the churches are making provisions for special gospel services to be held later in the year. Among the religious societies there is a general feeling that this has been an unusually successful summer, and the various Epworth League and Christian Endeavor chapters show an increased membership gained during the summer. A number of summer excursions, heretofore referred to, have proven most successful both as to the enjoyment and benefit afforded the members and as to the renewed interest they have created in the organizations conducting them.

Rapid progress is being made in the erection of the new Grace church, where the President attends, and some generous donations contributed by Mr. Roosevelt, "on account," have materially assisted the trustees, who state that the entire amount necessary for the completion of the edifice is either in bank or underwritten by reliable persons. The stone work of the walls is practically completed, and it is the belief of the pastor and the trustees that services may be held in the new church by the first of December. The interior finish is to be of birch, mahogany finish, and the only marble that will enter the furnishings will be a handsome pulpit, which is the gift of a wealthy friend.

The church attended by Mrs. Roosevelt, St. John's, is still without a regular pastor, but it is anticipated that a call will be issued in the near future. The excellent example in the matter of church going which has been set by the President and his family and the members of the present Cabinet has had its effect on the society of Washington, and many persons who held prominent positions in social circles have been seen more regularly at church of late than was formerly the case. As a body, however, Washington people attend church with considerable regularity, and are generous in the support which they give to the institutions of their chosen denominations, as is evidenced by the many beautiful ecclesiastical edifices in this city. The good accomplished by the Church organizations in Washington is incalculable, and among the church members are many whose private donations and personal assistance to their less fortunate brethren would surprise the world if the facts were made public.

The statistics of religions in the census of India are not the most lucid set of figures ever published for the information of mankind. Some people have analyzed them to one effect and soon to another, and though the extraordinary progress of Christianity in the empire has been acknowledged on all hands, there has been disagreement as to what aspect of Christianity had recommended itself to the Hindu. Probably the following analysis, taken from a native paper published at Bombay, is more accurate than any study of the returns made outside of India. The increase of the population of the country from 1891 has been a little over seven millions up to a present total of 294,362,676. The 2,923,448 Christians found in the empire last year include 1,148,259 Protestants, 1,202,139 Roman Catholics, and 573,050 Greek Catholics and Oriental Christians. Ten years before there were 558,661 Protestant Christians and the other two classes enumerated made a grand total of 1,599,781 under the Christian name. This shows that in the decade the population of India increased not more than two and a half per cent., the whole body of Christians twenty-eight per cent., the non-evangelical churches twelve per cent., and the evangelical churches one hundred and five per cent. The man who believes that Protestant missions are a failure will have to go off and sulk by himself in the dark if he succeeds in retaining his belief.—The Interior

A recent article on the progress of King of Siam says that "strict Buddhist though he is, he and his high officials not only grant full religious toleration, but assign valuable property to Christian mission work for a nominal rent as at Nakaun, or for none at all, as at Rajobure. His majesty and over eighty princes and nobles make cash contributions to our new Day school in Bangkok, while the queen has given $1,500 to form the 'Queen's Scholarship Fund' at the Presbyterian Girls' School. Nor do the king and ministers make any secret of their indebtedness to our missionaries. They cordially avow it to the American visitor: 'Your missionaries first brought civilization to my country,' said the Minister of Foreign Affairs. The United States Minister, the Hon. Hamilton King, says that at a banquet in 1899, Prince Damrong, the Minister of the Interior, declared in the hearing of every one at the table: 'Mr. King, I want to say to you that we have great respect for your American missionaries in our country, and appreciate very highly the work they are doing for our people. I want this to be understood by every one, and if you are in a position to let it be known to your countrymen, I wish you would say that for me.' In his published report of this incident, Minister King adds: 'The King of Siam is a man of fine education, keen insight, and broad culture. He speaks the English language well and appreciates it keenly as a medium of civilization for his people. He understands his people and their needs. He is a hard worker, and keeps himself remarkably well informed of what is going on in his own country, and he has profited much by his recent visit to Europe. From such a ruler these expressions of toleration and encouragement mean much."—Western Christian Advocate.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

The following declaration of principles was adopted on July 4, 1902, by the teachers of the Summer School of the South, now in session at Knoxville, Tenn:

"We, the 1,700 teachers attending the Summer School of the South, representing every Southern State, do on this day of our national independence, unanimously adopt the following declaration of educational policy:

1. We bear grateful testimony to the great sacrifices made in behalf of education by the people of the South, who in their desolation and poverty have taxed themselves hundreds of millions of dollars to educate two races.

2. Notwithstanding these efforts, we are confronted with the appalling fact that the large majority of the 3,500,000 white children and 2,500,000 black children of the South are not provided with good schools. In 1900 ten Southern States having 25 per cent. of the school population of this country, owned only 4 per cent. of the public school property and expended only 6½ per cent. of the public school moneys. We must recognize these conditions and frankly face them. We therefore declare ourselves in favor of a public school system, State supported and State directed, in which every child may have the open door of opportunity.

3. Conscious of our dependence upon the God of our fathers, and believing that the highest and truest civilization can be attained only by following the precepts of the great teacher, Jesus Christ, we favor the recognition of the Bible in our public schools.

4. We regard local taxation as the foundation upon which a public school system should be built, and therefore favor an agitation in behalf of such taxation in every community.

5. If an increased expenditure of money is to be of lasting value, a more intelligent interest must be brought to bear upon our schools. But even greater than the need of money and interest is the need of intelligent direction.

6. A mere extension of the present school term with the present course of study will not meet the needs of the children. The lines of development in the South must be both agricultural and mechanical. Our people must bring a trained brain and a trained hand to the daily labor. Education should not be a means of escaping labor, but of making it more effective. The school should be the social centre of the community, and should actively and sympathetically touch all the social and economic interests of the people. In addition to the usual academic studies, therefore, our courses should include manual training, nature study and agriculture.

7. To secure more efficient supervision, to encourage grading and to broaden the social life of the children, we favor the consolidation of weak schools into strong central schools. It is better in every way to carry the child to the school than to carry the school to the child. We endorse the movements recently made by the women of the South for model schools, built with due regard to sanitation, ventilation and beauty.

8. Teaching should be a profession, and not a stepping stone to something else. We therefore stand for the highest training of teachers and urge the school authorities of every State to encourage those who wish to make the educating of children a life profession. We call upon the people to banish forever politics and nepotism from the public schools, and to establish a system in which, from the humblest teacher to the office of State superintendent, merit shall be the touchstone.

9. We express our hearty appreciation of the noble work of the Southern and General Education Boards, which, by their earnest sympathy and generous means, have made possible this great Summer School of the South, and in numerous other ways are strengthening the patriotic efforts of the Southern people to improve their educational conditions.

10. With gratitude to our fathers for the heritage of a noble past, with thankfulness to God for the many blessings bestowed upon our people, with due recognition of our present problems and their deep importance, we face the future with a faith which we shall endeavor to make good by our works, to the lasting glory of our Republic.

The strategic battle between Christianity and heathenism is to be fought in Japan, and if Christianity is to win, it must be fought and finished soon. Our conclusion is based on the fact that Japan is most likely to be the schoolmaster for the Orient. It is the only nation among them which is admitted into the international family on terms of equality, and it is proving most worthy of this enviable distinction. Instead of arousing the jealousy of China and other rival neighbors, they each and all acquiesce in the leadership which Japan scarcely needs to assert forcibly. Thanks to the stupid statesmanship which excludes Chinese from this continent, the progressive young men of China are no longer coming hither to pursue their course in higher civilization. They are merely crossing the narrow sea and find in Japan plenty of willing instructors. The astute statesmen of that country look down into the future but a few years and see China's vast population of nearly half a billion energized with a new impulse and guided by a rational ambition and armed to fight in her own defense with modern guns. China and Japan and their natural allies, joined by the ties of self-interest, could marshal one-third the earth's entire population against foreign encroachment. Will this be the battlefield of Armageddon where the human and divine order will struggle finally for the mastery? Not if Christendom does its duty now. The obstacles are immense. Christianity is at a discount in the Orient, owing to the abominable outrages practiced in China by so-called Christian soldiers and owing to the bad machinations of the Roman Catholic Church, which have brought Christian missions into disrepute among many of the natives. But there is hope in Japan. Already more than 50,000 native Christians own Christ as Lord. Only one serious exception is taken by enlightened Japanese to the claims of the Gospel. It is that there are so many kinds of Gospel presented. Their practical minds cannot imagine why the Presbyterian, and Methodist, and Baptist, and Episcopalian, not to mention the 150 or more remaining sects, should be so zealous to gain adherents to their peculiar views. The Japanese is an eclectic. He takes the best ideas he can find and incorporates them into his new political and business system. He will do the same with religion. He has turned from the old idols. He is more than half persuaded to consider Christianity. But it must be presented to him intelligently and simply and in its essential aspects, and not obscured by trivial details. The foreign missionary societies operating in Japan should federate instantly for a united, aggressive, ten years' battle, or they should vacate the field, and let a thousand Christian volunteers, knowing nothing but Christ and His message, take their places. If Japan is won now or in the next fifty years the world's kingdom will become God's kingdom five hundred years hence.

BOTH HANDICAPPED.

On one occasion Bishop Potter was a guest at the Storm King Club, says the New York Times. After a comfortable dinner he sent a telegram to one of the officials of the New York Central Railroad asking him to stop the night express at Storm King station, on the opposite side of the river.

He drove down the mountain and hired a boatman to row him across. Arriving in good time he and the boatman waited in the rowboat until the approaching train warned them to seek the station, only to see the train arrive, rush by, and disappear into the darkness.

The Bishop was irritated.

"Well," he said, "I am a Bishop of the Episcopal Church, and I suppose my calling will not allow me to say anything."

"Well," replied the boatman, "I am a Methodist, and my principles will not let me say anything."—Ex.

A Chicago merchant built up here a great retail department store. He put his life into it for thirty years and made it one of the notable commercial institutions of the city. Then some of the stockholders became dissatisfied with his management, and compelled him to retire. He was not disgraced; it was only a business disagreement. He was not impoverished; he had a million dollars worth of unincumbered property. But he had lost the only interest that he had in existence, and he killed himself. There is no greater risk that a man can take than to cast all his hopes and fears upon one issue of life, and that the issue of a transitory ambition. Even in this world every man encounters losses and disappointments from which there can be no refuge save in some lasting and immovable affection of the inner man, and in the hour when all things of earth are swept away, he shall be infinitely more in need of an eternal love upon which he may steady his soul. And if in his struggle for material good he has abandoned all these spiritual resources, his plight in earthly disaster must be pitiable, and in the crisis of death irremediable.—Chicago Interior.

What makes the happy relation between man and woman is an eternally interesting question, and a clever discussion of why marriages fail, presented by Rafford Pyke in his article "The Woman's Side," is certain to receive the very wide consideration which has been given to that author's previous articles on the discussion of woman versus man. The July Cosmopolitan seems to be almost equally divided in interest between men and women. "An Experiment in Domestic Finance" is another entirely novel article which will appeal to women, while some twenty pages devoted to the "Captains of Industry" will receive the consideration of men in all classes of business. The Cosmopolitan has undertaken to present a series of brief sketches of the men who are leaders in finance, manufactures, and commerce, not prepared in an off-hand way, but by writers of the greatest ability who have an exact knowledge of their subjects. The series thus far produced has attracted the widest attention. The industrial changes which have of late been occurring with such rapidity have the widest possible interest for all classes. The knowledge of these men, their derivation, leading characteristics and weaknesses throws much light upon the news of the day in which their names constantly recur.

whip and scold him. I punish him in every way. It seems to do no good." Then the old minister, with a twinkle in his eye, placed his hand upon the young man's shoulder as he said: "My boy, have you ever tried the power of love? Have you ever praised Charley when he did well? Have you ever kindly sat down by his side when he did wrong? Instead of scolding him, have you ever tried to be gentle with him? Go home, my boy, and try the power of praise and love. Perhaps you have been too severe with your tongue upon your younger brother." So John went home and made up his mind that he would try the power of praise and love. Instead of scolding Charley he tried to help him by kindness. He played with him in his games; he helped him in his lessons; he praised him when he did well. The result was that Charley became a different boy. One day the little fellow looked up into the face of his big brother and said, with a happy smile, "Why, Jack, I never knew until lately that you loved me." So by our harsh words and censorious criticisms we drive men farther and farther away from God, but by loving, kind and gentle words we can save men instead of destroying them; we can lift men up instead of casting them down; we can inspire men with hope instead of rendering them helpless with despair; we can bind the human race together by ties of holy affection instead of antagonizing them as mortal foes.

It is possible to criticize even the best of men. The story is told that Zeuxis, the famous Greek artist, painted a wonderful picture of a boy holding a dish of grapes. The picture was so wonderful that the birds flew through the open window and with their bills pecked at the grapes which the artist had drawn. But though there were thousands ready to praise, there were still many censorious critics who condemned the picture. "For," said the evil minded critics, "if the boy had been painted as perfectly as the dish of fruit the birds would have been afraid to approach the dish which the lad is supposed to hold in his hand." It is possible to harshly judge the actions of even the best of men. Therefore it is very easy by bitter criticism to destroy thousands who might be saved by the gentleness of a loving, forgiving, Christlike tongue.

Beware of Unjust Criticism.

No man should condemn his neighbor, because when he destroys his brother by evil criticism he also equally destroys himself. Some people suppose that my text, "Judge not, that ye be not judged," is only to be applied in a temporal way; that it only alludes to things of this world; that it is to be interpreted in the sense that if we are unjust to others in our censorious criticism others will be unjust to us. The injustice which we do to others with the tongue will always as a boomerang come back and strike ourselves. As Dr. Guillotin in his old age is said to have been executed upon the fatal instrument which he had invented in his younger days; as the prime minister of one of the French monarchs was confined in the very cage of torture he had builded for his enemies, a cage so short that the prisoner in it could not lie down and so low that he could not stand upright in it; as Regent Morton was hanged to death by the spikes of the fatal image of torture known as the "Maiden" which he himself had introduced into Scotland, and as a Haman was hanged upon the gallows he had erected for the despised Mordecai, so the unjust criticisms which we mete out to others are often the very condemnations with which we ourselves shall be condemned by our fellow men.

But the text has a deeper and wider meaning than merely the interpretation which implies that if we utter condemnation against our brothers our brethren will in turn speak similar condemnations against us. It means that if we condemn our brethren Christ will condemn us. It means that if we do not speak kindly of those who have gone wrong Christ will not become our divine advocate and plead for our forgiveness. What does the Bible say in order to impress this truth upon our hearts? Christ gave us the Lord's Prayer as the model of our supplications. "Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us." In other words, we must pray that as we are ready to forgive the sins of others so may God forgive us our own trespasses. My Lord and my God, if thy pardon is to be dependent upon our willingness to forgive and pardon others what chance have most of us of thy forgiveness!

The older I grow the more I believe that thousands and hundreds of thousands of Christian men and women are barred from the divine joys of higher Christian service because they are harsh in their criticism upon the errors of their fellow men. You know that some people make the sinful boast that if an injustice or a wrong has ever been done against themselves they will never forgive. How can such persons expect Christ's pardon when they are willfully refusing to obey Christ's command to judge not, so that they shall not be judged?

We Must Forgive to Be Forgiven.

Mr. Moody was the evangelist, I think, who once illustrated the impossibility of receiving Christ's pardon for sin unless at the same time we are willing to forgive the sins of others by telling an incident that happened at one of his revival meetings. A woman was under deep conviction of sin. She felt that Christ was ready to pardon. She felt that she was a sinner, but for some unknown reason she would not be pardoned. At last the great evangelist came to her and said: "Madam, there is some sin in your life which you are unwilling to give up. What is it? Will you confess the sin to me?" "Yes," answered the lady, "I will. I want to be saved. I feel that Christ is willing to save me. But every time I begin to pray for pardon I think of a woman who has done me in the past a great wrong. I cannot but condemn her and judge her very harshly. Then, as I pray for pardon, Christ seems to say to me, 'Will you pardon and forgive your sister if I pardon and forgive you?' and I say, 'No, I cannot forgive her.' Then Christ, with a sad face, seems to say, 'Then I will not forgive you.' " Mr. Moody said to the lady, "Will you kneel down here by this seat and let me pray for you?" She answered, "I will." Then the evangelist prayed that God might soften her heart toward her sister; that he would help her to forgive, as she wanted to be forgiven. And in the midst of the prayer the erring woman sobbed, "O Lord, I forgive, I forgive!" and she was saved. So, my brother, if you are not ready to deal gently with those who have done you wrong and also ready to forgive others Christ will not forgive you. "Judge not, that ye be not judged, for with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged. And with what measure ye mete it shall be measured unto ye again."

"The harvest is plenteous, but the laborers are few."

Our Motto: Thorough Instruction Under Positive Christian Influences at the lowest Possible Cost.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course: The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course: This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian men.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent Taxes to pay. No Profits to made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positive Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

B. N. PRICE.

I take the liberty of copying the following letter:

Sweetwater, Tenn., Sept. 8, 1902.
Dear Brother Price,—What mean the figures given by Bishop Hendrix anent accessions to the M. E. Church, South, for the past sixteen years? They show a constant, rapid, and alarming increase. He groups four years together—the years between the General conferences—giving the number of our membership at each quadrennium. The increase is as follows:

From 1886 to 1890.....183,156.
From 1890 to 1894.....168,197.
From 1894 to 1898.....123,221.
From 1898 to 1902..... 38,085.

This is a remarkable showing. And every effect must be the result of some cause or combination of causes, right we not to pause and look into this matter? What do these figures mean?

Diverse answers, no doubt, will be given. But no answer methinks will be correct that does not include three or more items.

1. The unfriendly legislation anent local preachers, once a strong agency in bringing sinners to Christ.

2. The growing discount of a divine call to the ministry and the premium upon literary acquirements—words of man's wisdom."

3. The rating of preachers, not by their success in winning souls to Christ, but by the number of dollars brought into the collections.

4. The dissatisfaction anent the findings in the Kelly case, and then the great blunders about the collection of the Publishing House claim against the United States Government.

5. Migration has thrown many former Southerners into localities where they have changed church relationship—going into other communions, or standing aloof from connection with any denomination. Migration brings us little gain, but loses us members all the time. Three out of five of my children's families have thus gone from the Southern Church, and so have many of mine acquaintances.

Other causes have been in operation. But while we cannot change some adverse influences, methinks the first three items above named should receive consideration. Should we not return to our former plans?

J. H. BRUNNER.

The causes that have brought about this decreased increase are, no doubt, numerous. I agree with Dr. Brunner as to the reasons named. The causes, it seems to me, are the Kelly case, the Morrison case, the anti-evangelistic law, the Publishing House scandal, etc. The truth is, our leaders have been to some extent out of harmony with the people. A brave minority, who are in sympathy with the people, have made an unsuccessful fight for what they and many of the people deem to be right.

I am not a second blessing man myself, but I can see very clearly that our second blessing people are our most active revivalists, and the war made on them by the authorities has tended to turn the fruits of their revivals into other Churches.

Legislation and administration have combined to crush the evangelistic movement—a movement that was bringing hundreds daily into the Methodist Church. The first result was to choke off Methodist evangelists—mostly local preachers—and to leave the field to evangelists unfriendly to Methodism. The people will have evangelists, and if they can't get Methodist evangelists, they will take some other kind. The converts of this other kind have generally joined other Churches, or remained out of the Church. Thus we have let slip from us a powerful recruiting agency, voluntarily surrendering it to our rivals and competitors.

A local preacher is not going to be active in carrying the Gospel into waste places when the law makes him feel that he is trespassing, and he is likely at any time to receive an order from a pastor to discontinue his labors. Indeed, every pastor has a legal right to post his charge, putting over his gates this notice:

"Posted—No hunting on these grounds."

The law is a squelcher to local preachers' activity, and the far-reaching influence of this squelching process can be guessed at when we remember that we have more local than travelling preachers.

Commercialism is the bane of the Church. Making a man's standing depend on his success with the collections turns the preacher into a sheriff. A man whose energies are absorbed in money getting is not likely to catch many souls. The preacher becomes sordid and ambitious, his sermons lack power, and the Church languishes.

The Publishing House case has been an incubus, and will continue to be. On this question the leaders have been against the people, and the people against the leaders. The settlement is totally unsatisfactory. We will never recover from it. For four years there have been dissatisfaction and agitation—honest, irrepressible agitation. The effect is seen in an increase in the last quadrennium, only one-fifth of what it was between 1886 and 1890. Naturally the increase should have been greater in the last quadrennium than during any preceding quadrennium. But it is disastrously less.

Perhaps the prevalence of free thought, higher criticism, scientific infidelity, etc., has done much to cripple our Church, as well as sister Churches. Old human made creeds have waxed old, and lacking flexibility to adapt themselves to the new discoveries and advanced ideas of the age, have encumbered the operations of the Church.

Something has to be done. We must conform to an honest public sentiment, or go down. Our Church politics and our Church creeds must conform more closely to enlightened public sentiment, or the people will desert us. I am not for catering to an unhealthy public sentiment. Far from it! I would rather see the Church go under than do that. I would have her stand for the truth and the right at all hazards—democracy in government, and democracy in creed, the universal love of God and the universal atonement; and if with these principles engraven on her escutcheon, she goes down, let her fire a grand salute before she disappears below the waves.

The outlook is gloomy; but if our leading principles are true, and preachers and people will come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, we shall yet see sweeping revivals and great gatherings unto our Zion.

Let us be careful not to repeat our mistakes. Let us repent of our sins; let us reform; let us set our face towards the rising sun. Let us regret the errors of the past, embrace the advantages of the present, and brace ourselves for the duties of the future.

Morristown, Tenn., Sept. 12, 1902.

BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE.

The ninth session of Blackstone Institute began Thursday, September the 18th. The attendance is the largest in the history of the institution. The opening sermon was preached on Sunday morning, September 21st, by Rev. T. J. Taylor, of Crewe, the sermon before the Y. W. C. A. by Rev. Bascom Dey, of Lunenburg circuit, on Sunday evening, and the annual address was delivered on Monday evening by Rev. John B. Winn, of Boydton. It was a great pleasure to have these brethren present, and it was a greater pleasure to hear them talk. Each in his own way gave to the girls messages to prepare them and to strengthen them for their work in this and coming years. The Institute is their debt, but they will have a harvest from their sowing. We give below the opening sermon by Bro. Taylor, and the Y. W. C. A. sermon by Bro. Dey. We expect to publish the address of Bro. Winn next week.

OPENING SERMON.

By Rev. T. J. Taylor.

In the morning sow thy seed.—Ecc. 11: 6.

I. INTRODUCTION.

The seed sustains a similar relation to the plant that thought does to the mind and that act does to the character. As no one expects to produce the corn plant without the use of the sown seed, so no one expects to produce mind or intelligence without first using thought. We have read of the wild man, who had spent all his life from infancy in the dens and in company with the friendly brutes who had nurtured him when captured by civilized men, was found to be void of the reason common to men, but guided rather by the instinct of the beast.

So, likewise, some one claims, and correctly I believe, that the new-born infant is without character. He must think and act before character is formed.

2. The morning has the same relation to the day that the spring and summer sustains to the years. Also that childhood and youth sustain to manhood, womanhood.

One who idles away the morning will not do the full work expected for the day, however diligent and skilful he may be. Nor may the farmer, who neglects to sow in the spring and summer, expect to reap full harvests from

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

He put his face in his hands and shuddered.

"I don't think I can ever forget the awful horror of that bright fall afternoon when Old Ricketts came breathless to me and gasped, 'Come, for the dear Lord's sake!' and I rushed after him. At the mouth of the shaft lay three men dead. One was Lewis Mavor. He had gone down to superintend the running of a new drift. The two men, half drunk with Slavin's whisky, set off a shot prematurely, to their own and Mavor's destruction. They were badly burned, but his face was untouched. A miner was sponging off the bloody froth oozing from his lips. The others were standing about waiting for me to speak, but I could find no word, for my heart was sick, thinking, as they were, of the young mother and her baby waiting at home. So I stood, looking stupidly from one to the other, trying to find some reason, toward that I was, why another should bear the news rather than I, and while we stood there, looking at one another in fear, there broke upon us the sound of a voice mounting high above the birch tops, singing:

"Will ye no' come back again?
Will ye no' come back again?
Better lo'd ye canna be.
Will ye no' come back again?"

"A strange terror seized us. Instinctively the men closed up in front of the body and stood in silence. Nearer and nearer came the clear, sweet voice, ringing like a silver bell up the steep:

"Sweet the lav'rock's note and lang,
Liltin' wildly up the glen,
But ay tae me he sings ae sang,
Will ye no' come back again?"

"Before the verse was finished Old Ricketts had dropped on his knees, sobbing out brokenly, 'O God, O God, have pity, have pity, have pity' and every man took off his hat. And still the voice came nearer, singing so brightly the refrain:

"Will ye no' come back again?"

"It became unbearable. Old Ricketts sprang suddenly to his feet and, gripping me by the arm, said piteously:

"Oh, go to her! For heaven's sake, go to her!"

"I next remember standing in her path and seeing her holding out her hands full of red lilies, crying out:

"Are they not lovely? Lewis is so fond of them!"

"With the promise of much finer ones I turned her down a path toward the river, talking I know not what folly till her great eyes grew grave, then anxious, and my tongue stammered and became silent. Then, laying her hand upon my arm, she said, with gentle sweetness:

"Tell me your trouble, Mr. Craig, and I knew my agony had come, and I burst out:

"Oh, if it were only mine!"

"She turned quite white, and, with her deep eyes—you've noticed her eyes—drawing the truth out of mine, she said:

"Is it mine, Mr. Craig, and my baby's?"

"I waited, thinking with what words to begin. She put one hand to her heart and with the other caught a little poplar tree that shivered under her grasp and said, with white lips, but even more gently:

"Tell me."

"I wondered at my voice being so steady as I said:

"Mrs. Mavor, God will help you and your baby. There has been an accident, and it is all over."

"She was a miner's wife, and there was no need for more. I could see the pattern of the sunlight falling through the trees upon the grass. I could hear the murmur of the river and the cry of the catbird in the bushes, but we seemed to be in a strange and unreal world. Suddenly she stretched out her hands to me and with a little moan said:

"Take me to him."

"Sit down for a moment or two," I entreated.

"No, no; I am quite ready. See," she added quietly; "I am quite strong."

"I set off by a short cut leading to her home, hoping the men would be there ahead of us; but, passing me, she walked swiftly through the trees, and I followed in fear. As we came near the main path I heard the sound of feet, and I tried to stop her, but she, too, had heard and knew.

"Oh, let me go!" she said piteously. "You need not fear."

"And I had not the heart to stop her. In a little opening among the pines we met the bearers. When the men saw her, they laid their burden gently down upon the carpet of yellow pine needles, and then, for they had the hearts of true men in them, they went away into the bushes and left her alone with the dead. She went swiftly to his side, making no cry; but, kneeling beside him, she stroked his face and hands and touched his curls with her fingers, murmuring all the time soft words of love.

"Oh, my darling, my bonny, bonny darling, speak to me! Will you not speak to me just one little word? Oh, my love, my love, my heart's love! Listen, my darling!"

"And she put her lips to his ear, whispering, and then the awful stillness. Suddenly she lifted her head and scanned his face, and then, glancing round with a wild surprise in her eyes, she cried:

"He will not speak to me! Oh, he will not speak to me!"

"I signed to the men, and as they came forward I went to her and took her hands.

"Oh," she said, with a wail in her voice, "he will not speak to me!"

"The men were sobbing aloud. She looked at them with wide open eyes of wonder.

"Why are they weeping? Will he never speak to me again? Tell me," she insisted gently.

"The words were running through my head,

"There's a land that is fairer than day, and I said them over to her, holding her hands firmly in mine. She gazed at me as if in a dream, and the light slowly faded from her eyes as she said, tearing her hands from mine and waving them toward the mountains and the woods:

"But never more here! Never more here!"

"I believe in heaven and the other life, but I confess that for a moment it all seemed shadowy beside the reality of this warm, bright world, full of life and love. She was very ill for two nights, and when the coffin was closed a new baby lay in the father's arms.

"She slowly came back to life, but there were no more songs. The miners still come about her shop and talk to her baby and bring her their sorrows and troubles; but, though she is always gentle, almost tender, with them, no man ever says 'Sing.' And that is why I am glad she sang last week. It will be good for her and good for them."

"Why does she stay?" I asked.

"Mavor's people wanted her to go to them," he replied.

"They have money—she told me about it—but her heart is in the grave up there under the pines, and, besides, she hopes to do something for the miners, and she will not leave them."

I am afraid I snorted a little impatiently as I said: "Nonsense! Why, with her face and manner and voice she could be anything she liked in Edinburgh or in London."

"And why Edinburgh or London?" he asked coolly.

"Why?" I repeated a little hotly.

"You think this is better?"

"Nazareth was good enough for the Lord of Glory," he answered, with a smile none too bright, but it drew my heart to him, and my heat was gone.

"How long will she stay?" I asked.

"Till her work is done," he replied.

"And when will that be?" I asked impatiently.

"When God chooses," he answered gravely. "And don't you ever think but that it is worth while. One value of work is not that crowds stare at it. Read history, man!"

He rose abruptly and began to walk about.

"And don't miss the whole meaning of the life that lies at the foundation of your religion. Yes," he added to himself, "the work is worth doing, worth even her doing."

I could not think so then, but the light of the after years proved him wiser than I. A man to see far must climb to some height, and I was too much upon the plain in those days to catch even a glimpse of distant sunlit uplands of triumphant achievement that lie beyond the valley of self sacrifice.

CHAPTER V.

THE MAKING OF THE LEAGUE.

THURSDAY morning found Craig anxious, even gloomy, but with fight in every line of his face. I tried to cheer him in my clumsy way by chaffing him about his league, but he did not blaze up, as he often did. It was a thing too near his heart for that. He only shrank a little from my stupid chaff and said:

"Don't, old chap. This is a good deal to me. I've tried for two years to get this, and if it falls through now I shall find it hard to bear."

Then I repented my light words and said: "Why, the thing will go sure enough. After that scene in the church they won't go back."

"Poor fellows!" he said, as if to himself. "Whisky is about the only excitement they have, and they find it pretty tough to give it up, and a lot of the men are against the total abstinence idea. It seems rot to them."

"It is pretty steep," I said. "Can't you do without it?"

"No; I fear not. There is nothing else for it. Some of them talk of compromise. They want to quit the saloon and drink quietly in their shacks. The moderate drinker may have his place in other countries, though I can't see it. I haven't thought that out, but here the only safe man is the man who quits it dead and fights it straight. Anything else is sheerest humbug and nonsense."

I had not gone in much for total abstinence up to this time, chiefly because its advocates seemed for the most part to be somewhat ill balanced, but as I listened to Craig I began to feel that perhaps there was a total abstinence side to the temperance question, and as to Black Rock, I could see how it must be one thing or the other.

We found Mrs. Mavor brave and bright. She shared Mr. Craig's anxiety, but not his gloom. Her courage was of that serene kind that refuses to believe defeat possible and lifts the spirit into the triumph of final victory. Through the past week she had been carefully disposing her forces and winning recruits, and yet she never seemed to urge or persuade the men. But as evening after evening the miners dropped into the cozy room down stairs with her talk and her songs she charmed them till they were wholly hers. She took for granted their loyalty, trusted them utterly and so made it difficult for them to be other than true men.

That night Mrs. Mavor's large store-room, which had been fitted up with seats, was crowded with miners when Mr. Craig and I entered.

After a glance over the crowd Craig said: "There's the manager. That means war." And I saw a tall man very fair, whose chin fell away to the vanishing point and whose hair was parted in the middle, talking to Mrs. Mavor. She was dressed in some rich, soft stuff that became her well. She was looking beautiful as ever, but there was something quite new in her manner. Her air of good fellowship was gone, and she was the high bred lady, whose gentle dignity and sweet grace, while very winning, made familiarity impossible.

The manager was doing his best and appeared to be well pleased with himself.

"She'll get him if any one can. I failed," said Craig.

I stood looking at the men, and a fine lot of fellows they were. Free, easy, bold in their bearing, they gave no sign of rudeness, and from their frequent glances toward Mrs. Mavor I could see they were always conscious of her presence. No men are so truly gentle as are the westerners in the presence of a good woman. They were evidently of all classes and ranks originally, but now and in this country of real measurements they ranked simply according to the "man" in them.

"See that handsome young chap of dissipated appearance?" said Craig. "That's Vernon Winton, an Oxford graduate, blue blood, awfully plucky, but quite gone. When he gets repentant, instead of shooting himself he comes to Mrs. Mavor. Fact."

"From Oxford university to Black Rock mining camp is something of a step," I replied.

"That queer looking little chap in the corner is Billy Breen. How in the world has he got here?" went on Mr. Craig.

Queer looking he was—a little man with a small head set on heavy, square shoulders; long arms, and huge hands that sprawled all over his body; altogether a most ungainly specimen of humanity.

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms; music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

his lands, though the soil be fertile, the rain and sunshine never more propitious, and he industrious and tactful. He knows well that while a portion of his harvest may be gathered from late summer and fall sowing, the very large per cent. comes from the earlier seeding. So with the mind and character.

Dr. Josiah Strong says: "For the acquisition of knowledge and discipline, the formation of right habits and character, on which all true success depends, a year is worth five times as much to the youth as to the mature man." And then with great force he adds: "Time is life. Then wasting time is wasting life; and killing time is a kind of suicide or murder."

3. Now, my young friends, I have reached the point where I may repeat with emphasis the words of Dr. Strong, and say that to you this scholastic year you are about to enter upon is worth five times as much as it would be worth to you were you matured. Keep it alive, every day of it. Certainly you will not, as Dr. Strong intimates that some have done, take that of some one else with which to kill your own, thereby committing the double crime of suicide and murder.

Dr. Drummond said to some university students: "A university is not a place for making scholars." So I say to you this school has not for its prime object the making showy scholars, but rather the making of women—women of the highest type, Christian women.

II. PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

As this with you is what Dr. Hillis would call the "strategic point in life," I wish to offer some practical suggestions, which, I hope, will be of service to you. God has given you, just now, the morning—the youth—in which to sow. He has given you the mind field and the character field in which to sow. Here you have willing and competent instructors to aid you in the work of the cultivation of mind and character. Thus time, field and helper are provided for you. And these by those who love you, and seek your highest good. The seed basket, with seeds, we find at hand also. Would that I could say that all the seed therein, and at your disposal, were chosen by your instructors—your wise and loving friends. If so, I would keep silent on this point. Such is not the case, however. I am sure you will find the seed basket of thoughts and acts, as the Master found in the field; seeds of tares, which an enemy has placed there. But know this, it is your exalted privilege, and yours alone, to choose between the good and the bad, and to place them yourself in the soil of mind and heart. Be careful, then, in the selection of seeds.

1. Because seeds have in themselves power to reproduce like when acted upon the existing laws, and there is no necessity for a new law or that God shall work a miracle in order to accomplish it.

To illustrate: You take a seed of corn adapted to our soil, and at the right season plant it, and let it be acted upon by the laws governing our land—atmosphere—the corn, etc., and it will spring up and produce corn like that you planted. It is so in the moral field. You take a man who has been brought up to believe the Bible to be the Word of God. His mother, his teachers, his pastor, all taught him this. Now you let him begin to question the truthfulness of any statement of the blessed book. Let him say I do not believe what is said about Moses and the host crossing the Red Sea. Let him continue until he persuades himself that it is untrue, and this seed of unbelief he planted in his unregenerate heart, and acted upon by the laws of his unregenerated nature, and it will spring up and produce unbelief in other portions of God's Word. We may believe that more than one skeptic has been developed by so small beginning. As with unbelief so with all other sins.

This is true also with the good seed. Let them be sown in the good heart, and acted upon by the laws of grace, and it will spring up and reproduce like.

An honest Jew, who was induced by force of circumstances to read the Gospels, was persuaded that his early teaching regarding the character of Jesus was wrong, fell on his knees before God, and said: "Oh God, Father of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, you know I desire to know the truth. If this is Thy son, let me know." The light came to his heart. His faith accepted not all the Master had said, but extended to every word of the New Testament, and he became a preacher of the Gospel of Jesus. So with every other good seed in the pure and honest heart. For this reason select with care the seed.

2. Because seed multiply. The farmer who sows the one bushel of wheat is not satisfied with one bushel at harvest. He looks for many more. The farmer who finds one blue thistle growing in his field plucks it up, not that he fears the one stalk next year, but many. So in the moral field. The seed of unbelief, not only produces like unbelief, but it intensifies his unbelief, and makes him a scoffer at the word. The seed of faith not only produces other faith, but it intensifies faith until the man is willing to risk all for earth and for heaven on the promise of God. Because of this choose the good seed.

3. Because ignorance in sowing will not change the result. A friend of mine, desiring early salad, prepared with care his bed and sowed what he supposed to be kale seed. But instead he had used the flower seed which his daughters had saved for their garden. Did he get salad? No, he got what he sowed.

I know a beautiful girl. Not long ago I saw her, and oh she was so ugly. I had to take a second look before I decided who she was. It seems that when a child she had the bad habit of drawing her eye in a peculiar position—perhaps to amuse some one—never thinking of the habit which might be formed, and her face being made ugly. But her ignorance did not change the result. "Oh, I can see no harm in not keeping this rule. Or I see no good in obeying this command," says one. Perhaps not, but there are reasons for not transgressing the one and for obey-ing the other, and your ignorance will not make it otherwise.

4. Because reformation does not always immediately destroy all the seeds of former sowing.

The farmer who has a crop of rye knows that he may harvest the crop, fallow the land, sow wheat instead. But unless he has been usually careful in gathering his rye he will find among the wheat here and there a stalk of the former crop, and if he rids his land of the same he must go over the field time and again. This is so in the moral field.

Here is a young lady who is fond of dancing. It takes hold of her very being. But after awhile, in her sober thought, she believes that this is not the life she should live, and she wishes to give her time and energies to a better life. But here is the battlefield. Can she give up dancing? Finally she conquers. She gives her heart to a life of righteousness, and her hand to the Church. She is perfectly sincere in this step, and she means to do right. Now you let her go "where flying feet beat time to music," and in spite of her, in a large number of cases, there will be a desire to return to the old ways. And if she is saved from such steps it will be by the grace of God helping her will.

It is the same with the man who has been a drunkard and has reformed. When he goes where he smells the odor of intoxicants or hears the merry laughter of his old companions in sin; some of the old seed linger among the better harvest. We hear people say sometimes, "Let the young sow their wild oats; they will sow better seed after awhile." She who never sows wild oats at all is safe, my young friends.

It is equally true with the good seed. You sometimes see very bad men manifest a most unselfish and kindly spirit. You wonder at the man. Why did he so good an act? Ah, perhaps a seed of former harvest not yet destroyed. A boy, reared by a loving mother, got into bad company and bad habits, and left her alone to suffer, and for aught he knew, to die, while he went his unbridled way. One day he was told that the home in which she lived was burning down. Running to the same, he found it full of smoke and fire, while many stood around, kept away by heat. "Where is mother?" he cried. "In her chamber," said one; "but you must not go in, you will perish." "Stand aside," said he, and the man who had almost broken his mother's heart by preferring wicked companions to his mother, fought his way through smoke and fire until he found her prostrate body, almost lifeless, lifted it in his arms, and carried her to a place of safety. All the good seed had not been destroyed.

5. Because of the effect on our future and eternal destiny.

I know not what hell means. But I believe that the sorrows of the other world are largely augmented by the harvest from the seed sown in this life. Take the avaricious man. The seed of avarice being sown in his unregenerated heart and acted upon by the laws of the same, spring up and multiply until he will sell all for gain. Transplant him to hell with the seed multiplied a thousand times a sand. Now tell him, as was told that there is an impassable gulf between him and the desire of his heart, and have you not one whose suffering might well be likened to "the pain that dieth not?"

Take the drunkard, whose thirst multiplied until to withhold him mad. Send him to hell, and his desires multiplied a thousand times a thousand. Tell him then that a drop can be given to cool his parched tongue, and have you not a man whose suffering might be compared to "fire that is not quenched?"

Oh, friend, select not the seed which brings forth harvest of eternal wrath.

6. On the other hand, I know what heaven is. It may be a fair, and a city of beauty; but I believe that the joys of heaven are largely increased by the seed sown here. Because of these things sow with care the seed you sow.

III. CONCLUSION.

And now let me ask you where your harvest be?

1. Of this session's sowing? Will you leave next summer with good reports as students and as ladies, in respect of teachers and love of mates. Some will return home cheering toiling father's heart, and blessing sacrificing mother's soul. What shall that be you?

2. Of life? Some will come down to the end honored and loved. What shall that be you?

3. In eternity? Some will say "Well done good and faithful servant. Is that to be your harvest?"

May I answer the questions by saying another?

What seeds will you sow? Remember, that every sweet word is a good seed; every true faithful act is a good seed. The seed you sow is sure.

See the picture of the men and women of the seed. As the seed from one hand a viper springs to life, while from the other fall a seed which produces the sweet song-bird.

What will fall from your hand?

ETERNAL LIFE—WHAT IS IT? Sermon before Y. W. C. A. by Bascom Dey.

"This is life eternal that they shall know Thee, the only true God, Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent"—John 17: 3.

To form any correct idea of life we must have some adequate conception of a high degree of morality for mortal life is eternal life. We select, then, the highest life, beginning with the physical as the physical is the basis of life. What is it to perfectly live in this life? We must have a healthy body. There must be no inherited disease; no contracted disease. There must be no corruption. That the body is healthy it must be properly fed, properly clothed. The body must be educated. The body must not be diseased because it is the temple of the Holy Ghost—the palace in which life dwells. We say there is perfect physical life when all the senses are intact and perfectly developed. If any sense is injured or destroyed it cannot be that we have perfect physical eye is destroyed, all the beautiful colors of the external world are added to the soul. If hearing is destroyed, all the sweet sounds of earth are as if they did not exist. The injury or destruction of one sense renders physical life imperfect. The destruction of all our senses produces death. Perfect physical life presupposes a sound and carefully trained mind. There must be a sound mind in a sound body. This training of mind must be in two directions—intellectual, moral. What is it, then, to have a sound, well-developed mind? It is to be able to think clearly, reason correctly, know perfectly and act intelligently. When man, at every point of his nature, has been touched, developed, beautified, we say his mortal life is perfect. But how does a conception of a perfect mortal life aid us in forming an idea of eternal life? In this way: a perfect mortal life is eternal life in embryo, eternal life already begun. M. Drummond says that "spiritual laws are natural laws perfected." So eternal life is mortal life expanded, beautified, developed, carried up to the spiritual sphere according to the laws of spiritual and immortal life. Now there can be no high degree of life in a mortal or immortal without knowledge. In natural life the soul is superior to the mole because it has more knowledge, and man is superior to the horse because he has more knowledge than the horse. What, then, is highest in the soul of man? What is the "summum bonum?" What is the supreme thing, the greatest of all? Professor Drummond says that it is not faith or hope or sacrifice or charity or knowledge, but love, and he has his conclusions on the teachings of the 13th chapter of 1st Corinthians. We all have the temerity and presumption to differ from this celebrated authority, and shall try and show that his conclusion is at variance with the teachings of this scripture, and also supported by the argument from reason. Now, what is St. Paul trying to show in this wonderful passage of scripture? Is he trying to show what is highest in the human soul, or is he trying to point out the highest motive in Christian service? Undoubtedly the latter is his object. At the close of this chapter we have this reading: "And now abideth faith, hope, love, these three, but the greatest of these is love." That is, love is greater than faith or hope, or anything else as a motive to Christian service. St. Paul goes on to mention different degrees of service, and shows that none is acceptable to God unless it is actuated by the right motive, which motive is love. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have love, I am become as sounding brass and a clanging cymbal." That may preach very eloquently and loudly, but if my preaching has not as its motive it is all sound without meaning to God. "And though I give all my goods to feed the poor, though I give my body to be burned and have not love, it profiteth me nothing." That is, all charity and sacrifice not prompted by love, is only acceptable motive of all service to God, shall profit the giver or do nothing. "And though I have the gift of prophecy and understand all mysteries and knowledge," etc. St. Paul does not here, as some think, compare Christian love with Christian knowledge, but Christian love with human knowledge. Dr. Clark says that the word "knowledge" here means "every human art and science." Toward the end of the chapter knowledge of God is very plainly put higher than love of God. "For we know in part," says St. Paul, "and we prophesy in part, but when that which is perfect is come then that which is in part shall be done away." What does the word "perfect" here refer to? Certainly not to perfect love, but to perfect knowledge from what follows in the chapter. "For now we see through a glass darkly, but then face to face." Why is the vision here darkened, obscured? Is it an account of defect of love, or is it due to imperfect knowledge of God. It seems to me to be rather due to imperfect knowledge of God. And finally, to make one more quotation: "Now I know in part, but then, shall I know even as I am known?" That is, I shall know as God knows me. But God knows me perfectly, therefore I shall know perfectly also. Knowledge of God, then, is the beginning of spiritual life and life's highest development. "This is life eternal, that they may know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent." "Know thyself" was the Delphic oracle. Perhaps we have no wiser proverb, for we can never know others until we know self. Knowledge of a normal self is the key that unlocks the lives of others. Man was cursed in Eden for knowledge gained through disobedience, and driven from his earthly home, and yet it is knowledge, properly directed, that shall at last elevate him to the heaven of heavens.

Love is, then, unquestionably the highest motive to Christian service, but knowledge of God is the soul's highest development. Certainly no one will claim that motive is higher than the result or fruit of motive. If so, then the seed is superior to the apple, the act itself higher than character. Although at all times guided by sincere motives, yet life would be a very unsatisfactory thing if these motives never reached results. Always trying and never succeeding describes a life of failure.

But knowledge of God is greater than love of God, because love is dependent upon knowledge for her very existence. I love God because I know Him, and I serve Him because I love Him. How can we love that which we do not know? We may love that which we cannot see and never have seen. "Whom having not seen ye love," referring to Christ and our love for Him. But there is no Scripture that says whom having not known ye love.

Relationship, it matters not how near it may be, would never call forth the feeling of love unless the relationship was known. Friendship is based upon knowledge. The loves and sometimes the dislikes of parents for their children are explained by their knowledge of those children. In the one case the good traits are known; in the other case the bad traits are known.

"When you know him better you will like him better," is an old proverb that we all have heard and experienced. Know him better, like him less, is also sometimes true. Like or dislike, then, is based upon knowledge. In fact, knowledge is the basis of all emotions. I fear a man because I know he is able to injure me. If God is my great spiritual Father, I must know Him before I can love Him. If Jesus Christ is my Saviour, I must know Him as Saviour before my heart goes out to Him in an act of supreme devotion. The sinner does not love God because he does not know Him. The skeptic does not accept God because he does not know Him. A great deal of the Bible and much of our preaching is or ought to be to make known God to the natural man.

The love of man in this life, at best, is only an emotion, an extremely variable quantity. At one moment it is ardent, deep, beautiful as the gates of heaven—a thing that charms, transfigures and glorifies human life. At another time it is indifferent, flat, insipid, a once radiant angel, but now luminous with joy, no more wearing the homespun garments of the dull and commonplace.

But knowledge, with unvarying step, ever moves onward and upward. It is true she is not winged as love, but rather has to plod her way; but her kindling eye, with heroic determination, is ever fixed on royal heights, and she knows when there a throne awaits her with all the regal splendors of the human made divine. Knowledge of God is higher than love of God, because love is dependent upon knowledge, discretion, judgment (and discretion and judgment are only forms of knowledge, knowledge properly directed), are the great balance wheel that regulates the power of love. Love without knowledge is a blind Sampson, with might and main tugging at the pillars of the temple whose fall and destruction shall crush himself to death. Love without knowledge is like an unbroken colt, you cannot tell what he will next do. How often has love, for want of discretion, been worse than thrown away.

Every step that man takes toward God, through faith or hope or love or in any other way, is to know Him better and enjoy Him more; for enjoyment of God finds its root in knowing God. "Out of our frail and yet sublime humanity," says Fred. W. Robertson, "the demand that rises in the earlier hours of our religion may be this—love my soul; but in the most unearthly moment it is this, 'Tell me thy name.' We move through a world of mystery; and the deepest question is, What is the being that is ever near, sometimes felt, never seen? That which has haunted us from childhood with a dream of something surpassingly fair, which has never yet been realized? That which sweeps through the soul at times as a desolation like the blast from the wings of the angel of death, bearing us stricken and silent in our loneliness? That which has touched us in our tenderest point, and the flesh has quivered with agony, and our mortal affections have shrivelled up with pain? That which comes to us as aspirations of nobleness and conceptions of superhuman excellence?

Shall we say it or He? What is it? Who is He? Those anticipations of immortality and God—what are they? Are they the mere throbbings of my own heart, heard and mistaken for a living something beside me? Are they the sound of my own wishes, echoing through the vast void of nothingness? Or shall I call them God, Father, Spirit, soul? A living being within me or outside me? Tell me thy name, thou awful mystery of loveliness. This is the struggle of all earnest life." And to know that name is the crown of life.

Eternal life—what, then, is it, and what does it include? There are doubtless principles and elements which enter into eternal life, of which we know nothing, and can form no conception. Yet may we not say, with almost absolute certainty, that eternal life will be mortal life ennobled, expounded and developed—carried up to the spiritual standard of perfection—mortal life touched at every point by the transforming finger of God? Mortal life uplifted and glorified by the indwelling of a larger portion of the divine nature? Every faculty of mind will be quickened; every power of soul strengthened; spiritual vision will be made keener and deeper; love more enchantingly beautiful, until the spirit of man, transfigured by the power of the infinite, shall be able to apprehend as never before and drink in the ineffable splendors of God the Father, the unfolding glories of Jesus Christ the Son, and the unapproachable sanctity of the Holy Ghost.

Eternal life means more, infinitely more, than mere duration of existence. Duration of existence alone would mean nothing more to the soul than it means to the clod or stone. Centuries, cycles, æons, are in themselves meaningless to life. Life has meaning, utility richness in proportion to its contents. This is the true measure of life. What have you thought; what have you desired; what have you accomplished? Have your motives been sincere; have your efforts been earnest? Have you stood each day with hand upon the round of the ladder of progress, trying to climb into a higher sphere and a broader world?

"We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths,

In feelings, not in figures on a dial.

We should count time by heart throbs.

He most lives

Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best;

And he whose heart beats quickest lives the longest;

Lives in one hour more than in years do some,

Whose fat blood sleeps as it slips along their veins."

Eternal life includes activity. He in this life is most alive who is most active. We rest from labor, that which tires and oppresses—the present necessary accompaniment of work; but we will not rest from work. Eternal life will be a state of the most intense activity. Away, then, with that sleepy, lazy idea of heaven, which pictures the immortal soul reclining upon a bed of flowers, floating in a balmy atmosphere of blue and dreaming away the æons as they come and go. Holiness will enter into the immortal life. "Blessed

LESSON I, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 5.

Text of the Lesson, Josh. 1, 1-23.
Memory Verses, 8, 9—Golden Text,
Josh. 1, 9—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

1, 2. The Lord spake unto Joshua, the son of Nun, Moses' minister.

This is to me the heart of these two verses and of the whole lesson and of the whole Bible—the Lord hath spoken. Note the thrilling words in Isa. 1, 2, "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth, for the Lord hath spoken," and compare Deut. xxxii, 1; Ps. 1, 1; Heb. 1, 1, 2. In Isa. lvi, 2, we learn that the man whom the Lord regards with favor is the man with a poor and contrite spirit, who trembles at His word, not those who with the boldness of the devil dispute and criticize and minimize His word. Reiterating the assurance that He had given the land to Israel, He bids Joshua as their leader to arise and cross over Jordan. God is their leader, Joshua His servant.

3, 4. Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon that have I given unto you, as I said unto Moses.

And again He defines the boundary as in Gen. xv, 18. The purposes of God are, like Himself, eternal. His counsel stands, and He does all His pleasure (Eph. iii, 11; Ps. xxxiii, 11; Isa. xlv, 10). He who from all eternity saw just what He would do and when He would do it desires men and women who will let Him work in them both to will and to do, having no plans, ambitions or aims, but just to be good clay in the loving and all wise potter's hands, believing His every word or, in the language of this passage, taking possession of all that He says is yours.

5. As I was with Moses so I will be with thee. I will not fail thee nor forsake thee.

Joshua had seen as Moses' minister some of the Lord's dealings with him, and he would doubtless feel that this gracious assurance covered all he could possibly need or desire. Unto all Israel and to Joshua Moses had given very similar words of encouragement (Deut. xxxi, 6-8), but now God Himself speaks to His servant Joshua as He had previously spoken to him by Moses, and the words are the same as we shall see in these following verses. Some say, "Oh, if I could only hear God speak to me!" not believing that in His word He is as truly speaking to them as if they heard an audible voice from heaven.

6, 7. Only be thou strong and very courageous.

See this command repeated in each of these verses, with the assurance that what God had sworn to do He would accomplish through Joshua. So there was nothing for Joshua to do but to believe and go obediently forward. He had no strength, but God who sent him had all strength, and Joshua had learned or was learning to say, "In the Lord have I righteousness and strength," and that it was his privilege to "be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might" (Isa. xlv, 24; Eph. vi, 10). There is much comfort in the assurance of Ps. xxix, 11, "The Lord will give strength unto His people, the Lord will bless His people with peace."

8. This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night.

The first two psalms which form a preface to the whole book of Psalms, or, rather, to the five books of Psalms, begin with "Blessed is the man" and end with "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him." The life of the godly man as set forth in the First Psalm was fully manifest in the man of Nazareth, the Lord Jesus Christ, and was never fully manifest in any other. Yet every redeemed person should manifest that same life as fully as possible. The life of Jesus should be seen in us (II Cor. iv, 10, 11). This can only be as we let His word dwell in us richly and meditate on it continually and are able to say, "Oh, how love I Thy law, it is my meditation all the day" (Ps. cxix, 97). He has said that if we love Him we will keep His word (John xiv, 23), and the only place to keep it is in our hearts.

9. Have not I commanded thee? Be strong and of a good courage. Be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.

The assurance that God sends us and that He is with us covers every thing. It is the greatest that mortals can have. It was God's encouragement to Moses, and now to Joshua, and later to Gideon and to Jeremiah (Ex. iii, 10, 12; Judg. vi, 14, 16; Jer. i, 7, 8). It was also the great encouragement of Jesus Himself when here in His humiliation (John viii, 29), and before He returned to heaven He assured His followers that He had all power in heaven and on earth and that He would be with them all the days (Matt. xxviii, 18-20). If we believe His words we shall neither be afraid nor dismayed nor discouraged.

10, 11. Within three days ye shall pass over this Jordan to go in to possess the land which the Lord your God giveth you to possess it.

Thus Joshua commanded the officers of the people, for he believed God. The land was theirs as a free gift from God, but they had to enter into it and appropriate it. Jordan was before them to be crossed, and the walled cities and the giants were still there, but there are no difficulties to God or to those who, like Joshua and Caleb, see God only. In our own case as believers in Jesus Christ, redeemed by His blood, it is our privilege to appropriate His promises and by faith in Him live lives of victory over self and sin to His glory. May the encouraging words of our lesson come home to each of us in the power of the Spirit.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 5, "Resume of Progress of Methodist Missions"—Text,
Is. xlv, 1-8.

The more fully we know the work of our church in missions the more cause shall we see for gratitude to God for the success achieved and the increase of effort on our part for greater accomplishment in the future.

The report of the missionary society can be had by writing to the secretaries at New York. This will give very clearly and fully the changes taking place in all our fields. It will show the money expended in each and the work done and doing.

The missionary library selected specially for league use should be owned, if possible, by the chapter and meetings arranged at which various phases of the work can be given by different members in papers, select readings, conversations and lectures. Home-made outline maps and blackboard sketches will add interest and make more vivid the facts presented. It is well to have the history of the missionary movement in our church given, showing how the work began and then follow its progress in the different lands where our workers now labor. Our domestic missions in the home land are of great importance and should not be forgotten. We have work among the Indians, Chinese, Japanese, Portuguese, French, Italians, Swedes, Norwegians and several other nationalities in the United States. Our German work is specially strong, and its publications are very ably conducted.

An evening can well be devoted to Mexico and another to South America. The work in Porto Rico, under charge of Dr. C. D. Drees, opens finely and should be kept in mind.

Bishop Hartzell is abroad in Africa, and in Liberia, Angola and Rhodesia is developing new strength in our missions. India is vast and has a mighty native church, with schools, hospitals, orphanages and the finest equipment of any of our missions. From Bouday to the Himalayas the great empire is feeling the touch of an awakening life. In Burma and far down the strait of Malacca, Rangun, Singapore and far Borneo all have Methodist churches and schools, of whose progress and popularity we need to take note.

China and Japan, the Philippines, Hawaii, and Europe from Italy to Scandinavia, have fascinating stories for us in these days. The romance has not passed from earthly affairs yet. To find it one has only to know our mission enterprises. Stories of devotion and daring from native and foreigner come to us from many lands. If you would have your heart thrill and gain a thorough love for God and man, do not neglect to note the advance in our mission work. Keep in touch with the upward march of God's hosts. Know what our own church is doing among heathen far off and near at hand. Then with an enthusiasm born of intelligence and pure devotion give cash and prayer and all effort to the extension of the kingdom of God.

Knowing and Doing.

The Holy Spirit is the spirit of power. To know is one thing and to be able to do is another. Mere knowing without the ability to do were an idle mockery. The spirit of knowledge is also the spirit of vital power. He gives Himself to us to dwell in us that we may live and yet our life be His, so saturating our own that when we live it is in reality Christ living in us by His spirit. This blessed fact alone makes the attainment of character a possibility. Moral impotence is the chief characteristic of the natural man and moral power that of the spirit filled man. The ability to do is present in the ability to know, and knowing and doing make possible the attainment of the fullness of the stature of Christ. But this spirit of power not only reflects our personal being, but fills with vitality our individual doing. The effort for others is filled with this selfsame power. It vitalizes thought, it fans aspiration and makes a word spoken a power, quickening whatsoever it touches, for everything lives whithersoever the spirit of power goes. —Episcopal Record.

Apathy.

Whatever may be the precise import of that sentence, "The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force," it is very evident therefrom that nothing really religious is to be gained by apathy, but only by the vigorous exertion of all our powers; not by waiting, but by assault; not by expecting God to do everything for us, but by prompt, continuously and fully doing our part; not always by carrying on a war of defense, but by assuming the offensive whenever required; not by lazily encompassing for a long sleep.

out by advancing on the one Christian Statesman.

Prejudice.

Prejudice never reasons, but it sways the mind and action some instinctive or sudden or impulse. It has its seat in ignorance or weakness or idleness. It is a blinder of perception and relation which to personal and public injury. It is as a hindrance to truth, knowledge to progress. It is a neutralizing that resists and modifies the most potent argument, the most powerful courses, the most moving appeals, the most stirring consideration Friend.

An Even Temper.

He who walks through life with even temper and a gentle patient with himself, patient with others, patient with difficulties, crosses, has an everyday grand beyond that which is won in battle chanted in cathedrals.—Dr. Dewey

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT

Gems Gleaned From the Teachings of All Denominations.

The highest test of love is obedience.—Rev. Dr. Charles W. Byrd, Methodist, Atlanta, Ga.

Our Inheritance.

Do we realize the inheritance by a crucified God?—Rev. P. C. O'ly, Catholic, Brooklyn.

The Christian's Privilege.

The Christian's privilege is to be at freedom.—Rev. Dr. William Holtzclaw, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

The Law of Nature.

If men will commit sin, they suffer for it somehow, some time, where. This is a law of nature. Dr. Charles Stelzle, Presbyterian, Louis

Two Sides of Life.

To cleave to that which is good one side of the Christian life; the half is to abhor that which is evil.—Rev. A. S. Garver, Unitarian, Weter, Mass.

Self Denial Means Progress.

Self denial always means progress. It takes the one who practices it a lower to a higher plane.—Rev. N. Beard, President San Francisco Training School.

Hope For Something Better.

The man who lives without aim or without the hope of making thing better out of his life is practically dead.—Rev. Dr. Frank De Witt Mage, Presbyterian, Chicago.

Religion and Citizenship.

If Christians were better citizens the gospel might have a chance. sentiment of sermons and gospelings should be carried to the people.—Rev. Dr. Bacon, Indianapolis, Ind.

Burden Makers.

Every worthless man increases the weight of the world's sorrow. A selfish man adds to the pressure of the world's misery.—Rev. Dr. Donald Mackay, Reformed Church, New

Destiny of the Race.

The destiny of the race depends on what men love and what they and not upon the kind of fruit the individual man or woman may eat.—Rev. Adolph Roeder, Swabian, Orange, N. J.

The Most Useless Thing.

The most useless thing in all the world is doubt. It has left a path of desolation through all history, makes no heroes, wins no battles, files no contests, builds no empires. Conviction does. Believe your and doubt your doubts.—Rev. Saged, Presbyterian, Pittsburg.

Temptations of College Life.

Men speak about the temptations of college life as if there were no temptations in business, as if the banker and broker lived in a holier atmosphere and as if the apostle of Wall street were in closer touch with the Ten Commandments than other men.—Rev. Dr. Patton to Students of Princeton University.

Supremacy of Christ.

Among the changes taking place in the political, social and literary world, while the leaders of the past are relegated to the rear and those whom our fathers honored are despised by their sons, Christ steadily holds his grip on the lives of men and women everywhere.—Rev. N. R. Hinds, Methodist, Chicago.

Spiritual Triumph of Christ.

The spiritual triumph of Christ over the interior being of humanity is much more wonderful and deep than the influence of his religion over the standards of art, literature, civics or social intercourse. Zealous lovers of Christianity ought to keep this in mind when they are fearful of the spread of modern unbelief and indifferentism.—Rev. Henry O'Keefe, Catholic, San Francisco.

Ethics Without Doctrine.

The popular cry is for the ethics of Christ without his doctrinal statements. That means to stop at the alphabet of Christianity. Such a lack of ambition will result either in unhappiness, because we have not given the soul the supply it must have, or in inconsistency of life, because it leaves us in ignorance of the orders under which we are professing to sail.—Bishop Cheney, Episcopalian, Chicago.

Standard of Religious Faith.

As the ages run on the authority of Jesus becomes more and more the final normal standard of religious faith. The world is steadily losing satisfaction in the oracles of philosophers and in the doctrines of dogmatists; hence creeds and councils are of lighter weight than ever they have been in Christian times. Bold and blatant unbelief is neither louder nor as loud in its assertions as it once was.—Rev. J. L. Withrow, Congregationalist, Boston.

Demands of the World.

When you try to suit the church to the demands of the world, you will end in its entire destruction as a force of good and righteousness. You will find the real underlying objection that many have to the church is that it forbids a life of sin. Some seem to have the idea that the church should relieve men of all labor; that it should make life one continual picnic and holiday; that it should refuse the satisfaction of no desire.—Rev. J. W. Romich, Lutheran, Allegheny City, Pa.

The Divine Authority.

The divine authority of Jesus Christ distinctly prohibits any modern Joshua from killing his way into any modern Canaan, and if the world deems necessary such things as are being done in South Africa and the Philippines it has no right to claim any Christian sanction for the enterprises and the methods employed. The only point we are just now making is that, granting that the brute policy is necessary and therefore right, we cannot put Christ's name to it.—Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Presbyterian, New York.

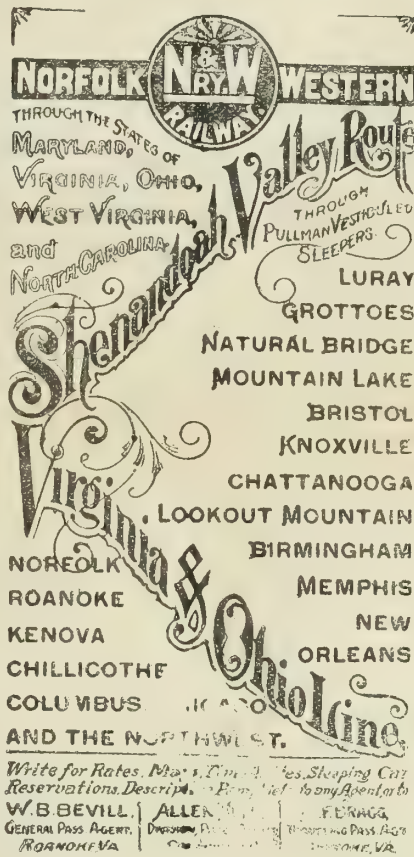

The United States revenue officers have just caught a prodigy in Kentucky—a woman moonshiner, who weighs 490 pounds. She was hauled to Owensboro in a wagon for trial, but could not be got up the narrow stairs leading to the court room. United States Commissioner Lindsey, therefore, telegraphed for permission to hold court in the open air.

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF CINCINNATI, O.,

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over .....	$7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than .....	4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 .....	3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

BLACKSTONE INSTITUTE.

are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." None but the pure, none but the good, shall ever behold the King in His beauty.

Eternal life will carry along with it the sense of security—security from the ills and cares and disappointments to which we are exposed in this mortal life. Immortal life will, in a very important sense, be a life of love—love with all narrowness, selfishness and fleshiness purged away—love made strong and firm and immutable, even like unto the great love wherewith Christ has loved us. But high and above all else, leading every faculty, power and capacity of the soul, the expanding knowledge of God, as a crown of glory, shall beautify and enrich the immortal life.

To know God as creator of this world and all worlds; as preserver and guardian of all life; as director and controller of all force and power, and as the great spiritual father of all the children of men. To know Jesus Christ as God Incarnate, as the God-man and man-God; to know Him as Saviour, intercessor, elder brother, everlasting friend. To know Him as the incarnation of all that is high and wide and deep and great and glorious. To know Him as the soul's highest satisfaction. To know the Holy Ghost as my purity, joy, and my light. This is life, true life, present life, future life, eternal life; life sweetest, best and highest.

"Oh God, Thou bottomless abyss;

Thee to perfection who can know;
O height immense, what words suffice
Thy countless attributes to show?

Unfathomable depths Thou art;

O plunge me in Thy mercy's sea;

Void of true wisdom is my heart;

With love embrace and cover me.

Greatness unspeakable is Thine.

RANDOLPH-MACON OPENS.

Ashland, Va., September 20th.—Randolph-Macon College opened this week with an increased attendance of 20 per cent. over last session, and new students are arriving by every train. Five States and Japan are represented in the student body. The members of the faculty are all back from their summering places, and are in the best of spirits. Bishop Granbery and the president made the opening addresses. Dr. Lipscomb, the new secretary and treasurer, who will live on the campus, is a great addition to the community.

Much interest is being manifested in football and other athletic sports, and judging by the present prospects Randolph-Macon will win new laurels this session.

The campaign for raising the $200,000 necessary to meet the Branch proposition is still going on, and the outlook for success is bright. This money will enable Randolph-Macon to open its doors free to all who can enter—the beginning of a new era in the history of the college, and perhaps in Southern educational history.—Dispatch.

Rev. J. L. Pribble, pastor in charge of the Methodist churches of King George, returned yesterday from Baltimore, where he went last Tuesday to purchase pews for Fletcher's chapel, the magnificent new Methodist house of worship at Passapatanzy, in the upper end of the county.—News.

Rev. R. A. Compton, pastor of the Methodist church in Chase City, expects to hold a series of meetings at the Methodist church here, beginning on the third Sunday in this month. He will be assisted by Rev. P. L. Bradford. The co-operation of all Christians is earnestly solicited.—Progressive.

Rev. Dr. B. F. Lipscomb, formerly of Norfolk, and now Secretary and Treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, preached at Centenary Methodist church here yesterday. Dr. Lipscomb was till recently—till his acceptance of the position at Randolph-Macon College, Washington Street M. E. church, Petersburg, where he has been succeeded by Rev. Dr. Starr.—Norfolk Ledger.

Bishop A. Coke Smith made a talk to the Methodist ministers at the weekly meeting in this city to-day, giving them a very interesting account of his episcopal work thus far. He had decided to make his home at Charlotte, N. C., for the present, at least, and the people there are very anxious for him to make his permanent residence with them. He moves his family there, from this section, in the next two or three weeks.—Ledger.

Rev. J. T. Mastin, financial agent of the Virginia Conference Orphanage, also former pastor of the Memorial M. E. church at this place, spent Sunday night with Mr. E. M. Tilley, South Norfolk. Mr. Mastin stated that the Orphanage opened September 1st with an enrollment of fourteen children. He also stated that applications for admission are being received daily. Mr. Mastin preached an excellent sermon at Liberty Street M. E. church Sunday night.—Virginian-Pilot.

The first meeting of the Rosebud Society of Epworth Methodist church since the summer adjournment was held in the lecture room of the church yesterday afternoon, and an interesting programme was rendered.

An address was delivered by the pastor, Rev. Richard H. Bennett. Readings were given by Mr. J. Herl Gatliff and Miss Roseline Foster. Miss Elizabeth Barhan gave a recitation. A haritone solo was rendered by yno, of New York, and a piano solo as given by Miss Ruth Burch.

The report of the financial condition of the society was read by the president, Mr. T. S. Southgate, which showed the finances to be in a prosperous condition.—Norfolk Dispatch.

A revival meeting has been in progress at our Methodist church for the last two weeks, with two or three conversions up to date. The pastor, Rev. J. W. W. Sawyer, is being assisted by Rev. W. P. Wright.—Peninsula Enterprise.

REOPENING OF BETHEL.

The improvements on Bethel, the little chapel situated near Blunt's bridge, about three miles from Ashland, will be completed this week. The seating capacity of the building has been greatly increased, and a vestibule under a very neat little tower has been added. For a long time the building has not been sufficient to accommodate the congregation, and it is very gratifying to see this much needed work done. The church will be reopened on the fourth Sunday, September 28th. Two services will be held. Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, D. D., will preach in the morning at 11 o'clock and again at 3 P. M. Musical talent from Ashland will be had for the occasion. We look forward to a pleasant time worshipping in our little temple in the grove on that autumnal Sabbath. All will find a welcome there and all are invited to come.—Ashland Herald.

METHODIST PREACHERS' MEETING.

The inclement weather this morning and the free street parade of the circus were topics that the public discussed to-day, but the Methodist preachers gathered in their weekly session. The chairman, Rev. L. W. Guyer, presided, and Dr. W. G. Starr led in prayer.

Reports from High Street, Market Street, Blandford, West Street, and Washington Street churches were given by the pastors. Inclement weather on yesterday caused the congregations to be smaller than usual.

Rev. S. C. Hatcher was buoyant and cheerful at the beginning of the work of improvement on the building at Market Street, and at the prospect of a good time the first Sunday in October at the rally day services.

Rev. George E. Booker reported as usual encouragingly of the work at High Street.

Our new president presides with ease and grace.

Dr. W. G. Starr spoke encouragingly of his charge, and is rapidly adjusting himself to the duties of the pastorate in which he so well succeeds.

The preachers decided to invite Evangelist George R. Stuart to hold a meeting here next spring, and a committee was appointed to wait upon the distinguished preacher.—Secretary, in Progress.

IMPROVEMENTS COMPLETED.

Repairs on the Asbury Methodist church have recently been completed, and delightful exercises were held Sunday afternoon in celebration of the happy event.

After a voluntary by Union Station

M. E. church choir, and prayer by Rev. W. F. Davis, the pastor called on Dr. W. D. Willis, who gave a brief but interesting resume of the church's history since 1889, when it was only a small mission on Taylor street, with a membership of forty. It has gradually grown and strengthened, until now it is self-sustaining and numbers about 290 on its roll.

A duet by the Misses Traylor was then sung, following which Rev. Mr. Maxey, the pastor, very happily congratulated the church on its present condition, and bespoke for its future still better and more far-reaching results. Miss Isaacs, of the All Saints' Episcopal Church choir, next sang a most appropriate and sweet solo. After this rendition the Rev. George H. Spooner, of Trinity church, delivered the principal address of the afternoon. It was not only a practical talk, encouraging and helpful, but scholarly and finished in detail.

A duet by Mrs. V. H. Wyatt and Mr. R. S. M. Valentine was then sung and a special collection and subscription taken for the repairs.

This church fronts on Lombardy street, near Hanover. In its present condition, renovated and beautified, it is one of the handsomest and most comfortable houses of worship in the West End. Its seating capacity is about 500. Strangers and other visitors are always welcome at every service.

Rev. Jack Rosser, of the Charles City circuit, lectured at the Highland Springs church last night.—Leader.

REV. ANDREW SLEDD AT M'KEN-DREE M. E. CHURCH.

Rev. Andrew Sledd, son of the late Rev. Dr. R. N. Sledd, of the Virginia Methodist Conference, preached in this city yesterday. Mr. Sledd was a resident of Norfolk when his father was a pastor here, but had, as the sons of itinerant Methodist ministers are apt to do, dropped out of the minds of the Norfolk people, except his intimate friends, till he was brought into national prominence recently by the publication of his now famous article in the Atlantic Monthly of July, 1902. That brought him quickly to the minds of many Norfolk people, and great interest was felt here as to the outcome of the incident above referred to.

He has been in the city for some days, together with his wife and child, and he yesterday morning preached at McKendree Methodist church in Brambleton, of which Rev. Wm. R. Proctor is pastor. Notwithstanding the threatening weather he had quite a large number of people to hear him. He took as his text Numbers 23: 10, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like His."

Like his distinguished father, he is a very scholarly man and an excellent preacher. His sermon was heard with close interest and pleasure by those present, and was pronounced a very fine pulpit effort.

Professor Sledd held a chair in Emory College, Georgia, till his Atlantic Monthly article caused such a stir in the South, when he deemed it best to resign his connection with that institution. He leaves here this afternoon for Yale, to take a special course this fall and winter. His family will remain here for awhile, with his sister, Mrs. Hinton, of Brambleton.—Ledger.

MEETINGS AT BROAD STREET.

The Broad Street Methodist church was filled to the last foot of space last night. Every one was eager to hear the Rev. George R. Stuart. The services began at 8 o'clock, and for fifteen minutes a song and prayer service was held. The choir director, Mr. Seagle, sang two solos. One was the "Ninety and Nine," which Mr. Moody used to call on Mr. Sankey to sing so often. The choir is a large one, and the music full of life and spirit.

Mr. Stuart had an immense audience last night. Quite a number stood throughout the hour and a half of the service. But Mr. Stuart is going to have still larger crowds to hear him. He is an attractive speaker. His manner is very easy, and his discourse is rich in illustration. Some of his stories are good. One illustration was drawn from the refining of white sugar. The many processes through which it had to pass before it reached its purity showed what might be necessary to make beautiful the character of a man. This story was admirably told, and made a fine impression.

One thing can be said of Mr. Stuart's sermons, judging them all by last night's, that they are free from everything that is in the least objectionable. Mr. Stuart's talk last night was a series of anecdotes and illustrations, all impressing his theme upon his hearers.

The speaker used last night to prepare his congregation and the church folks for the meeting. He divided Christians into three classes—"opportunity-takers, opportunity-makers and opportunity-breakers." He spoke for about three-quarters of an hour, and it did not seem nearly so long as that.

The moment he finished his discourse he dismissed the congregation, the choir alone remained to practice. Mr. Stuart announced hours of meeting for to-day as from 12 to 1 in the afternoon, and at 7:30 in the evening. At the night service exercises of song and prayer will continue until 8, when preaching will begin.

Mr. Stuart has preached three times in Richmond, and each time from the text from Galatians, "Therefore, my brethren, as we have opportunity, let us do good." The phrase selected last night was, "as we have opportunity."

Mr. Stuart spoke three times on Sunday. He preached at the Broad Street church Sunday at 11 A. M., and again at 8 P. M. Sunday afternoon he spoke to about 800 men at the Academy of Music. His avowed purpose was to make people "laugh, think and weep." Sunday afternoon he succeeded very well in doing this. The theme was the "Elements of Manhood."

At one instant the audience, men and women, touched by the pathos thrown into the discourse, were affected even to tears; again, by a quick transition, they had to laugh and enjoy the bright flashes of humor always at the speaker's disposal, and frequently put to use. Thus Mr. Stuart made them laugh and weep. The thinking part of the programme follows in good time. Just as last night, he held no after service and made no invitation for professions of conversion. He closed his service at once as soon as he had done speaking,

Later on, when he gets the people thoroughly stirred up, he will look after the conversions.—Times.

PRESENT DIVORCE LAW.

Rev. R. H. Bennett, pastor of Epworth Methodist Episcopal church, South, in a sermon delivered last night, eloquently pled for the sanctity of the home and in a masterly manner assailed the present divorce laws of this country. He said, in part:

"An old Latin proverb reads, 'unus homo, nullus homo,' which may be freely translated, 'the bachelor is nobody.' Man and woman is each a half of a pair of scissors or half a hinge. Scripture declares of them: 'The twain shall be one.' Spurgeon once said to a bride whom he had just married, 'Your husband is the head, but do you be the neck to turn him withersoever you will.'"

"What shall we do with the unhappy home? A certain class of theorists give the remedy 'easy divorce.' We may trace the origin of this deadly miasma to the campaign waged a generation ago by short-haired women and long-haired men in certain parts of our country; also to the direct or indirect results of the polygamy of Mormonism, to the corrupt literature of the day, and to the deadly effect of bad theatres and plays. Time was when divorce was almost unknown in our country. Since 1835 it has increased three times as fast as the population. Two thousand divorces were granted in one year in New England. There are 2,700 divorce courts in the United States. There has been an alarming decadence of opinion on this subject, and the severance of the marriage tie is looked upon with far less abhorrence than formerly.

"Rome existed for 500 years in her glory without one divorce. Read Gibbon to see how its civilization crumbled when the purity of the home was gone. Twenty thousand divorces in one year ushered in the reign of terror in France. Our civilization stands or falls with the sanctity of the home.

"To the Word of God marriage is not only a civil contract, but a divine institution. Death or the deadliest violation of its holy vows are the only methods of dissolving the union. It is a more lasting bond even than parentage itself. Divorce is monstrous, horrible, impossible, except by death or upon the scriptural ground, and the latter only for the innocent party. I plead for purity and home, our altars and our fires. 'Till death do us part.' Let it so be written in our public opinion, our social distinctions, and our statute books, as it is in the law of God. 'Those whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder.'"—Norfolk Dispatch.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

A series of very notable discourses on "The Marriage Relation" are being preached at Epworth Methodist church by the pastor, Rev. R. H. Bennett—Sunday nights—and are attracting quite a good deal of attention. The first was on "The History of Marriage," the second was on "Marriage Without Love," and that of last night was entitled "Till Death Do Us Part." The discourse of last evening emphasized

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presby-
terian Church, Chicago

Chicago. In this discourse, the decline of churchgoing, its cause and its remedy are discussed by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage with characteristic vigor and directness. The text is 1 Corinthians II, 22, "Despise ye the church of God?"

While rummaging through a bookstore the other day I purchased a volume with this suggestive title: "Why Men Do Not Go to Church." In it the author gives many blunt statements. He asserts that in New York city alone not more than 3 per cent of all the male population are members of the Protestant churches. He makes this charge against New York city, with its millions upon millions of dollars invested in church architecture, with its millions of dollars every year lavishly expended for evangelistic work. He makes this charge against New York city, which is not a heathen town, but which claims to be not only the wealthiest but the most enlightened city in our Christian land. The author of that book further declared that not more than one-half of all the inhabitants of this country ever attend church. By that the author means the vast majority of Americans seldom set foot in any church building, because the most of the half who do attend church do so occasionally only.

With the startling statements of that book still fresh in my mind I would like to ask you the question which Paul asked the nonchurchgoers of Corinth. The world needs precisely the things that the church was organized to supply. It needs strength to resist temptation, it needs rules for the guidance of life, it needs support under affliction, solace in bereavement and a hope of heaven after death. All these blessings come by Christianity. It is therefore worth while inquiring what are the obstacles that keep men from coming into the church and obtaining them. So I not only want to find out why the vast majority of people do not join or regularly attend church, but I also want to try to remove those difficulties so that you, one and all, will come into the fellowship of the divine institution in which are numbered the great hosts of the followers of the Lord Jesus.

An Absurd Reason.

"Well," says some one in answer to the words of my text, "the reason I despise the church of God is because there are certain parts of the Bible I do not understand. Therefore I will not profess to believe what I cannot comprehend." Now, my friend, such a statement is simply absurd. From such talk one might suppose that the only inexplicable things in the whole universe are those recorded between the lids of holy writ. Why, there are whole realms and cycles and universes of facts in every direction yet untraversed and unexplained. You cannot focus the whole heavens with one telescope and you cannot with the finite. You might as well try to build a range of mountains from Long Island to England by pitching pebbles into the Atlantic ocean or try to empty the sea by dipping up the waters with a sewing girl's thimble as to attempt to build up a system of science or to develop a belief in the Bible unless you are willing to accept some things which you cannot explain.

But, though statements may be made in the Bible which you and I cannot understand, the salient truths, the Calvary truths, the converting truths, are all simply told truths. I defy any unbiased man to read the simple words of the four gospels and remain blind to their meaning. No man can read the story of the prodigal son and fail to realize that God is represented by the aged father, that his own sinful life is represented by the sins of the younger son, that repentance and peace are represented by the return home and the divine love and forgiveness by the ring and the fattened calf and the father's kiss. Spiritual light and deeper faith will come later. So, my brother, as you believe in God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost; as you believe that Jesus suffered and died upon the cross for our sins, as you believe that Christ has gone to heaven to prepare a dwelling place for those who are cleansed by his blood you believe all that is needed to qualify you to come into the church he established on earth. This was the saving belief of the Philippian jailer, to whom Paul said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved and thy house." A man is not necessarily barred from the church of Jesus Christ because he does not fully understand all the Bible. He is received and welcomed because he believes that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

One Pastor's Experience.

One day a woman came to the most noted minister of the south, the Rev. B. M. Palmer of New Orleans. She said, "Pastor, I cannot accept and believe the doctrines of the Presbyterian church; therefore I am afraid I must have my name dropped from the church roll." "What do you not believe?" asked Dr. Palmer. "Well, there is the Presbyterian doctrine of foreordination. I cannot believe that God knows the end from the beginning. I cannot understand how he can foresee everything and yet I be a free agent." "I never asked you to believe the doctrine of foreordination," said Dr. Palmer. "Well," said the woman, "I cannot believe the doctrine of election." "I never asked you to believe the doctrine of election," again said Dr. Palmer. "What, then, do you want me to believe?" "As a minister of the Presbyterian church," Dr. Palmer replied, "I have to accept the Confession of Faith, but you as a lay member only have to believe two great doctrines. The first is that man is a sinner. You believe that? The second is, that Jesus is a Saviour and died for your sins. You believe that? As a believer in those two great doctrines, I want you to throw yourself upon the mercy of Christ, and you can be saved. This is all the Presbyterian church or any other Protestant church demands of you for membership." Dr. Palmer was right. You may not understand all of the Bible, but you do understand and believe enough to make you acceptable for membership in Christ's church. You do believe in the atonement. You do believe that Jesus died to save you. Throw away your doubts! Hold to your beliefs! The gospel church lifeboat is too fine a craft to be scuttled merely because we know not all the planks out of which its hull was built. Come into the church lifeboat today on the simple faith that its keel was made from the straight beam of the Calvary cross.

Another Reason Answered.

"Well," remarks another man, "I do not join the church because of the inconsistencies of its members. Some profess one thing and practice another. They say Christians ought to be kind and loving and gentle and helpful to their fellow church members. Then they demonstrate that some of the worst fights on earth are church fights. The elder who prays the loudest in prayer meeting may be the farmer who never comes out second best in a horse trade, and the gossip of the sewing society is just as merciless as the gossip at the club or in a ballroom. As long as the church is filled with hypocrites I do not want to join it."

Stop, my brother! You know that some of the very best men in every community are members of the different Christian churches. You know, as well as I know, that though some of the church members may be hypocrites the vast majority are men and women who have banded themselves together for the purpose of prayer and communion with God and of trying to make their fellowship better and purer and truer and more Christlike. There are thousands and tens of thousands of church members who are no more hypocrites than your Christian father and mother, who were also members of a Christian church, were hypocrites.

To demonstrate how much you really respect the Christian church, though you may not know it, I would like to ask you a question. If you were stranded as a young woman in a distant city, without money or friends, to whom would you go for help? To the saloon keeper? To the rich brewer? No, no! Without doubt you would go straight to some Christian minister's home. You would go to him, just as many young men and women have come to me, and you would say, "My father and mother are members of Dr. So-and-so's church. In such and such a town. I have no money. I want to get home. Will you help me?" To have you realize how much you respect the church of the Lord Jesus Christ I would picture you stranded as a shipwrecked sailor upon a strange coast. What would you most prefer to see—a fortress, a king's palace, an army encampment or the steeple of a Christian church? You know as well as every intelligent man or woman knows that the community which lives under the shadow of the church spire is a God-fearing community. The community which does not protect the Christian church is an unsafe community in which to dwell, and there is no exception to the rule.

What the Church Is For.

When you criticize the sincerity of certain church members, you should not forget that the church of Christ was instituted for the imperfect as well as the perfect, for the moral cripples as well as for those who are spiritually whole. In the church there are to be found members like a man whom a friend of mine was one evening defending. Howard Crosby came to this gentleman and said: "Doctor, how can you like such a man? You know he is not what he ought to be." My friend turned and said: "Dr. Crosby, if you had a little child who had lost an eye or was deaf or who was born lame would you despise him on account of his infirmity? Well, my friend is a moral cripple. I do not like him because he has lost one eye and one leg and one arm, but I do love him because, by the grace of God, he is trying to struggle against his daily temptations and his spiritual deformities." So you will find in the church of God today moral cripples. They are struggling every day of their lives against sinful temptations; they keep on struggling; keep on praying; keep on reaching up to God; keep on staying in the church because they know that it did not come to institute a church perfect men. He came to heal the and not the well. The church of is the great earthly spiritual hos where Christ, as the surgeon, loy set the crooked limbs; where Chri the spiritual ophthalmologist, lov open the eyes that are blinded of

"Well," observes another hearer reason I do not join the church cause I believe a man can be ju good a Christian outside the church inside." Now, I would not assert all men who are nonchurchgoers are unchristian men. John Newton says: "When I got to heaven, I have three great surprises. One surprise will be to find so many ple there I did not expect to see. Next surprise will be to find so people absent whom I expected to find and the third great surprise will find that I got to heaven myself." John Newton, when most of us are in heaven—I pray we may all be the believe we shall be very much prised to find there some people never entered the church door never publicly professed their faith the church altar. Mr. Beecher beautifully and poetically said: "I glad that some gospel seeds have blown over the church wall and fruit trees and flowers most plea to the eye are springing up outside church garden as well as inside, though I wish they were within inclosure, where the boars out of woods could not waste them and wild beasts of the field devour t yet I love them and am glad to them growing there."

The Spiritual Household.

But, though there may be Christ men and women living outside of church fellowship, I for one do not believe I could be a Christian and a professing member of the church of Christ. I do not believe that I can turn my back upon my church and love my Christ as I love him to and, my brother and sister, neither I believe you can turn your back on the church of God and yet give Christ your true and fervent love, cause I believe that, as Christians should look upon the church as alection of God's children. There we should accept and love its members as our spiritual brothers and ters, children of God, and we selves should long to be of the spiritual household.

An old Boston merchant loved a young man from Kentucky, who was the friend of his dead boy. This Boston merchant's only son had died for the civil war. Down at front in 1864 he was shot. Wounded unto death, he was carried into home of a southern lady and nursed there until he died. But just before his death he looked up into the face of the southern lady and said: "I am the only son of a rich Boston merchant. My father will be heartbroken when he hears of my death. After war is over, and as your money is swept away, I want your son to go to Boston and see my father. I want to tell my father that you have nursed me for weeks and months. Then my father will love your son for my sake. And the dying boy with trembling fingers wrote upon a slip of paper: "I Father—I am dying. This young man is the son of the dear lady who has taken your place and mother's. I her son to your heart for my sake. Time passed on, and the awful carnage came to an end. The home of the southern lady was swept away. The day the young man, armed with his dead son's letter, started for Boston. When he was ushered into the office

During the past several weeks thirty counties in Texas have held local option elections, and of this number twenty-seven have voted the saloons out; besides this, a very large number of precincts have voted "dry." Hence it begins to look as if the great reform is going to sweep over Texas. The wholesale liquor dealers are alarmed, and some are preparing to leave the State, alleging that since January 1st their business has been injured $150,000 by the spread of prohibition in Texas.—The American Issue.

The Anti-Saloon League of Tennessee, at its recent annual meeting, showed by its reports a membership of over 15,000; 5,000 have been enrolled in the organization since April 1st of this year. A weekly paper is to be established soon in the interest of the League work.

northeast corner Broad and Ninth streets, Richmond, Va. Constructed of iron, granite, and gray brick, 40 x 124 feet, four stories above basement, it is one of the handsomest and most substantial school buildings in the country. The oldest Business College in the State, and the only one owning its building. With one exception, this is true of the whole South.

Richmond, Va., September 31, 1900.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

the Scripture precept, "Whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder," and the "quick divorce" business was handled with gloves off. All divorce, except that permitted by the Scripture to the innocent party, was condemned, but the frivolous reasons given for divorce proceedings and the ease with which divorces are obtained was very severely handled—the speaker mentioning, among others, a case where divorce proceedings were instituted by a woman because her husband turned his back to her when he did his reading. The speaker insisted that while courts may grant legal separations, marriage except on the Scriptural ground, can no more be dissolved than can the ties between brother and sister. The discourse was considered one of the best that Mr. Bennett has preached during his ministry in Norfolk. His theme next Sunday night will be on "How to Select and Train a Husband," and the following Sunday night on "How to Select and Train a Wife." This will be followed by "What's the Use of a Child?" and the series will close with "The Sunset of Married Life, or the Old Folks at Home."—Ledger.

CHRISTIAN THOUGHT CLUB.

The Methodist Ministers' "Christian Thought Club" met this morning at Epworth church, this city, and heard the first paper that has been presented for its consideration since the club's summer vacation. A short while back its Steering Committee reported a series of four papers to be presented during this fall. One of these was "Evolution and Modern Theological Thought," to be presented by Rev. R. H. Bennett, pastor of Epworth Methodist church—who fulfilled his engagement this morning and read a paper, of which the following is an outline:

EVOLUTION AND MODERN THEOLOGICAL THOUGHT.

Mr. Herbert Spencer has defined evolution as "a change from an indefinite incoherent homogeneity to a definite coherent heterogeneity through continuous differentiations and integrations"—a formula of which the Contemporary Review remarked that the universe may well have heaved a sigh of relief when through the cerebration of an eminent thinker it had been delivered of this account of itself."

The unfriendly attitude often existing between science and religion is a surprise, a regrettable and unnecessary fact. Neither one is infallible and both have erred more than once in the past. Evolution is a plausible and beautiful theory and supported by many facts, but its most intelligent advocates admit that it is as yet but a working theory and neither proven nor disproven. In the nature of the case it cannot be. It is as yet a rudimentary science, and has frequently been pushed too far. We do not believe that the soft spot on the top of a baby's head is the degenerate remains of a disused eye, or that the vermiform appendix is the atrophied remains of the caudal appendage of prehistoric man, which has retired inside from the gaze of an unfriendly civilization. We do not believe that since hats produce boldness and prepared food render teeth unnecessary, and civilization does not require such a keen sense of smell, that the future man will be a half-headed, toothless, noseless creature, or that the trolley car and the automobile will dispense with human legs, or that a race of pianists will be born with a finger for each key of the instrument, etc. Who but an old bachelor like Drummond could see in the dreaded grasp of a baby's fingers the lingering relic of the simian grip by which our hairy forbears swung themselves from limb to limb of the forest.

The theory of evolution is as old as the Indian mystics or the Greek physicists, and has been advanced from time to time by different thinkers. Darwin added to it his new principle of divergent variation and natural selection, and won the belief of the world to the theory.

With materialistic and agnostic evolution theology can only exist at war. But theistic evolution and orthodoxy have well-nigh concluded a peace. There is room for each in the territory of faith. Theistic evolution puts behind the star mist and the amœba, and sees Him immanent through law in all creation and conduct of the universe. It must recognize the authenticity of the miracles and accept the oracles of God as our true book of origins. It must accept the Scriptures, though allowed proper liberty in their interpretation. The Copernican discovery did not destroy the astronomy of the Bible, nor Newton's law its physics, nor Columbus' voyage its geography, and the geologists' hammer or the nebulous theory of creation has not shaken the first chapter of Genesis. Christian evolution is a question not so much of fact as of method. And it is largely also a question of nomenclature. It must see in Jesus Christ no less a God, the ideal of manhood toward which the race is evolving by growth in grace and knowledge. At the same time it must leave the integrity of the atonement unimpaired. And without affecting the dogmatic statement of Scripture on the subject, evolution wonderfully strengthens the inferential argument for immortality.

THE GOD OF THE BIBLE

It is not denied that there are difficulties in the path of the Christian evolutionist. No one can say what is to be the ultimate outcome of the unrest, transition and theological strife of today. The Augustine, the Pelagius, the Calvin or the Watson of the new era has not appeared, with the institutes of Christianity for the new dispensation. But the materials are collecting. Hasty conclusions on both sides are being modified. Meantime, we wait with our faces toward the East more convinced with the issuing of each new book from the press that "nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure," and that the next plane of development for the "fittest" of humanity who "survive" will be that upon which we "awake in His likeness" and are "satisfied."—Norfolk Ledger.

METHODIST PREACHERS.

The Methodist preachers' meeting was honored with a pleasant visit yesterday morning from Rev. A. Coke Smith, D. D., Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; Rev. Jno. C.

Bieri, of the Philadelphia Conference, pastor of Memorial M. E. church, Easton, Pa. also Rev. J. T. Mastin, financial agent of the State Methodist Orphanage, Richmond, Va.

The session was called to order by the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, and the deliberations opened with prayer by Bishop Smith.

Bishop Smith made a statement in which he gave his impressions of the general outlook of Methodism at the various points which he had visited. He said that there was a great dearth of preachers at some of these places. He has presided over three District Conferences since the adjournment of the General Conference in May last. Bishop Smith will leave Thursday with his family for his old home in South Carolina, where they will spend a short stay with relatives. He will move with his family to Charlotte, N. C., about October 15th. He will preside over the Western North Carolina Conference November 19th.

Rev. J. T. Mastin gave some interesting information about the State Orphanage at Richmond. The institution was opened on September 1st, and has now 14 children under its care, with enough applications to fill the two additional buildings as soon as they are finished. Mr. Mastin said that every day of his life he is more impressed with the importance of the work of the State Orphanage, its special object being to save the young children, who are orphans, from the horrors of slum life, and to rear them under the very best moral and religious training, so that when they arrive at the proper age they can go out in the world well fitted to lead proper lives and become useful and honored citizens. Mr. Mastin cited several instances in which boys of the ages of from 8 to 12 years had been rescued from the slum life of Richmond and are now doing well at the Orphanage.

REPORTS FROM THE CHURCHES.

On the call of the churches reports were heard from the following:

Rev. George H. McFaden held his usual services at Wright Memorial Sunday. He had a good Sunday school, a fair congregation to hear him at the 11 A. M. service and a much larger one at night.

Rev. Ernest Stevens held forth morning and night at Owen's Memorial, the evening congregation being larger than usual.

At Port Norfolk Rev. Daniel T. Merritt held his usual services, and had a pleasant day.

Rev. J. N. Latham, who has just returned from his vacation, gave an interesting account of his trip. While away from home he attended a revival meeting, which he enjoyed very much. He conducted his usual services at Park View church Sunday, and had fairly good congregations for the weather.

Rev. George Wesley Jones was greeted with good congregations at Trinity church Sunday, and had pleasant and profitable services. Mr. Jones assisted in a protracted meeting at Locustville, on the Eastern Shore, last week.

At Huntersville Rev. E. K. Odell preached morning and night Sunday, and had a good Epworth League meeting in the afternoon.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth reported a good Sunday school and fair congregations to hear him at LeKies' Memorial church Sunday.

Fine congregations greeted the Rev. R. H. Bennett morning and night at Epworth church Sunday. The evening congregation was unusually large for the weather.

Rev. J. B. Merritt had a remarkably good day at the Seamen's Bethel and delightful services.

There were four new scholars received in the Sunday school at Lambert's Point Sunday. The pastor, Rev. C. H. McGhee, preached to a good congregation in the morning and a fair one at night.

Rev. J. K. Joliff had good congregations to hear him at Queen Street church Sunday. The Sunday school was well attended.

Rev. C. L. Bane attended the Sunday school at Cumberland Street, preached morning and night to good congregations and received two new members by certificate. He spoke at the Epworth League meeting in the afternoon.

Rev. John C. Bieri, of Memorial Methodist church, Easton, Pa., preached at Oaklette church Sunday morning for the Rev. N. H. Smith.

Rev. J. T. Mastin preached at Beach Grove Sunday morning, at Joliff's in the afternoon and at South Norfolk at night.

Rev. B. F. Lipscomb, D. D., secretary and treasurer of Randolph-Macon College, preached to a fine congregation at Central M. E. church Sunday morning, and the pastor preached at night.

Mr. Dadmun has just returned from the Eastern Shore, where he has been assisting the Rev. W. G. Bates in a protracted meeting.

Rev. D. B. Austin preached at Haygood Memorial church Sunday morning. Owing to the weather no services were held at Lynnhaven church in the afternoon.

METHODISTS AFTER ROOSEVELT.

Milwaukee, Sept. 15.—President Roosevelt was called upon by the Wisconsin Methodist Conference to-day to refute the report that he has asked the Vatican at Rome to create Archbishop Ireland a cardinal. By unanimous vote the Conference decided to send the following letter to the President:

"We see with pain in press dispatches a rumor that the Vatican has received from President Roosevelt an intimation that he would be personally pleased to see that Archbishop Ireland is created a cardinal as a reward for the services he has rendered the Church and the State. We strongly doubt the correctness of this rumor, for it does not seem possible that the President of the United States could thus violate the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, which requires the complete separation of the Church and the State, and we hope to see it authoritatively denied."

Bishop D. A. Goodsell, as president of the Conference, signed the letter.—Baltimore Sun.

Grandma—"Yes, dearie. Why?"

Charlie—"Oh, I only thought, if they did, I'd like you to take 'em off while you're cuttin' cake."

GOOD NEWS FROM BEDFORD.

Dear Bro. Cannon,—Our school resumed work last Tuesday, and now at the end of the first week I am in a position to form some definite idea of the attendance this session. There is an increase in the attendance of 15 per cent. over that of last session, and I feel confident that the enrollment will be the largest we have had for the past six years. It is useless for me to ask how Blackstone opened. With you and the Woman's College, it seems simply a question of how many you can accommodate.

GENERAL CONFERENCE ACTION ON MINISTERIAL EDUCATION.

BY REV. J. D. HAMMOND, D. D.

The following is the action taken by the recent Conference at Dallas on this important subject:

"For the guidance of all candidates for admission, and undergraduates in the Conferences, and also of those who, having completed the Conference course, desire to prosecute a post-graduate course of study, the Board of Education is instructed to establish at Nashville, in connection with the Biblical Department of Vanderbilt University and under the direction of its faculty, correspondence courses, which shall be offered to all ministers or candidates for our ministry, under such regulations as may be approved by the Board and Faculty.

"The Secretary of this Correspondence School shall issue a certificate to every one who prosecutes, under the direction of the school, the study of any book embraced in the course of study, and who passes a satisfactory written examination on the same. He shall send this certificate, along with the questions and examinations papers, to the chairman of the Annual Conference Committee having charge of the candidate or undergraduate concerned. The Conference committee may then, if they see fit, accept his certificate in lieu of examinations held by themselves; but if the questions and answers given are not satisfactory to the local Conference Committee they may require a further examination."

The above plan indicates (1) a dissatisfaction on the part of the General Conference with the present status of our ministerial education, and (2) a purpose to improve that status just as far as the conditions will admit during the present quadrennium. It does not make any change in the course of study, but it provides for the best possible results from that course as it is given to us by the Bishops. The demands on our ministers at the present time are such that a forward movement in their preparation becomes a necessity which the Church can no longer ignore. Instead of admitting candidates and passing undergraduates as heretofore, the plan looks to a more thorough preparation, and offers the assurance that the courses of required study shall yield the best results possible. The Annual Conference Committees have heretofore done their best, considering the conditions under which they were forced to work. But by the present system the candidate or undergraduate will not be left to himself in the effort to master the subjects on which he is to be examined.

Those who have charge of this Correspondence School—the best men for such work to be found in the whole Church—will be in constant touch with each student. The year's course will cover nine months. The student will receive directions and all needed assistance, and will prepare lesson papers on all of the work done by him, to be passed on by examiners and returned to him with corrections and suggestions. In a similar manner courses of study and reading will be mapped out for post-graduate students.

The man selected to take charge of this work is Rev. J. L. Cuninggim, of the North Carolina Conference, of which Conference his father was also a member before his death. Mr. Cuninggim is an A. B. graduate of the University of North Carolina, a A. D. graduate of Vanderbilt University, has done four years' special work at the University of Chicago and three years' pastoral work in his own Conference. He will be assisted by the faculty of the Vanderbilt Biblical Department. The work will be fully inaugurated at the next round of Annual Conferences. All those seeking admission and others will there have the matter explained to them and will have the opportunity of enrolling and entering upon their studies at once. The thoroughness with which this work will be done is attested by the fact that the Biblical Faculty at Vanderbilt propose to accept it in part on the course of study prosecuted by theological students in residence at the university.

Circulars of information concerning the work of the Correspondence School may be had of Mr. Cuninggim, whose address is Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

THAT "DEAD LINE."

REV. EZRA TINKER, LL. D.

I have been much interested in the articles on "The Dead Line," in the Western, by R. F. Bishop.

An ounce of fact is worth a ton of theory. Then to the law and the testimony. The dead line is not determined by the calendar, but mainly by other conditions.

Draw the line by the dead man. Some die young; some in middle life, while others survive to a ripe old age. Facts are facts. Twenty years ago and more, the writer was pastor near the great metropolis of the Western Hemisphere. A ministerial brother of another denomination was preaching regularly to immense throngs of people, and continued to do so for several years. That preacher is now in the prime of life, measured by the almanac. Practically, he has been dead for a number of years. Quite recently he resigned the pastorate of a famous church, because the people ceased to attend the services to any considerable extent. In their despair, the handful left invited to the vacant pulpit a minister up in the sixties. That historic church edifice is now crowded to the doors.

What was the trouble with the former pastor? you may ask. I answer he was dead. Killed by a million of silver dollars falling upon him at one time. The old Dutch minister of the city put it thus: "Dr. Blank will not hereafter amount to anything. He is too rich." From the heights of extemporaneous and powerful pulpit discourse, he suddenly fell to the lowest depths of a spiritless and lifeless manuscript performance. The congregation saw that the preacher was in the agonies of death, and heartlessly left behind scarcely enough members to perform the last sad rites and bear his remains to their final resting place.

Another noted church, in the same great city, and of the same denomination, has just installed a celebrated pastor, who is several years on the farther side of seventy, and who is preaching to full houses, and rendering as good service to the cause of God and to the church as he did forty years ago.

One of our greatest Conferences can boast of two members, who are doing first-class work in their respective pastorates, although one of them is in his seventy-seventh year, and the other is in his eighty-first year. The former is in the second city on the globe, and, the latter, in a flourishing Yankee village. And, more wonderful still, the octogenarian has been secured by two great camp-meeting associations to conduct the regular camp-meeting services in the month of August; selected because of his great ability, intense spirituality, and large success in revival work.

Six years ago last spring the wealthiest and most fashionable Methodist church on the continent unanimously asked for a reverend gentleman well up into the sixties. A few months since he surrendered the pastorate after six full years of splendid service.

The Methodist church nearest to the writer is served by a brother who is more than eighty. The official brethren and the presiding elder affirm that he is the most efficient and acceptable pastor for many years, although the charge has been served from time to time by pastors in the opening prime of life.

If ministers cease to study, to think, to interest themselves in the problems of the day; if they fail to keep in touch with the young; forget that they themselves were once young; continually lament the degeneracy of the times; constantly sigh for the good old days of the fathers, and whisper in everybody's ear that the world is surely going to the everlasting bow-wows, they might as well announce their own ministerial demise, speak for their ecclesiastical casket, and voluntarily retire to their newly-dug grave to save the expense of a newspaper notice and the brother of a funeral cortege.

But if a minister will live abreast the times; hold constant communion with his God; keep sweet and in close touch with his people, and bear upon his heart the burdens of the unfortunate and the lowly, he may be thoroughly acceptable and efficient till eighty or ninety years of age, if a reasonable degree of health is granted.

What churches object to is to men who are dead and don't know it. Men who think they are alive, but who need some one of real courage to inform them that they have been dead for years—men who haven't the judgment to ask for a decent burial, but allow their skeleton forms to flaunt themselves in the face of a sensitive public.

Place the "dead line" where it belongs—near the dead man, whether he be forty-six or eighty years of age; whether he be above the sod or below it.—Western Advocate.

Robert E. Lewis writes in the last Review of Reviews concerning the Empress Dowager's system of modern colleges for China. He quotes her edict—astonishing in view of her former attitude, since it was for issuing decrees similar to this in 1898 that Emperor Kwang Hsu was dethroned:

"I, Tsu Hsi, etc., etc., command all existing colleges in the empire (Confucian and Buddhist) to be turned into schools and colleges of Western learning. Each provincial capital is to have a university like the Peking University, whilst the colleges in the prefectures and districts of the various provinces are to be schools and colleges of the second and third classes."

Mr. Lewis says that the proclamation created great amazement, and the result has been wonderful.

"This broadside of reform edicts fired into the camp of the conservatives by order of the supposed chief reactionary has certainly upset the calculations of the wise men. None are more surprised than those who have argued that the occupation of China by the foreign military and the missionaries had permanently alienated the Chinese from all things Western. The exact opposite is true. Missionaries are being besieged for help and instruction by the upper class of Chinese. Requests for the opening of Young Men's Christian Associations for the literary classes have come from several great student centres. In Shanghai, through the work of this association, sixteen of the student class are ready for baptism, and thirteen others are preparing themselves by special Bible study. The governors of five different provinces have officially turned to missionaries to seek guidance for their new school system."

the old merchant, at first this latter would not even speak to him. The old merchant kept on at his desk writing. But when the young man placed the message of the dead boy upon the merchant's desk the broken hearted father arose and put his arms about the young man's neck and sobbed. "I will love you for my boy's sake—yes, for my dead boy's sake." Now, I do not believe it is possible for us to love Christ unless we also love his church for his sake. I do not believe it is possible for us to love the church unless for Christ's sake we also love Christ's children, who are members of that church, nor do I believe it possible for a Christian man to do us good a Christian outside of the church of Christ as if he were a true, hearty, active, conscientious member of that church.

Mark you well my statement. I did not affirm that there were no Christian men outside of the church of Jesus Christ, but I did affirm that a man cannot be as good a Christian outside of the Christian church as inside. There may be good Christians found outside of the church. There may be good Christians who prefer the society of Sabbath desecrators and worldly pleasure seekers instead of the society of God's children, who love to gather in the house of praise; but I frankly confess I have never found good Christians who prefer to seek the society of worldly pleasure seekers to the society of those who delight in God's house. Jack roses may grow in cesspools, but as a rule the most beautiful roses bluish a deeper red and swing a sweeter incense in a flower garden than among the thorns of a wild hedge.

One Honest Reply.

"Well," answers another man, "I will tell you frankly why I despise the church of God. The reason I do not join the church is because it is too straitlaced for me, and I am not willing to give up my own way of living." My brother, I believe you have told me the exact truth. I believe ninety-nine-hundredths of those who scoff at the church scoff principally because they are not ready to surrender some secret sin. But as you have given me one honest answer I want you to give me another to a question just as important. If you are not ready to surrender your secret sin and join the church, where is that sin going to send you? Some time ago I stood in the depot of our national capital watching a little colored boy about five years old asleep upon one of the benches. This little baby had a card pinned to his coat which read like this: "Conductor, will you please see that this little boy is put in the right train and sent to Atlanta, Ga., where friends will meet him?"

As I stood there watching that little child I said to myself: "Some people seem to be sleeping in the great depot of sin as unconscious of their surroundings as that colored baby. They care not what is going to happen to them. And Satan has pinned a tag upon them to send them through, like baggage, to the great city of eternal despair."

My unrepentant brother, as you are unwilling to join the church because you are reluctant to give up your secret sin, I ask you where will that secret sin ultimately send you? You need to be aroused from your spiritual lethargy and to realize your awful danger. I would especially plead with you to surrender your sins and dedicate your life to Jesus Christ by joining the church because, in your heart, you know well what you ought to do. I have always shrunk from the thought that people who were born in sin and ignorantly reared in sin and who ignorantly died in sin and unrepentant were totally lost. It has always been a question in my mind whether some of those poor, loathsome creatures who were reared in the slums of a great city and who never heard the name of Jesus except in blasphemy might not in God's mercy be made as fit for the celestial city as some who, having been born in Christian homes, have led a very different Christian life. God will never condemn one who is born blind because he cannot see. He will never destroy one who is born deaf and dumb because he cannot speak or hear; but, my brother, though there may be some excuse for those born in the sinful slums of a great city for not renouncing their sins and joining the church, there is no excuse for you. You were born in a Christian home, you were reared amid Christian surroundings, you were started out with Christian prayers, and the mere fact that you made such an excuse as you have proves that the Holy Spirit is mightily striving with you today to confess Christ and join the church the Saviour founded on earth.

You are in exactly the same position as was Dr. Parley when he was a dissipated college student. One morning, when he was trying to sleep off the debauch of the previous night, a classmate came into his room and, sitting upon the bed by his side, said: "Parley, I have been thinking of what you are doing. You are wasting your life for time and eternity. Now, Parley, it does not matter much what happens to me. I am a nobody, but you have the best brain in college. Besides that, you were born of good blood. You have a praying mother and a praying father. Unless you stop your sins I shall cut your acquaintance." So today all the Christian influences which surround your past life, all the Christian influences which surround your present life, all your hopes for eternity, are pleading and begging you in Christ's name to turn from your sins. They are pleading with you to come into the church of Jesus as a repentant sinner because you know and feel—you intensely feel today—that you ought to come. Are you man enough in Christ's name to come to his altar now?

Your Duty to the Church.

But there is one answer yet to the question of my text. This answer comes from many a troubled heart. You say to me: "Mr. Talmage, I do not despise the church except by my actions in a public way. The reason I do not join the church is because I have so many home duties that I cannot do my share in church work, if I should join. In a few years I expect to take my place as a member at the church altar." Now, my friend, I want you to realize this great truth: God never ordained that one duty should conflict with other duties. He never wants a mother to leave the bedside of her sick child in order to attend a missionary meeting. He never compels a man to do for the church more than he can conscientiously do. But Christ does demand this: He does demand that you profess and confess his love before men. And you cannot do that in a better way than at the church altar. Then let the most imminent Christian duty decide what you ought to do thereafter.

And I would especially plead with you to confess Christ in the church before men because, as you have others depending upon you, your present actions will probably decide how your loved ones will act and feel toward the church of Christ's establishment. This fact was demonstrated some years ago in Smyrna.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course: The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course: This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positively Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

OUR ABSENT ONES.

O patient and constant dead,
Whom so easily we put by,
Who fade away from our inmost thoughts
As the stars fade from the sky!
We put them so far away.
We hide them so deep with God;
We think of them snatched to the farthest star
As soon as they're under the sod.

Ah me! It is pitiful so,
Dear lovers so real and near,
Aye pressing your faces against the gates
Of our hearts, and we will not hear!
O friends, when our sainted dead
Pass over that unseen line,
They fly not far to a foreign land,
They dwell in your land and mine.

A land that no fire can burn,
No element sweep away,
The dear long home of immortal love,
God's country and ours for aye!
So draw to them closer there
As of old time, hand in hand, God meant we should walk through life and death
In Love's immortal land.

VERANDA VIEWS.

S. A. STEEL.

I have been very much interested in the canal problem. A. H. Colquhoun's work, "The Key to the Pacific," convinced me that the Nicaragua route was for many strong reasons much the better way to the East. But I think our Southern Senators acted wisely in waiving their preference for this route, and voting for the Panama route, rather than risk the defeat of the whole business. The question is a very large one, and it would be rash to speak too confidently about either route. But I did not intend when I began to write about either the Panama or Nicaragua canals. There are other great canals besides these—the Suez Canal, the Welland Canal, the "Soo" Canal, and many others; but they are all inferior to the "alimentary canal." Through this canal Dr. Goucher actually drew those Burbon leviathans, Bishop A. W. Wilson and Dr. Collins Denny, into the agreement to unite with the Methodist Episcopal Church in a joint publishing house in China. I would have said that it was easier to get the Oregon from Panama to Colon than to get Wilson and Denny into that arrangement. But Goucher, has beat Lesseps. We have lived to see great things. And they were done through the "alimentary canal." Plymouth codfish and Goucher salad did the work. Dr. Denny supplied a New England pulpit for a few weeks, lived among "the enemy," so to speak, and in a happy moment, Bishop Wilson accepted an invitation to dine with Dr. Goucher, and lo! the vexing problem of practical fraternity was solved to the honor of God and the good of man. Great is the "alimentary canal." They ought by all means to put a copy of the menu of that memorial Goucher dinner in the corner-stone of the Shanghai Publishing House. I thought it was funerals we needed in order to get our churches into a closer relation. I was mistaken. It is dinners we need—tables instead of tombstones, fraternal feasts instead of the solemn "dust to dust" that closes alike the useful and the useless life on earth.

I would not attach an undue importance to the event, but I cannot help hoping the agreement to unite our publishing interests in China is a long step toward our coming closer together at home. Such a union over there will have a reflex influence here. Perhaps the next step will be a general union of our missionary work. Why not? If we can unite in a publishing house, which is to be the centre of our propagandist activity, why not unite in other things also? And if Bishop Wilson and Dr. Denny are converted, verily the vilest sinner need not despair. At least that is the way it looks to a man on the veranda.

By the way, speaking of the alimentary canal, it cuts a bigger figure in the affairs of this nation than the Panama will ever cut. A few days ago there threatened to be a strike in Chicago that would have interfered with the operations of the alimentary canal of perhaps half a million people. If the big packing houses had not agreed to the terms demanded by the laboring men, they intended to stop the delivery wagons. That would have shut off bread, and when the traffic through the alimentary canal is stopped, something is going to happen, and happen quick. When the gigantic power of the trusts encroaches on the territory of the alimentary canal there will be war. Hunger knows no law. Fortunately in this instance, capital yielded the point, and a riot was avoided. Destiny is determined along the line of the alimentary canal. So it seems to a man looking at it from the veranda.

And yet how absurd is the rush to the cities. Think of the vast regions of our own unrivalled country that are practically unoccupied, millions of acres of fertile soil that await the hand of the industrious toiler to yield uncounted stores of all that is needful to human happiness; think of the immense tracts in other countries, South America, Africa and Australia, where millions might build happy homes; and then think of the myriads that crowd the alleys and streets of London, Paris, New York and Chicago, living from hand to mouth, and sure to starve if there is the slightest interruption of the course of daily food supply. I have little faith in the results of philanthropy that seeks, however honestly and earnestly, to save the people in the slums. They must be got away from the slums. Space is an indispensable condition of saving a man. He must have pure air, light and room to move about; none of which can be had in the reeking dens where millions of people live. And yet people in the country want to move to the city. For thirty years my ministry has been in large city churches. Thirty years ought to give a man a basis for an opinion; and my opinion is that no man ever makes a greater mistake than when he leaves the country to go to the city. If he will work his farm in the same systematic way that he will have to work his store in order to succeed in the close competition of business, he will make more and be a happier man and bring his family up in a far better way.

Not long ago I was asked for some advice by a young man. He is a fine young fellow, about through school, and ready to start in life. His father is a man of some means, and will give

REV. G. R. STUART IN RICHMOND.

Rev. George R. Stuart has been preaching in Richmond for ten days, and the spirit has been with him in his work. As usual, he has gone to the root of the matter, and has shown especially the damning influence of the liquor traffic upon politics, society and the Church. He has told the truth about the real character of the drunkard makers, and on Sunday afternoon, at the Academy of Music, there was a great meeting. We give a description of it from the Dispatch, also a short sketch of Bro. Stewart.

EVANGELIST GEO. R. STUART.

Rev. George R. Stuart, the evangelist conducting the services in Richmond, is one of the best-known ministers of the South. He is a Tennessean, claiming the town of Cleveland as his home. Born forty-odd years ago, he is now in the mature vigor of manhood physically and intellectually. Mr. Stuart was educated at Emory and Henry College, Virginia, and soon afterward entered the ministry. As a speaker he is a man of attractive delivery with a full vocabulary and with an earnestness that rises to eloquence. Rich in illustration, forceful in reasoning, strong in argument, and persuasive in pleading, he is well adapted to the work he has undertaken. He is a master of human nature and motive, and intensely practical. There is no levity about him in his work. He preaches straight at his hearers with a vigor that often carries conviction, but is not open to many of the objections made to latter day evangelists. Mr. Stuart is a regularly-ordained minister in good standing with his denomination. Personally, he is a man of pleasing manners and address. One of his most striking characteristics as a preacher is his virility.

For years Mr. Stuart has been associated with Rev. Sam P. Jones, but is regarded not as the counterpart of the Georgian, but rather as his complement. He has much of the power and many of the strong points of Mr. Jones without those for which his co-worker has been censured by some. Above all, those who know him best declare that he is a man of clean life and character and above reproach.—Dispatch.

HIS SUNDAY EVENING SERMON.

Two thousand men stood and made solemn promise that come another time and they would cast their ballot against the saloon; over one hundred pledged themselves outright never again to touch a drop of whiskey; probably fifty ministers of the Gospel, standing in solid ranks, proclaimed a

BLACK ROCK

By RALPH

By this time Mrs. Mavor had finished with the manager and was in the center of a group of miners. Her grand air was all gone, and she was their comrade, their friend, one of themselves. Nor did she assume the role of entertainer, but rather did she, with half shy air, cast herself upon their chivalry, and they were too truly gentlemen to fail her. It is hard to make western men, and especially old timers, talk. But this gift was hers, and it stirred my admiration to see her draw on a grizzled veteran to tell how, twenty years ago, he had crossed the Great Divide and had seen and done what no longer fell to men to see or do in these new days. And so she won the old timer. But it was beautiful to see the innocent guile with which she caught Billy Breen and drew him to her corner near the organ. What she was saying I knew not, but poor Billy was protesting, waving his big hands.

The meeting came to order, with Shaw in the chair and the handsome young Oxford man secretary. Shaw stated the object of the meeting in a few halting words, but when he came to speak of the pleasure he and all felt in being together in that room his words flowed in a stream, warm and full. Then there was a pause, and Mr. Craig was called, but he knew better than to speak at that point. Finally Nixon rose hesitatingly, but as he caught a bright smile from Mrs. Mavor he straightened himself as if for a fight.

"I ain't no good at makin' speeches," he began, "but it ain't speeches we want. We've got somethin' to do, and what we want to know is how to do it. And, to be right plain, we want to know how to drive this cursed whisky out of Black Rock. You all know what it's doin' for us, at least for some of us, and it's time to stop it now, or for some of us it'll mighty soon be too late, and the only way to stop its work is to quit drinkin' it and help others to quit. I hear some talk of a league, and what I say is if it's a league out and out against whisky, a total abstinence right to the ground, then I'm with it. That's my talk. I move we make that kind of a league."

Nixon sat down amid cheers and a chorus of remarks: "Good man!" "That's the talk!" "Stay with it!" But he waited for the smile and the glance that came to him from the beautiful face in the corner, and with that he seemed content.

Again there was silence. Then the secretary rose, with a slight flush upon his handsome, delicate face, and seconded the motion. If they would pardon a personal reference, he would give them his reasons. He had come to this country to make his fortune. Now he was anxious to make enough to enable him to go home with some degree of honor. His home held everything that was dear to him. Between him and that home, between him and all that was good and beautiful and honorable, stood whisky. "I'm ashamed ed to confess," and the flush deepened on his cheek and his lips grew thinner, "that I feel the need of some such league." His handsome face, his perfect style of address, learned possibly in the Union, but, more than all, his show of nerve, for these men knew how to value that, made a strong impression on his audience, but there were no following cheers.

Mr. Craig appeared hopeful, but on Mrs. Mavor's face there was a look of wistful, tender pity, for she knew how much the words had cost the lad.

Then up rose a sturdy, hard featured man, with a bur in his voice that proclaimed his birth. His name was George Crawford. I afterward learned, but every one called him Geordie. He was a character in his way, fond of his glass; but, though he was never known to refuse a drink, he was never known to be drunk. He took his drink, for the most part, with bread and cheese in his own shack or with a friend or two in a sober, respectable way, but never could be induced to join the wild carousals in Slavin's saloon. He made the highest wages, but was far too true a Scot to spend his money recklessly. Every one waited eagerly to hear Geordie's mind. He spoke solemnly, as befitted a Scotsman expressing a deliberate opinion, and carefully, as if choosing his best English, for when Geordie became excited no one in Black Rock could understand him.

"Maister Chairmon," said Geordie, "I'm aye for temperance in a' things." There was a shout of laughter, at which Geordie gazed round in pained surprise. "I'll no' deny," he went on in an explanatory tone, "that I tak ma mornin' an' maybe a nip at noon an' a wee drap after wark in the evenin' an' whiles a sip o' toddy wi' a freen the cauld nights, but I'm no' a guzzler, an' I dinna gang in wi' the loons flingin' about guld money."

"And that's thrue for ye, me bye," interrupted a rich Irish brogue, to the delight of the crowd and the amazement of Geordie, who went calmly on:

"An' I canna bide yon saloon whaur they sell sic awfu'-like stuff—it's mair like lye nor guld whisky—an' whaur ye're never sure o' yer richt change. It's an awfu'-like place. Man," and Geordie began to warm up, "ye can juist smell the sulphur when ye gang in. But I dinna care about the temperance socceties, wi' their pledges an' havers, an' I canna see what hairm can come till a man by takin' a bottle o' guld Glenlivet hame wi' him. I canna bide the teetotal buddies."

Geordie's speech was followed by loud applause, partly appreciative of Geordie himself, but largely sympathetic with his position.

Two or three men followed in the same strain, advocating a league for mutual improvement and social purposes, but without the teetotal pledge. They were against the saloon, but did not see why they should not take a drink now and then.

Finally the manager rose to support his "friend, Mistah ah—Cwaflood," ridiculing the idea of a total abstinence pledge as fanatical and indeed "absurd." He was opposed to the saloon and would like to see a club formed, with a comfortable clubroom, books, magazines, pictures, games, anything, "donteherknow, to make the time pass pleasantly," but it was "absurd to ask men to abstain from a pwopah use of—aw—nouwishing dwinks" because some men made beasts of themselves. He concluded by offering $50 toward the support of such a club.

The current of feeling was setting strongly against the total abstinence idea, and Craig's face was hard, and his eyes gleamed like coals. Then he did a bit of generalship. He proposed that since they had the two plans clearly before them they should take a few minutes' intermission in which to make up their minds, and he was sure they would be glad to have Mrs. Mavor sing. In the interval the men talked in groups, eagerly, even fiercely, hampered seriously in the forceful expression of their opinions by the presence of Mrs. Mavor, who glided from group to group, dropping a word here and a smile there. She reminded me of a general riding along the ranks, bracing his men for the coming battle. She paused beside Geordie, spoke earnestly for a few moments, while Geordie gazed solemnly at her, and then she came back to Billy in the corner near me. What she was saying I could not hear, but poor Billy was protesting, spreading his hands out aimlessly before him, but gazing at her the while in dumb admiration. Then she came to me.

"Poor Billy! He was good to my husband," she said softly, "and he has a good heart."

"He's not much to look at," I could not help saying.

"The oyster hides its pearl," she answered, a little reproachfully.

"The shell is apparent enough," I replied, for the mischief was in me.

"Ah, yes," she replied softly, "but it is the pearl we love."

I moved over beside Billy, whose eyes were following Mrs. Mavor as she went to speak to Mr. Craig.

"Well," I said, "you all seem to have a high opinion of her."

"An' 'igh hopinion!" he replied in deep scorn. "An' 'igh hopinion, you calls it!"

"What would you call it?" I asked, wishing to draw him out.

"Oi don't call it nothink," he replied, spreading out his rough hands.

"She seems very nice," I said indifferently.

He drew his eyes away from Mrs. Mavor and gave attention to me for the first time.

"Nice!" he repeated, with fine contempt, and then he added impressively, "Them as don't know shouldn't say nothink."

"You are right," I answered earnestly, "and I am quite of your opinion."

He gave me a quick glance out of his little, deepset, dark blue eyes and opened his heart to me. He told me in his quaint speech how again and again she had taken him in and nursed him and encouraged him and sent him out with a new heart for his battle until, for very shame's sake at his own miserable weakness, he had kept out of her way for many months, going steadily down.

"Now, Oi hain't got no grip, but when she says to me tonight, says she, 'Oh, Billy—she calls me Billy to myself' (this with a touch of pride)—'oh, Billy,' says she, 'we must 'ave a total habstinence league tonight, and Oi want you to 'elp!' and she keep's a-lookin' at me with those heyes o' hers till if you believe me, sir," lowering his voice to an emphatic whisper, "though Oi knowed Oi couldn't 'elp none, afore Oi knowed Oi promised 'er Oi would. It's 'er heyes. When them heyes says 'do,' hup you steps and 'does.'"

I remember my first look into her eyes, and I could quite understand Billy's submission. Just as she began to sing I went over to Geordie and took my seat beside him. She began with an English slumber song, "Sleep, Baby, Sleep," one of Barry Cornwall's, I think, and then sang a love song with the refrain, "Love once again," but no thrills came to me, and I began to wonder if her spell over me was broken. Geordie, who had been listening somewhat indifferently, encouraged me, however, by saying: "She's just pittin' aff time with the feckless sangs. Man, there's nae grup till them." But when, after a few minutes' pause, she began "My Ain Fireside" Geordie gave a sigh of satisfaction, "Aye, that's somethin' like," and when she finished the first verse he gave me a dig in the ribs with his elbow that took my breath away, saying in a whisper, "Man, hear till yon, wull ye?" And again I found the spell upon me. It was not the voice, after all, but the great soul behind, that thrilled and compelled. She was seeing, feeling, living, what she sang, and her voice showed us her heart. The cozy fireside, with its bonny, blithe blink, where no care could abide, but only peace and love, was vividly present to her, and as she sang we saw it too. When she came to the last verse:

"When I draw in my stool
On my cozy hearthstane,
My heart louns sae licht
I scarce ken't for my ain,"

there was a feeling of tears in the flowing song, and we knew the words had brought her a picture of the fireside that would always seem empty. I felt the tears in my eyes, and, wondering at myself, I cast a stealthy glance at the men about me, and I saw that they, too, were looking through their hearts' windows upon firesides and ingle nooks that gleamed from far.

And then she sang "The Auld Hoose," and Geordie, giving me another poke, said, "That's my ain sang," and when I asked him what he meant he whispered fiercely, "Wheesht, mon!" and I did, for his face looked dangerous.

In a pause between the verses I heard Geordie saying to himself, "Aye, I maun gie it up, I deot."

"What?" I ventured.

"Naethin' ava." And then he added impatiently, "Mon, but ye're an inqueesitive buddie," after which I subsided into silence.

Immediately upon the meeting being called to order Mr. Craig made his speech, and it was a fine bit of work. Beginning with a clear statement of the object in view, he set in contrast the two kinds of leagues proposed—one a league of men who would take whisky in moderation, the other a league of men who were pledged to drink none themselves and to prevent in every honorable way others from drinking. There was no long argument, but he spoke at white heat, and as he appealed to the men to think, each not of himself alone, but of the others as well, the yearning born of his long months of desire and toil vibrated in his voice and reached to the heart. Many men looked uncomfortable and uncertain, and even the manager looked none too cheerful.

At this critical moment the crowd got a shock. Billy Breen shuffled out to the front and, in a voice shaking with nervousness and emotion, began to speak, his large, coarse hands wandering tremulously about:

NORTHEAST VIEW OF BUILDING.

Motto: THOROUGH INSTRUCTION, UNDER POSITIVE CHRISTIAN INFLUENCES, AT THE LOWEST POSSIBLE COST.

A Christian Training School for Girls, opened in 1894. Is this School the School for Your Daughter?

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH.—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

REV. G. R. STUART IN RICHMOND.

determination never to cease their efforts until they had "cleaned out the devil," and the Rev. George R. Stuart saw the fruit of his appeal and declared it to be good. He was satisfied with the result of his work, "for," said he, "unless you are all liars and pusillanimous cowards, this day will mark a new era for Virginia and old Richmond."

To the eye-witness the assertion of the evangelist had in it no element of exaggeration. From one end of the house to the other there was evident the spirit of excited enthusiasm called forth by the eloquence of the speaker. Men were stirred to their hearts' core, and at the end when called upon for action they hesitated not. Probably ten out of the two thousand resisted the appeal and kept their seat while all around, to the right and the left, in the balconies above and on the floor below, men stood in response to the call. When finally told to glance around at "the dirty gang" which would not join them, the "gang" was so small it could hardly be discerned. Here and there a man shifted uneasily in his seat, lost in the crowd. The triumph was complete.

WONDERFUL SCENE.

For many a day Richmond has not witnessed such a scene as this which occurred yesterday afternoon in this city. The Academy of Music, resorted to in the hope of accommodating all who in one way or another had manifested a desire to hear the great evangelist, but who could not secure standing room in the churches, did not begin to hold the crowd. Every seat was taken, aisles were filled, and the stage was crowded from end to end. The doors were opened at 3 o'clock and in fifteen minutes they had to be closed. The house was filled, and yet from every quarter men came. By the time the service began about eight hundred of them had congregated in the street outside. Some of them thundered at the doors and windows in a vain hope of gaining admittance.

This was one feature of the occasion. The other was the address by the evangelist and the manifestation of feeling evoked by it. When the speaker referred to the local situation great cheering filled the air. He spoke in caustic terms of the wine supper at the jail and startled his hearers by one or two declarations made in connection with this event. He addressed himself in satirical language to the police force of Richmond, "which went forth cautioned to see as little as possible and say nothing." He declared that he himself, although never having been here before, could join the force and "with this nose of mine" ferret out in ten days the gambling bells, of the existence of which the Richmond police declared they knew nothing. He laughed to scorn the idea that "saloon-keepers" are members of the Common Council of Richmond—"making laws for the people at one end and debauching them at the other"—and declared the saloon to be the root of all election frauds. The saloon, he said, elects the Council, and the Council does the rest. The Constitutional Convention had refused temperance legislation because the saloon said, "Don't touch it." As a grand climax, Mr. Stuart called upon the assemblage to see to it that they never put into office a man who is not sure that every officer representing the community is a clean man. The wild cheering which greeted this departure was a striking and significant expression of sentiment.

These are a few of the points touched upon by Mr. Stuart. Many others of nearly equal interest were brought in here and there.

The address bristled with facts driven home by strong arguments frequently enlivened by keen invective.

Humor and pathos followed closely upon the heels of each other, keeping the audience swinging from one extreme to the other. Any effort to give an account of the remarkable affair, which would in any sense of the word represent what truly happened, any attempt to make the words sound as they did, coming from the lips of the speaker, enforced by his wonderful power of gesture and mimicry, would be a blank failure. Only a point here and there can be seized upon and described.

THE SERVICE OPENS.

The service opened somewhere about 3:30 o'clock Professor Seagle, the noted singer, was there, and led in several selections, joined in by the great audience. Prayer was offered by Dr. W. W. Lear, pastor of Centenary Methodist church, and then after another chorus from the audience, the Virginia Glee Club Quartette sang beautifully, "Come, Sinner, Come." There were upon the stage at this time about forty ministers of the Gospel, including the following: Revs. C. P. Scott, W. W. Lear, D. D., James E. Laughon, David A. Solly, H. A. Bagby, D. D., G. H. Wiley, George Cooper, D. D., W. F. Davis, H. P. Atkins, C. H. Crawford, Carey E. Morgan, J. William Jones, D. D., H. E. Johnson, D. D., E. V. Baldy, E. L. Pell, D. D., C. A. Marks, W. B. Beauchamp, I. S. Boyles and others.

When the singing had reached an end, the Rev. Mr. Stuart advanced upon the stage and began to speak. He viewed with pleasure the great audience before him, but regretted the want of more room. "There is another audience just as big on the outside," he said, and wished he could get them all in and give them seats. But it was impossible, and meanwhile he asked the people to give their attention to him and not to the fuss at the doors made by those trying to gain admittance.

ANSWERED MR. ROSENE.

As a statement preliminary to his sermon, Mr. Stuart took up the criticism visited upon him by Mr. Rosene for the language of a recent utterance on the saloon question. "Not because he had any respect for the character which attacked him," but because he "didn't want to appear as a hyena," he explained that he did not use the words attributed to him by the Richmond liquor dealer. He indicated what he really did say, and asked if he was not right. Loud "Amens" from every quarter of the house greeted his question. The explanation made by Mr. Stuart was identical with that in The Evening Leader of a few days ago.

After this little departure, Mr.

Stuart went on to announce his subject for the afternoon. His text was taken from Habakkuk 2: 12 and 15: "Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood and establisheth a city by iniquity; woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink. * * * He is filled with shame for glory."

In his explanation of this text, Mr. Stuart declared that a pronoun stands for a noun and refers to a noun, which should be there. The pronoun was in his text; he meant to drop it and put in its place the noun, which should be there. Then he read again, and in this wise:

"Woe to Richmond, that buildeth a town with blood and establisheth a city by iniquity; woe unto Richmond, that giveth his neighbor drink; he is filled with shame for glory." "Yes, shame," he added; "shame for the feast in the jail, etc., etc., a thing which stinks in the nostrils of a gentleman."

This thing, however, and some others, Mr. Stuart said, he would take up later. At present he was there for another purpose—to tell the people of certain big black clouds hanging over the country and the city, "every one of which grows out of the beer keg and the whiskey barrel." Then in rapid succession he discussed these "clouds," which he named "anarchy," "mob spirit," "election frauds," "divorce," and "poverty." All these things he declared to be the result of the infernal old saloon. The whiskey man and the anarchist were hand in glove at every turn—they live together and there is apparently a bond of sympathy between them. The head of the anarchists is a whiskey dealer; Emma Goldman stays at a saloon-keeper's house when she goes on a visit to St. Louis. Czolgosz, slayer of McKinley, when at last caught, was found hiding in a saloon. "They are all one," declared the evangelist. "The anarchists want no laws and the saloon-keeper wants none. He makes more money on Sunday than at any other time. If you adopt prohibition legislation, these blood hounds of hell, receiving your boys and bringing death and destruction upon your homes, will put up 'blind tigers' and continue their dirty work."

JUMPED ON POLICE.

The saloon, Mr. Stuart declared, is at the bottom of the mob spirit, and "I don't believe in mobs, not even in feasts in the jail." The laws themselves, Mr. Stuart declared to be good in themselves. There ought to be laws and they ought to be executed. But the saloon sees that this is not done. "Your police go forth," he said, "cautioned to see as little as possible and say nothing. They didn't know of the existence of the gambling dens? I can get on the police force myself and in ten days with this nose of mine can find every one of these hells. No, it is because they don't want to. It is poor defenseless man they tackle. They run in the negroes fast enough, but when they get to 'high society' its s-sh! s-sh! Ain't you glad you ain't a negro?"

WHISKEY SELLERS IN THE COUNCIL.

The third black cloud also to be laid to the door of the saloon Mr. Stuart declared to be the election frauds. "The saloon," he said, "elects the Council, and the Council does the rest." In scathing terms he described the saloon-keeper, and then, with a world of scorn in his voice, added: "And here in Richmond you have got such men on your Board—taking care of the people at one end and debauching them at the other. * * But every man in the Council is not a dirty dog. There are some good ones, but hedged in by the others they can do nothing. * * You say that a preacher should not meddle in politics. I'm not meddling in politics. I don't want politics in my religion, but I do want religion in politics. I believe that the greatest need to-day is for earnest Christians to take hold of this matter and see that the country is not debauched by saloon devils."

Then rapidly Mr. Stuart reviewed the divorce problem and the matter of poverty. Both of these things he attributed largely to the saloons. His argument was frequently enforced by figures from statistical tables.

"GAMBLER IS A THIEF."

Following his discussion of these defects of the saloon Mr. Stuart proceeded to deal with the saloon itself. His utterances here were in some cases terrible. He denounced the traffic in saloons to start to finish and pictured vividly the miseries it wrought in the land. He touched up Congress and also referred to the Constitutional Convention. In the middle of a touching description of some one from the upper gallery he came down, asking the evangelist for his opinion of the gamblers. He cut the discussion short off and stopped to reply. "A gambler," said he, "is no better than a common thief; a saloon-keeper no better than a highway robber. Have you a son?" he asked of one of the ministers behind him? On whom he replied that he had. "Would you rather see in his pocket nothing or a bottle of whiskey?" "Nothing," replied the minister locally. "Just so," continued Mr. Stuart. "The highway robber meets your son and takes a dollar out of his pocket leaving nothing; the saloon-keeper takes the dollar and puts in a bottle of whiskey—worse than nothing. The difference between nothing and a bottle of whiskey is the difference between a highwayman and a whiskey dealer. A gambler is a man who wants to do something for nothing, and every man who wants to do that is at heart a villainous thief. A gambler is at heart and a thief in practice." (Great applause.)

SALOON-KEEPER IN CHURCH.

The voice from the gallery was heard no longer, and Mr. Stuart went on with his diatribes against the saloon-keeper. One feature of this had an interesting local bearing. "If a preacher," Mr. Stuart, "will keep one of these saloon devils in the board of his church the devil himself will have no reason for him, nor will anybody else. It is not fit to preach the Gospel." "What about wholesale dealers?" asked one of the ministers seated a few feet behind the speaker. Mr. Stuart whistled around. "A wholesale dealer is an old sow beside a litter of pigs." (Great applause.)

AFTER THE MAYOR.

The hour was now growing late and Mr. Stuart closed his sermon.

one thing reserved for the last, however. In making his appeal to the people Mr. Stuart said in effect:

Never put into the office of Mayor a man who is not worthy. See that every officer chosen to represent this community is a clean man." Wilder drowned his voice for a full moment or more.

When Mr. Stuart turned to the preachers behind him and asked them to stand up and declare that they would never stop until they had "cleaned out the devil." They did so and the audience applauded. Mr. Stuart asked the people themselves to stand up and endorse his sentiment uttered during the afternoon and thus commit themselves against the saloon. Two thousand or more arose and the preachers applauded. Then a third call was made, and over a hundred men took the pledge.

THE MEETING CLOSES.

The meeting was now over. With a parting shot that "if you are not all pusillanimous cowards, this will mark a new era for old Richmond." The evangelist dismissed the assemblage and the men filed out. The meeting had proved a memorable one and into the evening men were still talking about it.—Leader.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

The next session of Holston Conference meets at Wytheville, Va., October 1. Bishop Morrison is to preside. This is a noble man, and I am glad we shall have him in the chair. Bishop Jones, I understand, will meet with us, and he will be heartily greeted by his Conference.

The editor of the Southern Methodist Recorder is hereby cordially invited to meet with us. We don't all agree in opinions and policies, but we could shake hands and agree to disagree.

I hope to have the manuscript for the volume of the History of Holston Methodism ready for the printer by Conference. It is not what I want it to be, it is not what it ought to be; it is not what I would make it if I had the money to purchase leisure with. But we can't get the best, we must take the best we can get.

It is too hard on the poorly paid preachers to expect them to furnish a salary for another year. I do not know that it will be attempted. If my salary is not provided for, of course my work will not go on so well, and so on; and I may die ere it is finished, for the work may be taken out of my hands.

John H. Keith, pastor at Rogers, died last Saturday morning, and was taken to Asheville, N. C., yesterday and buried. Keith was one of our best men. He has been on our stations, and has been a presiding elder again and again. He was a very spirited man, and a very popular preacher.

Green P. Jackson, of the Tennessee Conference, has published a book setting forth the doctrine that man is an eternal probationer. I have the book but have as yet read but little of it. Charges are likely to be brought against him at the Tennessee Conference—charges of heresy. But the 25 articles are ominously silent on the subject of endless punishment. He cannot consistently be tried by the Standards, as the Church in rejecting the Wesleyan theory of sanctification has practically repudiated the Standards. If he is tried by the Bible, Jackson is a classical scholar, and he will, no doubt, draw the Greek on them. May God direct the brethren, so that no mistake may be made!

What we most need is more religion. A general revival is in demand. There are forces at work that threaten Christianity; and counter forces should be put into operation. The Holy Spirit alone can guide us unto all truth. Poor human reason is insufficient. The world by wisdom has never known God, and never will know Him. It is necessary that we should all be taught of God.

In the promotion of the truth we will incur opposition and persecution. We need the martyr spirit, willingness to suffer for Christ's sake—suffer suspicion, censure, poverty and even ostracism. May God deliver His people from a temporizing, man-fearing spirit!

AN OPEN LETTER OF THE Y'S.

The causus belli is this: First at Charlottesville in 1900, and afterward at Norfolk in 1901, an effort was made to put a check upon the increasing strength and consequent growth in power of the young woman's branch of the society. At the request of their then secretary, the young women who were delegates to the Charlottesville Convention did not report to their home unions the treatment they had there received. At Norfolk the injustice of the officials and Executive Committee to the young women and their secretary was so evident that it could no longer be kept a secret. The young women were refused recognition by the president in favor of others who had already spoken once upon the same question, and a perfectly proper motion made by them was ruled out of order by the chair. The Executive Committee nominated a secretary of their branch who was distasteful to them, and their protest was not allowed a hearing. The only answer ever made to their request for an explanation was, "It is the will of the executive."

At the Convention of 1901, and upon the day immediately following it, the general officers of the W. C. T. U. violated the by-laws, which say (election of officers, sec.): "All organizers, general secretaries, etc., shall be nominated by the Executive Committee, subject to the approval of the Convention, the vote being by acclamation, unless otherwise ordered." The general Y secretary so nominated in 1901 was objectionable to the young women. A motion to reject the part of the committee report containing the nomination, made and seconded by the young women was ruled out of order by the chair.

Again, under "duties of officers, sec. 1," "The president may call a meeting of the Executive Committee whenever she may deem it necessary for the good of the work, or shall call such a meeting upon written request of five members of the Executive Committee, in which the object of the meeting is stated." On the morning following the adjournment of the Convention of 1901, a meeting of the general officers, nowhere provided for by the laws of the society, was called to transact business. (See Minutes of Convention of 1901, page 18.) Not only is there no authority in the law for such a meeting, but the officers at that meeting, at the request of the president, further violated the law by the appropriation of money. Appropriations are lawfully made by an appropriations committee reporting to the executive (standing committees, sec. 2), and through it to the Convention. The appropriation referred to (see minutes for 1901, page 18), was not an emergency matter; if a need existed for it, that need existed before the adjournment of the Convention, only eighteen hours before.

Righteously administered, the law of the Society does not provide for the execution of "the will of the executive" without explanation to or consent of the delegates to a Convention.

In answer to their petition the young women will probably be told that the constitution already guarantees them all they ask. Properly administered, it would do so; the law is good enough; it is the violations of it by the officers that we object to. We must have a system which will protect us from official injustice or a set of officers who are willing to deal justly with us.

While the young women would be glad to have their old and most successful leader once more, they are not asking any personal favors of the Convention. They wish first of all that the law of the Society may be obeyed by all members, both in and out of office. They would not ask Mrs. Jobson to accept office with the present powers, even if it should be offered her. They contend for the rights the law of the Society distinctly says are theirs. They wish that all should be done in a dignified manner, so nothing is here said of the petty innuendoes and insults of which certain of the general officers have been guilty. There is ample evidence, but it will not be made public unless the exigencies of the case demand.

They are willing to rest their case by calling attention to the fact that although the reigning powers a year ago tried hard to learn who sent a certain report to a Richmond paper, the truthfulness of that report has not been denied by them.

PETERSBURG LETTER.

Petersburg, Va., Sept. 12, 1902.

Mr. Editor,—The Preachers' meeting, suspended for some time, reconvened last Monday morning. With cooler temperature, our weekly gatherings will be more pleasant and comfortable. Dr. Lipscomb's absence will be felt. Dr. Starr will be cordially welcomed by the meeting. These Petersburg Methodist pastors are very fraternal in their feelings.

Your correspondent spent several days this week in Dinwiddie preaching at Smith's Grove for the pastor, Rev. McDaniel Rucker, in a protracted meeting. The congregations were fine. The number of unconverted people attending the meeting was small. The good done was largely among the church members. The singing was excellent. That's a clever people who worship at Smith's Grove. I am glad I had the privilege of consorting with such folks. Bro. Rucker was kind and brotherly. Smith's Grove is on historic ground. In war times the vicinity of the church was the scene of bloody battles. General Grant, with his large army, camped not far distant for about twelve months. The fortifications his soldiers threw up are to-day plainly visible. A number of forts he used are also close by. With such reminders of the war near by, it was natural to think of those times that so severely tried our people. Petersburg and vicinity were surely in it in those days. The fine crops and prosperous farms of to-day make a pleasant contrast to those days of flying balls, fierce battles and terror-stricken people. I was informed that a Methodist church in that neighborhood was practically destroyed by the Federal troops. I think Congress ought to make indemnification for the loss, and, if proper steps are taken, I suppose it will be no trouble to get pay for the church. The value of the old church, with the interest added, would make a snug sum.

The autumnal season has great charms for this writer. I already feel its spell and expect to revel in the sights of Dame Nature when the opportunity comes.

In the afternoon of the first Sabbath a most interesting and helpful missionary meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society of High Street M. E. church, South, was held in the basement of that edifice in the presence of a good sized audience of Petersburgers, who paid marked attention to the speakers. Rev. W. McC. White, of the Presbyterian Church, gave an excellent talk on missionary work in China. Rev. T. Kuginiya, of the Japanese Missionary Conference, now travelling in the State, was present and gave a talk on the missionary work in Japan. It was good to be there.

GOING NOWHERE.

It was Johnny, the seven-year-old, who tired of the "merry-go-round." The previous summer it had fascinated him, and he could not ride on it too often. This season a single trip satisfied him, and he declined another. "No, thank you, grandfather," he said, in his quaintly polite way. "You see, we ride and ride, but we stay under that old tent all the time. I guess when anybody gets to be seven years old, they're too big to care about going and going that doesn't get anywhere." "Now, may the boy hold fast to his wisdom!" commented the grandfather, relating the incident.—Wellspring.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON II, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 12.

Text of the Lesson. Josh. iii, 9-14. 7. Memory Verses. 15-17—(Golden Text). Iss. XIII, 2—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

9, 10. Hereby ye shall know that the living God is among you.

The topic of our lesson is Israel crossing the Jordan, and the story is fully told in these two chapters from which our lesson is taken. By this great event the Lord would magnify Joshua in the sight of all Israel, that Israel might fear the Lord its God forever and that all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty (iii, 7; iv, 14, 24). The symbol of the presence of God was the ark of the covenant, for it was from above the mercy seat from between the cherubim that He had promised to meet and commune with Moses (Ex. xxv, 22), and at least seven times He is spoken of as dwelling between the cherubim. In the third chapter the ark is mentioned ten times and in the fourth chapter seven times, so that the ark of the covenant or the presence of the Lord in the midst of Israel is really the heart of our lesson.

11-13. Behold the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth passeth over before you into Jordan.

A study of Num. x will show that on the march the ark always had its place in the midst of Israel, six tribes preceding and six tribes following it, and it was distinguished from every other vessel by an outer covering wholly of blue (Num. iv, 5, 6), but on this occasion it went before all the people and preceded them by about 2,000 cubits that they might know the way by which they must go, for as the officers said, "Ye have not passed this way heretofore" (Josh. iii, 4). As we go on in the daily Christian life we must run with patience, looking unto Jesus, and we must see no one but Jesus only, for He is our only ark, and He alone can lead us in the way wherein we should go (Heb. xii, 1, 2; Mark ix, 8).

14-16. And it came to pass . . . the people passed over right against Jericho.

Thus these three verses begin and end, and they tell us that as soon as the feet of the priests that bore the ark touched the waters of the river the waters from above where Israel was stood upon a heap, and the bed of the river became dry for Israel to pass over. The same living God who divided the Red sea before Israel in the days of Moses did this before the millions of Israel under Joshua that Israel might see that the Lord was with Joshua as He had been with Moses and that all the people of the earth might know the mighty hand of the Lord. The same Lord afterward divided this same river for two men and a little later for one man (II Kings ii, 8, 14). We little know what the living God would do for one man willing to be as wholly His as Jesus Christ was, but we do know that His eyes are searching the whole earth to find such people (II Chron. xvi, 9). On this occasion as God said it would be so it came to pass, and so it always does, and the believer may say with the utmost confidence, "I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me" (Acts xxvii, 25, 44). Quietness and confidence honor God.

17. And the priests that bore the ark of the covenant of the Lord stood firm on dry ground in the midst of Jordan . . . until all the people were passed clean over Jordan.

As truly as every one of this great host of 2,000,000 or more passed safely over the Jordan while the priests bearing the ark stood firm, so truly shall every one of the Lord's redeemed pass safely through all this wilderness journey because of our High Priest, who is Himself the true ark of the covenant, the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, who ever liveth to make intercession for us and who has said, "Because I live ye shall live also" (John xiv, 19). Yet we must not think of Jordan as typical of death or of Canaan as suggestive of heaven, for there are no conflicts in heaven such as were in Canaan after Israel entered it. The Israel story is suggestive of life here on earth. The bondage in Egypt tells the condition of all before they are redeemed, the blood of the Passover lamb sets forth the way of redemption, the ups and downs of the wilderness journey are an all too common experience of many saved ones, while the restful aspect of the Canaan experience is the privilege of all believers, though but few seem to enjoy it. They do not enter in because of unbelief. But those who truly believe and therefore cease from their own works do enter into rest (Heb. iii, 18, 19, and iv, 3, 6, 10). See ing and knowing Jesus is rest.

iv, 1-7. These stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel forever.

This chapter tells of twelve stones set up as a memorial in the midst of Jordan in the place where the feet of the priests which bore the ark of the covenant stood (verse 9), as well as of twelve stones taken from the place where the priests stood and set up in the land (verse 8). Jordan signifies the river of judgment, and these two heaps of stones under the waters of Jordan and set up in the land speak to me of the believer crucified with Christ and risen with Christ, judgment past and Christ at God's right hand our life for evermore. Until we see this there is no abiding rest and victory. Unless we thus live the people of the earth will not know the hand of the Lord that it is mighty, and God will not be glorified in His redeemed.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic For the Week Beginning Oct. 12, "Fruitful or Fruitless"—Text, John xv, 1-8; Mark xi, 12-14.

"He came, if haply he might find anything thereon; he found nothing but leaves."

This is a parable in action and wonder at the sudden withering of the fruitless tree that should not distract attention from the moral truth which Jesus evidently purposed to emphasize.

The Jews made fairest and most pretentious professions of piety. They claimed to be the especial favorites of Deity and to have exclusive revelations and privileges from Him. They exhibited remarkable zeal in religion. They had an exuberance of foliage spiritual, though all the rest of the world was barren and dead in vice. Their exhibition of devotion to God gave the right to expect some genuine fruit of godliness in the matter of righteousness and justice. A tree which has premature and luxuriant foliage and no fruit is not a better tree than its neighbors whose leaf and fruit buds are living, though as yet dormant. In fact, its very leafage may be proof of its worthlessness, either as evidence of disease in itself, or lack of depth of soil and a quick springing because of shallowness or the work of worm at the root sapping life forces. Either or all these causes will produce such an effect, or the early putting forth of foliage may be the effect of an abundant vitality and an actual precocity which marks unusual virtue and produces fruit of special excellence. The show of the genuine and sham is much alike.

The Jewish religious pre-eminence was one of show and largely of sham. It preferred a Barabbas to a Jesus of Nazareth. It grew an Annas, a Caiaphas and a Judas Iscariot. It produced an Agrippa, whose persuasion never reached so far as to yield anything but leaves without figs.

Jesus is making His last appeal to His people to turn to God in truth. He has come to His own and has the right to expect them to be loyal to the God of truth and righteousness.

They are eager for the kingdom of God to appear. But when the King has come they crucify Him.

Jesus calls the attention of His disciples and of all men by this lesson of the fig tree to the necessity for genuine work in religion. No form of belief which does not pass through conviction into action is of value. Men must be good as well as talk and think the good. Their inner work must appear in outward deed. "By their fruits ye shall know them," He declares.

However much men imitate and simulate virtue while destitute of it, the value of the real remains permanent, and leaves never long deceive the seeker for fruit. Detection is absolutely certain. Neither God nor men will long tolerate the spurious. Both are hungry for the soul satisfying good. The tree which will not bear it is doomed.

Does this mean you? Many admire the genuine, but will not exert themselves to produce it. They stop at imitation. Such cannot abide. You must bear fruit or go. You may not long occupy ground unless you will yield fruit. You should bear abundantly. Are you doing so? If not, why not? The Master seeks fruit of you.

The Way of the Cross.

None of us can tell for what God is educating us. We fret and murmur at the narrow round and daily task of ordinary life, not realizing that it is only thus that we can be prepared for the high and holy office which awaits us. We must descend before we can ascend. We must take the via crucis (way of the cross) submissively and patiently if we would tread the via lucis (way of light). We must endure the polishing if we would be shafts in the quiver of Emmanuel. God's will comes to thee and me in daily circumstances, in little things equally as in great. Meet them bravely. Be at your best always, though the occasion be one of the very least. Dignify the smallest summons by the greatness of your response.—F. B. Meyer.

Making a Friend.

Trust is the first requisite for making a friend. How can we be anything but alone if our attitude to men is one of armed neutrality, if we are suspicious and assertive and querulous and overcautious in our advances? Suspicion kills friendship. There must be some magnanimity and openness of mind before a friendship can be formed. We must be willing to give ourselves freely and unreservedly. The more we know of Christ's spirit and the more we think of the meaning of God's faithfulness grace the more will we be convinced that the way to please the Father and to follow Son is to cultivate the graces of kindness and gentleness and tenderness to give ourselves to the culture of heart.—Rev. Hugh Black.

Christ's Words.

You never get to the end of Christ's words. There is something in them always behind. They pass into parables, they pass into laws, they pass into doctrines, they pass into conditions, but they never pass away after all the use that is made of them they are still not exhausted.—Stanley.

"Oh, Glorious Sabbath Sun."

Oh, glorious Sabbath sun, thou art
A balm and blessing to my heart;
Dark sorrow flies, and in thy shine
Bursts o'er the world a flood divine.

So may the light beyond the skies
Illume and bless my inward eyes,
That each new day may bring to The splendor of eternity.

—Richard Watson Gile.

ON THE OTHER SIDE

WHAT LIQUOR DEALERS THINK OF THE TEMPERANCE QUESTION.

The Organ of the W. C. T. U. Comments Forcefully on an Argument Giving the Views of the Men Deal in Rum.

A certain liquor organ, says a writer in The Union Signal, has devoted two columns of its space to the publication of an article bearing the title, "What I Believe in Regard to Temperance Question." The article signed by an officer of a liquor dealers' association. The writer divides his belief into twelve paragraphs—articles they may be termed. The whole is a fine example of the fallacious reasoning of error—self blinded.

First.—The liquor dealer believes in the observance of the laws of the country and insists "that as long as the law licenses the saloon and the saloon draws enormous profits from the liquor traffic"—we can read the rest of the paragraph without aid of original, so old and very familiar the plea become to our ears. It is well to notice, if we never have before, the difference between law and license. It is the sale of licenses precipitated the temperance reform. True reform always wins out. The saloon is entrenched behind a very ten wall—the wall of license. Law yet batter down the wall.

Second.—"I am in favor of the best plan of personal liberty given to every individual with common sense and pure character, to the full enjoyment of his personal rights, as long as a proper exercise of these rights is in harmony with the laws of our land does not conflict with the rights of others." The bare quotation of the principle is its own refutation. The "proper exercise" of the alcoholic principle create an unnatural appetite, the action of which is to break down humanly to blunt the moral sense, to create an army of lawbreakers who are in continual conflict with the rights of others.

Third.—"I believe the course taken by fanatics, so called prohibitionists, the W. C. T. U., . . . is a dangerous one, that tends to undermine our institutions, leads to riot and bloodshed and is liable to destroy the liberties guaranteed to us by the constitution of the United States." Thus in a similarly fair and as smoothly as together may Pharaoh have voice sentiments toward the crusade of Moses. There is a Red sea not many leagues before, and there shall Pharaoh and his hosts perish. It was too bad to spoil the tale of strawless bricks, but God's promised land awaited his children, and for Pharaoh was the Red sea prepared.

Fourth.—The fourth article serves up the old story of free moral agency and states that bread and wine are the gifts of God, not to be denounced by those calling themselves Christians. Bread and wine! Corn and grapes—the goodly fruit of field and vine! Yes, these are the gifts of God, and the devil puts poison in the vats whence flows the death dealing liquor that is not God's good creature.

Fifth.—This time the writer waxes eloquent over the presumption of those who dictate to men of age what they should eat or drink and declares the doctrine of total abstinence to be an infringement upon personal liberty. Then let law take its hand off all affairs. Let murder and rapine and theft and suicide reign. Cancel all the "thou shalt nots" of good government. Let the liquor dealer who is of age watch some one who is dear to him, also of age, drink laudanum and swallow strychnine. It is a free country!

But why wade on through sixth, seventh, eighth to lastly? Over and over we have heard and answered the subtle, faulty reasoning of the enemy. We pause but to note his conclusion, "I believe that good education, common sense, a pure character and proper self control are the only effective remedies against the evil of intemperance." Well, we are educating; we are with God's help making sense—the adjusted sense of right and wrong—widely common. Purity our white ribbon stands for, and purity we teach and preach and practice. Proper self control, who shall define what this is—the makers of lawbreakers and license advocates or the godly mothers who would that Christ's wisdom, Christ's self control, should become the rule for every man and woman upon the earth?

Curing Inebriate Women.

In a report of the work done by the Manchester and Salford (England) Women's Temperance association the following statement is made concerning the result of treatment in a retreat for inebriate women which is maintained by the association: "The rigid enforcement of total abstinence proves invariably beneficial. The recovery begins at once in body and mind. Soon a change is seen in the very countenance, and many a woman grows five years younger within a twelvemonth."

Germany Waking Up.

The German people are becoming thoroughly aroused over the destruction being wrought in that country by alcoholic drinks. The university authorities complain that their students are becoming stupid, and something must be done to stay the tide of beer drinking. A recent writer has discovered that nearly all the crimes are committed while under the influence of drink.

Doing a Good Work.

The Jerry McAuley mission, in New York, had last year an attendance of 40,000 people at its meetings. Many of these are homeless men and drunkards.

To thine own self be true,

And it must follow, as the night, the day,

Thou can'st not then be false to any man.

—Hamlet, 1. 3.

Rev. Samuel F. Pearson, recently best known as Sheriff Pearson, of Portland, Me., died August 8th. He devoted his life to temperance work, and during these recent years has thoroughly demonstrated that prohibitory laws can be enforced.

CONDENSED STATEMENT.

Total income over ..... $7,000,000 00
Total outgo less than ..... 4,000,000 00
Gain in assets for 1901 ..... 3,608,295 20

Interest income for the year was $1,630,362, which paid all death losses, $1,092,872, and left a balance of $537,490. Had the interest rate been as low as many of the Companies it would have been only $1,200,000, and had the death loss been as high, this Company would have lost $1,400,000 in death losses, thus the UNION CENTRAL saved to its policy holders for one year alone over $700,000, as compared with many other large Companies.

This Company wrote in Virginia $1,700,000, and after taking off all death claims, lapses, and extra policies returned, it leaves a net gain of over $1,200,000 in insurance in force for 1901, which amount was not surpassed by but one Company of the many doing business in the State—a great showing.

The net gain in surplus for the year, $707,000, was largely in excess of any previous year, which means their dividends for 1902 are to be held up to former years, which is a showing that should be greatly appreciated by the public when it is considered in the last few years nearly all of the Companies have greatly reduced their dividends.

I made a close study of the question before taking any insurance, and after having actual returns in dividends on my first two policies I doubled my insurance with the UNION CENTRAL. It is a good Company for protection of the family, and a good Company for investment.

REV. JAMES CANNON, JR.

My dividends in this Company are most satisfactory. I have two policies with them.

VERANDA VIEWS.

his son a good send off. He is disinclined to either professional or commercial life; but wants to make a man of himself. I advised him to select a tract of 500 or 600 acres of land conveniently located to the railroad, found a country seat, and manage that land as he would a bank. Land in the South is now cheap. It will probably never be as cheap again. And what the South chiefly needs is brains on its farms. We have abandoned the country too much to negroes and ignorant white tenants. A young man can get enough land to start a stock farm for less than he can get an interest in a city business; and by making it the aim of his life to create a home, he will have an object worthy of any man's highest effort. It is a familiar saying that "the home is the citadel of our civilization." I would amend the adage by saying the country home is the citadel of our civilization. Put the attention on the country home that is bestowed on the home in the city, and it is far more beautiful and fruitful of happiness. So thinks the man on the veranda.

I was in Memphis the other day. Mr. George Gould was there, too. I didn't see him, but he said: "Memphis is destined to be the metropolis of the South." So the papers said, and that Mr. Gould will spend millions of dollars there to get the Missouri Pacific railroad proper facilities. Mr. Gould is right in his opinion about Memphis. He is planning to construct another great bridge over the Mississippi. While in Memphis, I worshipped at my old charge, the First Methodist church, and heard a masterly sermon by Rev. James C. Morris, D. D. It was equal to Bishop Wilson when he was in his prime. We have few preachers who can match J. C. Morris when he has on his "preaching clothes." But he is as sensitive as a katydid to his surroundings, and no man for an occasion. The consciousness of public expectation, of notoriety, or even unusual publicity, fetters the freedom of his mind. To hear him you must drop in on him, when he is in his own pulpit, surrounded by an atmosphere of earnest Christian faith and love. Then he swings off with the imperial wing of an eagle, and you listen in wonder, and are stirred to the centre. My, what a sermon he preached on the simple yet sublime text: "We are laborers together with God." Everybody loves him; everybody honors him. He ought to be—no, I won't say it, either. He is where he ought to be, in the pastorate. He is closing his fourth year in his present charge. Happy the church that receives him another year; a true pastor and a teacher sent by God.

Religious News.

Rev. Mr. Carson has closed his protracted meeting at Andrews chapel, with five additions to the church.—Enterprise.

The Christian Thought Club of the Methodist ministers met at Epworth church yesterday at 12 o'clock with President E. H. Rawlins in the chair. Rev. E. K. Odell was elected secretary pro tem. Prayer was offered by Rev. E. T. Dadmun. The call for new books read showed that many interesting new volumes had recently been studied. Rev. J. N. Latham read a very interesting and well written paper on "Poetry as a Resource for the Preacher"—especially recommending the study of Shakespeare, Wordsworth, Browning and Tennyson. On next Monday Rev. E. H. Rawlins will give a review of "Some Phases of Religious Experience," by Prof. James, of Harvard University.—Pilot.

THEY WILL MEET IN JERUSALEM

Philadelphia, Sept. 19.—It was definitely decided to-day at the last session of the Central Executive Committee of the International Sunday School Convention to hold the next world's Convention in Jerusalem, during the month of April, 1904.

This decision is subject to the approval of the British wing of the organization, but it was said to-night that the wing will undoubtedly approve the action of the committee.

H. N. Hartshorn, A. B. McCorlis and E. K. Warren were appointed a committee to charter an ocean steamer and attend to the details of the trip. Many members have already signified their intention of accompanying the party.—Leader.

Rev. W. J. Williams closed at Carmel church on Tuesday night one of the most blessed and most decided protracted efforts for God that has been held here for many years. The one thought, earnest and constant prayer and untiring work of pastor and people from the commencement to the close of this great revival was the conversion of sinners. The congregations were very large and very attentive, and the Word of God as presented by Rev. Mr. Williams, ably assisted by Rev. Mr. Lumpkin, of the Montross district, was convincing and convicting, reviving Christians, reclaiming backsliders and converting sinners. As a result of the meeting forty-three united with Carmel and ten or more with other churches, and no pen can estimate the influence for God and good that went out from this meeting, bringing hope, comfort and joy to a great number who, to the end of their lives, with humble and grateful hearts, will sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."—North ern Neck News.

DR. EDWARDS' LECTURE.

"How to Become Rich," was the subject of an able and eloquent lecture delivered by Dr. F. M. Edwards, of the M. E. Church, South, in the lecture hall of his church last Tuesday evening. The trend of argument showed the sordid greed for gain might pick up money for a man, but that no man could be counted rich without nobility of character and purity of heart, such as insure for its devotees—"riches were neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves cannot break through and steal."

Mr. Edwards very justly commended the disposition of the Accomac News against the order of crime and outlawry so prevalent in Accomac, saying that the "press" and all good people must stand firm for the highest and best order of citizenship. The lecture was in the interest of the Epworth League of the town. In behalf of this body of workers, it is but just to say that the influences for good in the community going out from the Epworth League cannot be overestimated.—Accomac News.

MATHEWS COURTHOUSE.

A grand rally of the Epworth League societies of the Methodist churches of this county for the purpose of raising funds to maintain two scholarships in the Methodist School in Mexico, was held at "Tabernacle," near here, on Thursday, the 18th.

Rev. C. D. Crawley, the able and efficient minister in charge of this circuit, who has the confidence of our entire community because of his indefatigable zeal and high Christian character, conducted the exercises with characteristic directness and ability. The service consisted of speeches from the Rev. Wm. Dabney, the State president of the League; Messrs. Samuel Foster, J. Richardson, John F. Hudgins, all of whom acquitted themselves handsomely. There was a very large audience, who thoroughly enjoyed the delightful occasion. The whole affair was a great success socially, religiously and financially, the societies realizing more than they needed for the scholarships, thus reflecting great credit upon Rev. C. D. Crawley and his able corps of workers—male and female.—Southside Sentinel.

THE CENTENARY DEBT.

The services at Centenary Methodist church Sunday were of more than ordinary interest. A large congregation gathered at the morning service, which was conducted by the pastor, Rev. J. Whitley, assisted by Rev. H. C. J. J. J. Before the sermon the pastor stated that the payment of the entire church debt, which is a fraction less than five thousand eight hundred dollars, had been provided for in cash and by subscriptions that are payable on or before October 15th. The subscriptions, as stated, range from one hundred dollars down to fractions of a dollar, and show great liberality on the part of many members and friends of Centenary. He laid emphasis on the necessity that every subscription shall be paid in full, and that other amounts still needed to cover any shrinkage that may occur in making the final collections and settlement. Some have yet contributed to this fund, and they are urged to do so at once, so that payment of the debt may be assured without unnecessary delay. Contributions may be handed to the pastor or to Mrs. C. W. Hicks, Mrs. W.

H. Crutchfield, Mrs. George G. Leckie, or to any of the official members, or ladies who have been active in this work. It is expected that all subscriptions will be collected by the 15th of October, and that the debt will be wiped out immediately afterwards.

The pastor preached at the morning service, and Rev. H. C. Pfeiffer preached at night. Centenary is to be congratulated upon the great work that has been done this year.—News.

METHODIST PREACHERS' MEETING.

In the Methodist preachers' meeting this morning interesting subjects were discussed. The chairman, Rev. L. W. Guyer, called the meeting to order, and Rev. J. A. Thomas made the opening prayer.

Dr. W. G. Starr was absent, and so was Rev. Geo. E. Booker, who made report of his labors through the chairman.

The usual reports of their labors on yesterday were made by the pastors. Nothing special to note in these reports submitted. The work generally is doing well in the city, and the preachers are cheerful at the outlook. With the favorable weather of glorious autumn in which to labor pastors expect large results.

Rev. Andres Gregor, of the Chaldean church, from far away Asia, is in the city soliciting aid to rebuild his church, destroyed by the Turks. He is commended by Bishop Chandler and others. The preachers' meeting recommended him and his cause to our people.

Rev. Ivey, of the Union Street C. M. E. Church, was also present, and stated that he wished to hold anniversary services in his church, the exercises to go through next week. He invited our pastors to aid him by preaching in his pulpit next week at night. A number have promised to do so.

Some of our pastors went over last week to Richmond to hear the famous evangelist, Rev. Geo. R. Stuart. The remarks concerning the noted evangelist made this morning were quite interesting. Mr. Stuart has made a favorable impression upon our pastors who have heard him. A committee from the preachers' meeting last week invited him to conduct evangelistic services in Petersburg, and he consented to do so. These services will be held next spring in a tobacco warehouse to be fitted up for the occasion, so it is thought.—Petersburg Progress.

NORFOLK PREACHERS.

The Methodist preachers convened in their usual weekly meeting at 10:20 A. M. yesterday, with the president, Rev. W. R. Proctor, in the chair.

The deliberations were opened with prayer by the Rev. D. J. Traynham, of Norfolk circuit.

The following preamble and resolutions expressing the regret of the Methodist preachers on the departure of Bishop Smith and family from Norfolk and their desire for him to make his permanent home here was offered by Rev. R. H. Bennett:

"Whereas we have learned with regret of the contemplated departure of Bishop A. Coke Smith as a resident of our community; therefore be it

"Resolved, That we deeply regret to lose Bishop Smith and his family from our midst even for a time.

"Resolved, That we most cordially invite and urge the Bishop to make his permanent home in our community.

"Resolved, That we sincerely hope that the Methodists of our vicinity may speedily see their hopes result in offering to Bishop Smith a suitable home in our midst.

"R. H. BENNETT,
"E. H. RAWLINGS,
"D. J. TRAYNHAM."

After the reading of the preamble and resolutions there was a universal desire expressed by all the preachers present that steps be speedily taken by the Methodists of Norfolk and vicinity to provide Bishop Smith and family with a home in this city that will be a credit to Methodism as well as a movement that would show in a practical way the esteem in which Bishop Smith is held here. The resolutions were then unanimously adopted.

The announcement was made of the critical illness of the wife of Rev. John W. Nicholson, of the York circuit, and special prayer was offered by the Rev. J. K. Joliff for God's comforting and sustaining grace to be with her in her illness and for her restoration to health.

Rev. R. H. Bennett stated that the wife of Rev. N. B. Foushee, of South Norfolk circuit, who had undergone a dangerous surgical operation at the Norfolk Protestant Hospital, was now convalescent and would likely leave the hospital for her home to-day or tomorrow. He said she would be glad to receive a visit from any of the preachers.

CALL OF THE CHURCHES.

Rev. E. H. Rawlings had a good day Sunday at Monumental church. There was a fine attendance at the Sunday school and a good congregation at the morning service. At the close of the service he met with the Men's League and had a most delightful meeting. He preached again at night to a very large congregation. Mr. Rawlings stated that he was in Richmond last week and attended one of the Rev. George R. Stuart's services at Broad Street church, and heard him preach one of the sweetest and most effective sermons of his life. He said that Mr. Stuart was doing a great work in Richmond.

Rev. D. J. Traynham preached three times Sunday—at Olive Branch at 11 A. M., Indiana at 3 P. M., and at Deep Creek at night. He had good congregations at all of these services, the attendance being better than usual. He is conducting a meeting at Deep Creek.

At Park View Rev. J. N. Latham had seven accessions to the Sunday school, and fine congregations to hear him morning and night Sunday.

Rev. Ernest Stevens had a better attendance than usual on the Sunday school and fair congregations at the regular church services Sunday.

Rev. J. B. Merritt preached at Memorial church, Berkley, Sunday morning and conducted his usual services at the Seamen's Bethel in the afternoon and night.

At night he preached a special sermon to the Huntersville Lodge of Odd Fellows, a large crowd being present to hear the discourse.

Rev. W. P. Jordan reported a fine Sunday school at Park Place. Since his last attendance on the preachers' meeting he had visited one of his old charges in Chase City, Va., and attended an interesting meeting held there by the Rev. R. A. Compton.

At Centenary church Rev. E. T. Dadmun held his usual services Sunday and had fair congregations.

Rev. W. T. Green reported a good day all around at Central Sunday. He preached morning and night to large congregations. In the afternoon he preached at Cottage Place.

Rev. George H. McFaden had a very large Sunday school at Wright Memorial. Mr. Yates, international secretary of the Y. M. C. A., conducted the morning service and Mr. McFaden preached to a large congregation at night a special sermon to the W. C. T. U.

Rev. Dr. Barrett reported a good day at the Christian Memorial Temple. There was a large attendance on the Sunday school exercises and excellent congregations at the morning and evening services. In the afternoon he organized a new Christian church at Rosemont, Norfolk county.

At Denby's church, Norfolk county, Rev. W. R. Crowder had a good Sunday school and a fairly good congregation at Sunday morning service. Owing to a revival meeting being in progress at Salem Baptist church, he held no service at night.

Rev. N. R. Smith preached at Oaklette church in the morning and at Memorial, Berkley, at night.

Rev. C. H. McGhee had two additions to the Sunday school at Lambert's Point, preached to a good congregation at the 11 A. M. service, and to a fair one at night. He received three new members by certificate.

There was a fine congregation at Epworth church Sunday morning. At night the church was filled to overflowing to hear Mr. Bennett's fourth of the series of sermons on "Marriage and the Home."

At Queen Street church Rev. J. K. Joliff had a pleasant day and good congregations.

Rev. W. R. Proctor had fine congregations at McKendree and profitable services.

Rev. Graham H. Lambeth preached at West End Methodist church, Hampton, Sunday morning and night in the interest of the State Methodist Orphanage. Five hundred and twenty-five dollars was raised for the cause.—Virginian-Pilot.

TALMAGE SERMON

By Rev.

FRANK DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D.,

Pastor of Jefferson Park Presbyterian Church, Chicago

Chicago. The common disposition to meet trouble is shown to be unwise and un-Christian in this discourse by Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage on the text Matthew vi, 34,
"Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Christ is giving counsel, which recalls the advice the dying man once gave to his children. After calling his sons and daughters to his bedside the dying father said: "My children, I have seen a lot of troubles in my time. I have seen so many troubles that they have completely worn me out, and that is the reason that I am now dying, when I ought to be in my physical and mental prime. But the saddest part of it is that most of my troubles have been imaginary troubles. They have been unnecessary troubles. They have not been troubles of the imminent today, but the visionary tomorrow. They have been troubles which would never have bothered me unless I had gone forth and hunted them out of their lair and troubled them. The things that have given me most concern have been the things that never happened.
So I charge you, my dear children, if you would serve God with your best physical, mental and spiritual powers, always obey the words which Christ spoke in his famous sermon: "Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow, for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

My glorious text teaches almost exactly the same lesson that Mr. Beecher once presented when he said: "All time is divided into three parts—the past, the present and the future. The past belongs to gratitude and regret, the present to contentment and work,
the future should belong to only hope and trust." It teaches that a dread of future evil is dishonoring to God, because it implies a doubt whether the good God will be true to the trust we have placed in him and whether he will really keep the promises he has made to his people. It teaches that after a Christian has done his best, his level and conscientious best, he should then joyfully and confidently leave the future in God's hands, and in God's hands alone. It teaches that no matter how hopeless, humanly speaking, may be the outlook, if we know and trust God we should let our gospel faith chase away all the doubts and worries and fears that fret and tease and tantalize us in reference to the future, even as the rising sun scatters the darkness and the impenetrable gloom of the night. It teaches that no matter how dark and threatening may be the shrieking tornadoes of trouble the gospel rainbows should be big enough to arch the widest of horizons and bright enough to smile through even a shower of falling tears.

Anticipated troubles rarely happen.
By this statement I do not mean that if a man would cease to worry he could get a divine passport which would protect him forever from the rough hand of trouble. The cup of sorrow must be pressed against every human lip. The old eyes, as well as the young eyes, must become fountains of tears. Death angel as well as birth angel must flap the wing over a Phae-raoh's palace as well as over the poor man's hut. It is by the broken heart that God is able to make the songsters and songstresses sing their sweetest music.

But, though troubles must and will come to the rich and the poor, the old and the young, alike, yet I make this assertion about your past life: The troubles and misfortunes which you anticipated and worried over rarely if ever happened. As our own philosopher poet said:

Some of your ills you have cured,
And the sharpest you still have survived,
But what torments of pain you've endured

From evils that never arrived!

The Evils You Look For.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the troubles which did you the most serious damage were those troubles which, as a tiger, leaped upon you unexpectedly from ambush, not the troubles that lay crouching and glaring and threatening you in broad daylight in the open pathway just ahead. Those serious troubles came to you as the little pygmy was supposed to have come to the king of old.
When the pygmy asked the great monarch for permission to rule over all the lands which his little, short limbs could cover in three steps, the royal consent was derisively given. Then the insignificant dwarf immediately sprang up into the stature of a huge giant. With one stride the giant stepped across the land; with another stride the giant stepped across the seas, and with a third stride the giant lifted his sledge hammer fist and swept the trembling king off his throne. Your troubles, to use a familiar comparison, came like a clap of thunder and a stroke of lightning out of a clear sky.
They came like a collision at sea or as the terrific explosion of a gunpowder magazine. They came as a thief, not by day, but by night, in a way and at a time you did not expect them.

Let me illustrate how your troubles came in an unexpected way. Two of your three children were born physically strong. Every movement of their limbs, every smile of their red lips, every look of their dancing eyes, bespoke perfect health. They could run up the mountain side as swiftly as a gazelle chased by the dogs. They would climb a tree almost as quickly as a squirrel would seek his nest in the old orchard trunk. Then those children would sit laughing and singing and swinging upon one of the branches. But, though two of your children were born physically well, the third was born a poor, helpless invalid.

You, the mother, worried about that third child from the day when she was born. For years not a night passed in which you did not arise two or three times to go to the crib and give the necessary medicines. Did your worrying about that child do you any good?
Did your troubles come in the way you expected? Today your two children who were once strong are dead. Diptheria in one week slew them both.
Your invalid daughter, about whom you worried, has overcome her invalidism and grown into young womanhood. She is now married and has children of her own. Your troubles came, but the panther leaped upon you from the rear and did not lie crouching in the open pathway ahead.

Some Useless Worries.

As a business man you have often worried about this, that and the other thing. You have worried about whether the firm that failed would be able to pay for the goods they bought. You have worried about the tariff laws and the elections. You have worried about the rival concern which settled on the next block. You never thought that a worse trouble could come to you than the loss of your store. You never thought that your own health could break down and that you would have to resign from the firm and sell out.

Troubles came into your life, but they invariably came in the way and at the time you did not expect.

If this premise is true, is it not time for you to stop your useless fretting?
Is it not a senseless occupation to be worrying about certain troubles which in all probability—judged by the past—will never afflict your life? Do you not feel that the old English proverb is right which declares, "You must not cross the bridge until you come to it?"
In the journey of life you will find many bridges down. You will discover that the spring freshets have swept away the embankments upon which countless abutments were placed. But in all probability the bridge you worry most about will be firm enough and strong enough to bear you over its stream, although you may have to wade into other angry waters a little farther on.

Anticipating troubles is a sin, because the present duties of life tax almost every man's physical and mental resources to the utmost limit. We read with sorrow and admiration about the pathetic struggle Sir Walter Scott made in his old age to pay off his debts. By a foolish investment he became responsible for something like $600,000. With his magic pen he went to work. He worked during the day.
He worked during the night. He worked while he lay in bed. He worked when walking upon the street.
He lived and worked for the one purpose, that of being able to say he owed no man a penny. But while he worked he so worried over this debt that one day his physician came to him and said, "Sir Walter, if you do not cease worrying you will die."
With that the magician of Abbotsford looked up and gave a wan smile as he said: "Why, doctor, as long as that debt is hanging over my head I cannot help worrying. I know the worrying is killing me. But you might as well go and tell my cook to order the water in the kettle not to boil as to command my brain not to worry."

But Sir Walter Scott, toiling to pay off his debts by the use of his pen, did not have to work any harder than thousands and hundreds of thousands of men and women have to work to meet the responsibilities of the present time. Take, for illustration, the ministers of our generation. Last week I received a message from a so called gentleman which politely informed me that "the preachers of our time, as a rule, lead an idle and an unoccupied existence and that there is nothing for them to do." Nothing for the average preacher to do? Why, the average preacher today is working as hard as ever beast of burden worked under driver's lash. He is working so hard that from Monday morning to Sunday night he is mentally and physically on the strain all the time. I tell you that the preparation of two sermons and the meeting of the many duties of the pastorate combine to make a Herculean task, a task which gives but little time for the sleep and recreation that are necessary for physical well being, but the average preacher has no more demands made upon his time than the average doctor, lawyer, editor, merchant, clerk, wife or mother. Almost without exception all people are working up to their physical and mental limit, yet, strange to say, though most people are working very hard, comparatively few break down from overwork. God gives to all of us strength enough to meet the duties of the present day, but God does not give to one strength enough to meet the duties of the present day and those of tomorrow at the same time. So people when they break down do break down from overwork, but, Sir Walter Scott, from worry, and worry alone.

Carrying the Cares of Tomorrow.

People who are unfitting themselves for the duties of everyday life by worry remind me of an old story told about a traveler in the far west who was trudging along a high under what he regarded as a grievously heavy load. Along that high came a king driving in his chariot, reined in his horses and asked the tired pedestrian if he would not like to ride. The weary traveler gladly consented and climbed into the rear of the chariot. After awhile the king looked back and, to his surprise, saw the traveler sitting crouched in the rear of the chariot, with his heavy pack still tied to his back. "Stranger," said the king, "why art thou still lading thy pack?" "Because," answered the traveler, "I did not feel that thou wouldst let it if I placed it in thy chariot."
The king thought if thou wert willing to carry it I ought at least to be willing to hold my pack." "Oh, foolish man," answered the king, "if I am willing to carry thee am I not willing to carry thy pack also?" So God promises he will help us carry the duties of the present day. But instead of trusting him as to the future most people go on pile upon their own backs all the cares and the anxieties of the morrow.
The tired traveler of old, weighed down with a pack of tomorrow's cares, they ought to be willing to lay at the Master's feet.

As worry racks the physical frame so that the tired mind is unable to think clearly; as it overtaxes the nervous system until the ganglia or nerves centers have imperfect connection complete disconnection, like the phone when the wires have been broken or crossed; as worry paralyzes the digestive organs until they refuse properly to assimilate the food which the human body is dependent for the sustenance of life; as it is the forerunner of all the fatal diseases by which the human race is invalidated and destroyed, so it is an awful burden for you to fret and worry about the future and destroy your life's usefulness and influence. Can you not trust true Christian men and women forth to meet the duties of the present day and leave the visionary future in God's hands? Worry is not a bar-less gaffly, an insectile annoyance, a buzzing irritant, a haphazard plaything. It is a sin which has destroyed more victims than have ever lain upon the field of battle or gro-ined into pieces between the upper and nether millstones of persecution and slander. Beware how you allow fatal poison to enter your sinful heart.

Anticipating trouble is a form of intellectual and spiritual sin by which some men are blinded to the appreciation or enjoyment of present blessings. Because of this sin they cannot thank God for their loving wives and voted children. They cannot thank God for the food they eat and clothing they wear. They cannot thank him for their opportunities of usefulness and for health and strength. They are always thinking of something they might have had; of something that might be taken away. They have no gratitude in their hearts to God for anything. Every kiss has in it the sting of a scorpion. Every sunbeam is eclipsed by a dark cloud.

Sometimes efforts are made to keep preachers out of temperance work by telling them that they are meddling with politics. I tell my preachers to stick their noses just as deep into politics as the whiskey evil goes.—Bishop Morrison, M. E. Church, South.

I could have gotten a scholarship at another business college in Richmond for half what it cost me at the Smithdeal, although the regular rates of all the business colleges in Richmond are about the same.

When I reached Richmond I inquired of several business men for the best business college in the city, and without exception they all recommended Smithdeal as the best.

CONDEMNED BY ROME FOR BEING SAVED BY CHRIST!

The following paper, presented by John F. Thomson, received the unanimous assent of the South America Annual Conference, at the session held in Buenos Ayres, March 12-18, 1902:

By the express will of the Eternal God, the founder and head of the Christian Church was called Jesus, which means Saviour. Jesus came into this world "to seek and to save that which was lost." He effected the redemption of the human race, and made possible the salvation of all men by His propitiatory death on the cross.

He established His Church to testify concerning the necessity, the possibility, and the present reality of salvation. Sinners "must be born again," and he who has been so born, "has peace with God." "He shall not come into condemnation, but has passed from death unto life." Salvation is real and present; every one who believes "hath the witness in himself"; he has divine authority to say, "Now am I a son of God."

The only one who can lay down the conditions of this salvation, and define the process that leads to its possession—is God. This He has done in the sacred Scriptures of the New Testament. The necessary steps are completely and comprehensively stated in the following sentence, "We are saved by grace, through faith; faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."

Let us suppose a man convinced of his own sinfulness, and therefore of his lost condition. Bowed down by the terrors of the world to come, and his helplessness to avoid them, he cries out in the agony of his soul, "What must I do to be saved?" Who can answer him but the God whom he has offended? Urged by his distress, he turns to the Word of God, and learns from it that Jesus has made for him a perfect propitiation, an oblation that covers the sins of the whole world; and the Son of God personally invites him to accept it, saying, "Come unto me, and I will give thee rest." "He that believeth on Me hath everlasting life." The penitent does believe; he accepts the invitation and the promise as though he heard them fall from the lips of Jesus—as though he saw his Saviour face to face; in the very instant he so believes the Holy Spirit gives to him divine grace, aided by which he lifts his soul to his once offended Maker and exclaims, "Abba! my Father!" He has received the kiss of peace, and the assurance of his acceptance. He has obeyed the will of God, he has found peace, he is saved; and it is not only his privilege, but his bounden duty to proclaim the fact.

This is, undoubtedly, conversion—the new birth—as understood by the Methodist Episcopal and other evangelical Churches.

Now, had the man in the supposed case been a member of the Roman Catholic Church, what effect would his testimony as to the reality of his new and joyous experience produce in his relations to that Church?

That Church would command him to retract all that he had said concerning the reality of that experience. It would characterize, as a delusion of the devil, all that he had felt in that experience; and if he refused to reject as spurious and illusory the witness of the Holy Spirit he would be excommunicated and declared a child of perdition and an enemy of God—that is, for having sought and obtained salvation, they would pronounce him lost. For having entered the kingdom of heaven by the path marked out by the King, they would claim the power and ostentatiously exercise it to send him to hell. For having done that for which the Son of man died, they would try to blast him with their curses.

The preceding statements are either true or false. If true, they point to the most awful fact in the history of religion. The horrors of the Inquisition, the French dragonades, and St. Bartholomew's all had their roots in that fact. A Church that will use the name of Christ and the prestige of his religion to thwart and nullify the work of the Holy Spirit is capable of any crime.

We earnestly solicit a serious investigation of this tremendous question by the ministers, teachers and leaders of thought in our Church; and if they should reach the convictions that we deem logically inevitable, we implore them, in the name of the Saviour, not only to advocate the strengthening and extension of evangelical missions in Roman Catholic countries, but to begin an ardent propaganda among the members of that Church in the United States; not to base sectarian movement seeking a mere change of name or ecclesiastical relations on the part of the proselytes, but a work of love, carrying to those so-called Catholics the good news of a salvation that is never preached to them by their own pastors—a salvation that if attained and professed would bring upon their heads the wrathful anathemas of the papal hierarchy. To the Roman Catholics, more than to any people known to history, are the words of Christ applicable, "If the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!"

How can a Methodist who believes in the necessity of salvation, and in the present reality and infinite value of his own, remain coldly impassive to the spiritual bondage and deadly error of his Roman Catholic fellow-creatures?

Many of the members of the South America Conference were born, baptized, confirmed, and educated as Roman Catholics; others have lived for nearly half a century among them, and nemine contra dicente we affirm the truth of all that precedes the following signatures of our president and secretary.

CHARLES C. McCABE, President.

WILLIAM F. RICE, Secretary.

"WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?"

Dr. Lyman Abbott writes in an exceedingly beautiful and helpful vein on the above subject in The Outlook of last week. His thought is, that religion is not something apart from life, a fringe on the garment, like art or music, for which some men are capacitated and others are incapacitated. Religion is the art of living, living with the whole being in conformity with the will and thought and purpose of God.

Dr. Abbott sums up with these closing sentences:

"I do not disown the ritual or the creed; but religion is not what we think about religion, it is not the form in which we give expression to our religion; it is the spirit of faith and hope and love carried into all the common affairs of life. This is to follow Christ. Going to the church or to the prayer-meeting is not following Him. We go to church and we go to the prayer-meeting in order that when we go out from church and from the prayer-meetings we may carry the spirit of Christ which in the church and prayer-meeting has been ministered to us. Then, and only then, do we follow Him. I sometimes think that from heaven above we shall look not up, but down, to see the Christ who lived and loved and served and suffered and died, and we shall wonder that we lived on the same earth with Him, and were of the same mould with Him, and neither knew Him nor ourselves! And then we shall wish, with almost unutterable longing, that we might go back to earth once more, to be among the poor and the lowly, among the suffering and the needy, among the ignorant and the outcast, and have the divine glory that Christ had, and live the divine life that Christ lived."

COL. INGERSOLL'S MISTAKEN PROPHECY.

Twenty-five years ago Robert Ingersoll declared in a public lecture that the Bible was an exploded book; that its sales were falling off rapidly, and that within ten years it would not be read any more. But since then six Bible houses have been established and the sale of the Bible has been quadrupled. The American Bible Society alone issued more than 1,500,000 Bibles last year, and the British Foreign Bible Society more than 5,000,000. Other Bible companies show correspondingly large outputs. The total number of Bibles in English alone, produced in a single year, is upwards of 10,000,000 copies.

The Oxford Press turns out 20,000 Bibles in a week. More than 40,000 sheets of gold are used in lettering the volumes, and the skins of 100,000 animals go into Oxford Bible covers each year.

The British and Foreign Bible Society prints the Bible in 400 languages.

During the first year of America's rule in the Philippines, 10,700 Bibles were distributed there. Contrary to expectation, since the Boxer insurrection in China, the issue of Bibles for China last year was 428,000 copies.

The fact is, the Bible to-day is the most popular book in the world, and more copies are sold than of any hundred other books combined.—Lutheran Monthly.

WHY CATS WASH AFTER EATING.

You may have noticed, little friends,
That cats don't wash their faces
Before they eat, as children do
In all good Christian places.

Well, years ago a famous cat,
The pangs of hunger feeling,
Had chanced to catch a fine young mouse,
Who said, as he ceased squealing,

"All genteel folks their faces wash
Before they think of eating."
And, wishing to be thought well bred,
Puss heeded his entreating.

But when she raised her paw to wash,
Chance for escape affording,
The sly young mouse said his good-bye,
Without respect to wording.

A feline council met that day,
And passed, in solemn meeting,
A law forbidding any cat
To wash till after eating.

BISHOP FOSTER'S EULOGY OF THE BIBLE.

Marvellous book! Itself a parallel of every miracle and deliverance recorded in its pages. Proscribed and imprisoned? The angel of deliverance illuminated the darkness, stripped off the shackles, and awed into conscious obedience the self-opening doors. Exiled, it has created a new kingdom and shifted the centre and balance of power. Carried away captive, it has broken down rival altars and overthrown false gods, till the right of way has been accorded to it by friend and foe. Sold into bondage by false brethren, it has captured the hearts of its masters, and ascended the throne of dominion. Driven into the sea, it has gone over dry shod, seeing its enemies overwhelmed in the flood and itself singing the glad song of deliverance. Burned on the public square by the public executioner, it has risen phoenix-like and floated away in triumph, wearing the smoke of its own funeral pyre as a flag of victory. Scourged from city to city, it has gone through the capitals of the civilized world, leaving behind it a trail of light attesting its divine authority. Cast into the lepers' pest-house, it has purified the scales of contagion, restored the soft pink skin of smiling infancy, quickened the energies of romping youth, and recreated the sinews of heroic manhood. Betrayed by a kiss, it has stood erect in the calm majesty of eternity, amid the swarming minions of its enemies. Nailed to a felon's cross, it has illumined the darkness by the radiance of its own glory, and transformed the summits of sacrifice into a throne of universal judgment. Sealed into the gloom of a sepulcher, it has come forth with the echoing footsteps of Almighty God, rising to dominion over all intelligences. Marvellous Book, full of divine life and power! No one can touch even the hem of its garment without being healed. No one can come near enough even to stone it without being blessed. It stands alone, without a rival; even its enemies themselves being judges.

THE FARMER THE FOUNDATION.

The horny-handed son of toil, the erstwhile granger, who a few years ago was the foe of all railroad managers and corporations, is the basis of our good times in Wall street. Financiers and manipulators may mix and combine and manipulate securities as much as they please, but unless there is something to haul, the railroads cannot earn money. That something must come out of the ground originally. The farmer first and foremost, the miner next, coal, iron, and precious metal diggers, the lumberman last, all these must lift the wealth from the soil and start it moving on its beneficent way. The great railroad magnates here, the Harrimans, the Goulds, the Morgans, the Vanderbilts, the Rockfellers, are, in the final analysis, but tails to the granger's kite. Let the farmer strike for a season, or let nature frown upon his efforts, and the millions of these railroad magnates would melt away like snow before an April sun. But the farmer has not struck, and nature has smiled upon him, and consequently there are 2,600,000,000 bushels of corn ripening for the railroads to carry in the form of grain and live stock; 650,000,000 bushels of wheat, and millions of bushels of minor grain and products. The manufacturer can continue to make flat irons and carriages and corsets and hay rakes; the financiers can continue manufacturing stocks and bonds and the public will have the money to buy everything that is made, all because the farmer has tickled the earth and nature laughed. If nature continues to laugh for three weeks more the demagogue and the chronic pessimist are the only classes that will frown. Immigrants in number greater than the population of many of the far Western States, each with the money to pay a car fare, each with a mouth to feed and hands to produce, will this year land on our shores. Think of it! A new State added by immigration, to say nothing of the natural growth of population.—Exchange.

CATCHING A TRAIN IN CHINA.

MABEL SHATTUCK HAYNER.

In the great cities of America what a hurrying and scurrying there is to board a through Pullman train, which one knows will pull out majestically at the appointed moment, regardless of your or my comfort or discomfort!

Several years ago, one sunny day in Tien-Tsin, China, found the writer comfortably seated in a north-bound train, scheduled to leave at "thirteen o'clock."

It lacked a minute or two of the hour, and everything promised a speedy departure, when a perfect Babel of noises without brought the passengers to the car windows to see what could be the trouble.

Several panting and dripping chair coolies were violently gesticulating and debating, while from the red and green sedan chairs, which they had just set down, were alighting a Chinese mandarin of high rank and the women of his family.

His face was the picture of perplexity. Liveried servants, official style, costly garments were for the moment forgotten in his perturbation over trying to be on time for this wonderful "fire-wheel cart," this belching thing of iron and fire, which he was told would leave at a fixed time.

How plebian this unseemly haste! Neither he nor any of his ancestors had ever had such an experience. Hitherto his cavalcade of mule litters, chairs, and carts had awaited his pleasure for starting. But this was quite different! What if some of the family and luggage should board the train and some be left!

He hastened here and there, ordering about both sons and servants in the loudest of voices.

"Are all the little boys here? Where is the green chest? Who has the blue cloth bundle? Who has the bundle of caraway seed cakes? Where can we put the women? Are the waiting-maids all here?" All this, and more, in breathless excitement, as he hastens to and fro on the station platform.

The ladies entered my car at last, and stopped to gaze at me curiously, smiling and nodding in a friendly way as they hobbled on, supported by their women and taken to a private apartment.

Servants continue to pass in and out with parcels of all sizes and kinds, depositing them under seats and in racks, regardless of how much room they monopolized. The sons appear at intervals to assure their father that the baggage is safe in the second car behind, with servants guarding it. Still he is not quite sure, and rises nervously every few minutes to scream out of the rear door some question about the "pigskin trunk" or the "cash-bag."

All of this time the engine puffs and rings, setting the old man's nerves at highest tension. But still the train waits, and not until quiet is restored and we rest assured that no mistake has been made and that no smallest bundle has been overlooked, do we slowly pull out for the day's travel.

Twenty minutes late? What matter if in truth we can say: "All aboard!"

THE JUDICIAL ERMINE.

In olden times judges wore robes of ermine, not merely to keep them warm, but because the spotless white of the fur was supposed to be a symbol of the purity which should characterize a court of justice. We have heard much about the judicial ermine here in Virginia recently, and about its being smirched. How can this figurative judicial robe be smirched? Plainly it can be smirched by some misdeed of the man who wears it, and it can be smirched in no other way. There are, however, people, some of them good people, who believe that the ermine can be smirched by some one else who simply says something against the judge. Indeed, so high an ideal have many good Virginia people of the judicial ermine that they are horrified whenever anything is said that would seem to indicate that he who wears it had done wrong. Herein lies a difficulty in the way of our keeping our courts of justice pure, for it is perfectly clear that impure men have in one way and another found places on the bench here in Virginia, as everywhere else, and to keep silence concerning their misdoings will not mend their misdeeds or keep the ermine pure. Indeed, the only way in which the ermine can be purified is for those who know that wrongs have been committed in the name of justice to speak out, and let the facts be known that the wrongs may be righted. He who knowing and being able to prove that wrongs have been done in the name of justice does not speak out, is a traitor to the Commonwealth and to the cause of justice and righteousness.

Even The Christian Federation has been found fault with, not only by the enemies of righteousness, but by some most excellent people as well, because of its plain speaking along this line. We regret this greatly, but cannot be swerved from our purpose. Whenever we learn of any misdoing on the part of any Virginia judge, especially if this misdoing be for the purpose of favoring or shielding the iniquitous liquor traffic, we shall publish it to the world, only taking pains to assure ourselves beforehand that we are able to prove the truth of the assertion we make. The Christian Federation.

A LOCAL OPTION COUNTY AND ITS JAIL.

Craig county has been dry for years. Its citizens are prosperous. The county is noted for good morals, hospitality, and sending its boys and girls to college.

The Field Secretary was informed that they had had but two men in jail in two years. What a record for a mountain county in Southwest Virginia! In wet counties our jails are crowded and often contain twenty to thirty prisoners at one time, with six or seven crowded in one cell.

A Chesapeake and Ohio Railway engineer informed me that when Craig county was wet he feared to let his children go out on the street at night in the county seat. Men were intoxicated on the streets, at times shooting, making it unpleasant for the citizens. Now it is safe for children during the darkest hours. Yet the Anti-Saloon League can improve conditions there by creating sentiment against drinking. Too many jugs arrive at Craig's county seat. The Anti-Saloon League is needed even in local option counties and towns.—J. W. W.

"The tide of the nation's sentiment is already definitely set to the temperance channel. The liquor business, therefore, exists by sufferance in this land, and its only hope lies in furnishing the least possible provocation for the stirring up of the popular wrath."—Louisville Courier Journal.

Judge, sternly—Your face is very familiar. Have you been in this court before?

Prisoner—No, sir; but I'm a bartender at Farandon Hotel.—Exchange.

The Catholic Club of New York now refuses admittance to liquor dealers. The "troublesome times for the trade" predicted some months ago by the Washington Sentinel seem to have already arrived for the traders in the soul-destroying drink.

Every song has in it the echo of a requiem and a death rattle. Every moment is for them a pallbearer clothed in black walking by the casket of a stenchful corpse.

The Sin of Worrying.

Hogarth, the great caricaturist, once declared that he never saw a beautiful face without instantly thinking how he could distort it and make it look ridiculous. So people who are always worrying about the future are a species of sinful, morbid caricaturists, rendering hideous and repulsive even the sweetest and the tenderest blessings of the present day. They are like some of those self absorbed and absentminded people you meet and speak to upon the street. You may bow to them and talk to them, but they see not and hear not. They are in their imaginations a thousand miles away. Those people who are anticipating troubles can never pluck the flowers God has planted at their feet; they can never hear the birds, whose wings God has fashioned, singing over their heads; they can never look into the unfathomed sea of affection which God has rolled into the deep blue of a child's eye, because they are always living in the dark caverns, the reptile inhabited dungeons which their own evil imaginations have created.

In order to overcome this sin of worrying I want you to try an experiment. Every hour of every day try to think of the blessings God has given to you instead of trying to remember all your troubles. If you have a poor memory, I want you to take a long sheet of paper and write those blessings down as you think of them, and then every little while take up this paper and read over the list. You will need a very long sheet of paper when you once begin the list. You are going to be surprised, overwhelmingly surprised, at the great number of blessings you can put down.

I well remember, many years ago, when my father once gathered all his children together about his chair and gave to each one of us a long sheet of paper and told us to write down our blessings. At first I could not think of a thing to write, but after awhile the blessings, the many blessings, which I had begun to crowd into my brain. I wrote and wrote until after awhile I had to get another sheet of paper. Then I wrote and wrote until after awhile those blessings seemed to pile themselves up into a great mountain. And then, do you know, after I had been cataloguing my many blessings I was ashamed to think about any of my troubles! They seemed to be so small and insignificant in comparison with the mercies with which God had surrounded me. My brother, as you begin today to think of all your blessings I tell you bluntly and plainly it is a shame, a sinful shame, for you to have postponed so long learning a prayer of thanksgiving. It is a shame, a sinful shame, that you have postponed so long the day when you are willing to get down upon your knees and thank God for what he has done for you and for the blessings that have enriched your life.

A Hymn That Helps.

There are many different hymns sung in church, in prayer meeting and at the family altar, but there is no hymn that breathes in it a sweeter melody, no hymn which helps more to lead to a truer, happier, purer and holier Christian life than that hymn with the chorus:

Count your blessings; name them one by one;
Count your blessings; see what God has done.

This is a hymn that ought to be sung every day from the heart. It is a hymn which should aid in transforming a life of sinful worrying into one of trust and gratitude and holy joy.

Troubles cannot be rightly anticipated because we cannot rightly anticipate the grace God will give to his believing children, by means of which we shall be able to overcome our troubles when they arrive. For proof of the abundant grace and strength that are given when most needed let me point you to the many wonderful, glorious and triumphant Christian deathbed scenes that have been recorded. When Dr. Donne was dying, he said, in answer to a question: "I am as happy on earth as I can be and as sure of glory as if I were in it. I have nothing to do but step out of this bed into heaven." When Senator Foote of Vermont was dying, he looked, at the last, and cried: "I see it! I see it! The gates are wide open! Beautiful! Beautiful!" As Dr. Sewall of Washington city lay dying he cried out: "Oh, if I had a voice that would reach from pole to pole, I would proclaim it to all the world! Victory! Victory, through the blood of the Lamb!" But when we hear of such wonderful deathbed scenes we are apt to say to ourselves: "I do not see how any Christian could be happy when he is leaving behind wife, children, work and loved ones. I do not see how anybody could be happy because he is going away, while those who are near and dear to him are clinging to his side."

But, friend, the reason you cannot understand the glorious triumph of the dying Christian is because you cannot understand the infinite amount of divine re-enforcement which is given to God's children at the time the death angel comes. You cannot understand how that divine re-enforcement is able to let them look straight through the dark clouds of mystery into the face of Jesus, whose parting lips tell them that all is well. When your future troubles come, and they must come, God's grace, if you are a believing child, will be sufficient for you. God's grace, the infinite amount of which you cannot now estimate, will go with you down into the depths of sorrow, "though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."

Influences of Christian Faith.

Anticipating trouble is a sin, because it exhibits a lack of gospel faith to the unbelievers around you, who might otherwise be willing to believe in the atoning, saving, inspiring and recreating power of the blood of the Lamb. Talk as we may, we cannot get away from the overwhelming fact that every professing Christian is as a city set upon a hill for all unbelievers to look at and to be guided by. It has been said that no cook or chambermaid or butler or other employee ever entered the house of Phillips Brooks but he or she became a Christian, if not already one, through the influence of that great and good gospel minister of Boston. So our Christian lights cannot be hidden under a bushel. If they are false lights, the world will see that they are false and will despise them; if they are true lights, the world will follow those lights. What we say and do will influence others in reference to what they say and do for or against Christ.

But no man can safely let the future take care of itself unless he deals rightly with the present, and no man can deal rightly with the present unless he deals rightly with God, or, rather, lets God deal rightly with him. Are you and I in touch with Jesus Christ so that Christ can and will take charge of our future for us? If we are, we are eternally all right. If we are not in touch with Christ, we are eternally all wrong.

1. Instruction. Regular Course: This course is intended for those who do not expect to pursue their work further than graduation at the Institute. It is thorough, and of as high grade as that of any female school in the State, except Randolph-Macon Woman's College.

Woman's College Course! The Institute was opened the year after the Woman's College, and has been closely correlated to it from the beginning. The Institute, and every Department of the Institute, is in charge of a Graduate of Randolph Macon College or Randolph Macon Woman's College, and work at the Institute, approved by the faculty, is accepted at Face Value by the Woman's College.

Teachers Course! This course is arranged for those who wish to prepare themselves for teaching, especially in the public schools, but who have only a limited time, but yet do not wish to go to the State School, but wish to be in a CHRISTIAN SCHOOL. This work is under the care of teachers who have had thorough training in Pedagogy. A Model School gives to the students the necessary facilities for the practical application of the principles of teaching.

2. Influences. Positively Christian! The Institute is the property of the Church. It was built to give Christian education. Every teacher is a Christian. The students are continually thrown with the teachers. Every officer and teacher lives in the building and the girls meet them in the dining-room, reading-room, gymnasium, and in the daily walks, and in all the gatherings of the school life. There is great value in this. Nothing is more helpfu

in forming character than association with bright, cultivated, Christian women.

3. Cost. As low as possible, consistent with thoroughness of instruction and nourishing fare. No Rent or Taxes to pay. No Profits to be made for owners. The Institute was not built to make money. It has but one aim: It was established to train the minds of our girls under positive Christian influences at the lowest possible cost.

Editorial.

DR. JACKSON A HERETIC?

The doctrine of future punishment recently stirred Wesleyan Methodism as it has not been stirred before the present generation. The subject is likely to be a live issue in the theological discussions of the present century. In our own Church Dr. Jackson has published a book on the subject, which is exciting much comment. R. N. Price has recently discussed the matter in the Chattanooga News, and his article is given in full:

The Editor of the Daily News: In the Chattanooga News I see an article copied from your columns, headed: "Book of Rev. Jackson Will Cause a Sensation. Veteran Methodist Minister, in His 'Man an Eternal Proponent,' Expresses Views Antagonistic to the Doctrines of His Church." In the article you say that Dr. Jackson expects to be exiled from his Church. You say that Dr. Tigert refused to edit the book and send it forth under the imprimatur of the Church; but that the Southern Methodist Publishing House has printed it; and it will be handled by that house and sold over its counters in spite of the heterodoxy within its pages.

A copy of the Midland Methodist, the organ of the Holston and Tennessee Conferences, edited by Revs. James A. Burrow and Wm. M. Green, has been handed to me, in which there is an editorial in regard to Jackson's book, signed G., but as it is in the editorial columns, it is an official expression of that paper. In that Midland editorial the following paragraph occurs:

"While we do not agree with the author in his conclusions, we will be honest enough to state that our own theory as to future punishment might be regarded as less orthodox than his. Really, we would have to be excused if called upon, because of our innocence, to cast the first stone or even the second stone."

Then the Midland Methodist has placed itself on what it regards as an unorthodox platform, although it has not the courage to publish its heretical views; for the editors are evidently not ready to follow Jackson into exile.

I have not read Jackson's book; but I beg leave to make a few remarks as to the attitude in which his book places him to the Church, and as to the rights and duties of the Church in the premises.

My opinion is, that Jackson should not be prosecuted; and my reasons for this view are as follows:

If he is right, the Church should not oppose him, lest it be found fighting against God. If he is wrong as to his views, to prosecute him would be to enlist sympathy on his behalf and on behalf of his views. It would also have the effect of advertising his book and causing it to be read by thousands who otherwise would not hear of it.

Prosecution and expulsion would confer on him the crown of martyrdom; it would make him famous, would create a schism in the Church, and inaugurate an independent movement. It may be that all these things would be for the best, but those who do not agree with Dr. Jackson cannot consistently say this; and they cannot innocently take the steps which will bring about this state of affairs.

Besides, the Church dare not attempt to put the ban upon all freedom of opinion and of speech. Where there is no free thought there is no honest thought. Where there is no liberty of expression there can be nothing but cowardice and hypocrisy.

To say that a man shall not advance any views not in keeping with the commonly received views of his Church is to say that the Church is infallible, and to put a stop to all discovery and progress. Suppose, for instance, that the Methodist Church is wrong on the question of endless punishment, how is she ever to be righted if men are not permitted to entertain and publish views antagonistic to the commonly received views on this subject? Men should not be regarded as disloyal to the Church who advocate changes in the policy of the Church, seek to convince the membership of the necessity for such changes, and to bring about those changes by peaceable and constitutional methods. Neither should they be looked upon as heretics when they come to the conclusion that some of the tenets of the Church are false, and attempt to convince the ministry and membership of the propriety and necessity of their revision, or even a reversal of those tenets. The only proper method of bringing about changes in doctrine is that of argument and agitation. Where a man attempts to effect these changes by peaceable and lawful means, it seems to me that he is not a heretic in the criminal sense of that term. This is an age of inquiry, and you might as well dam up the Nile with bulrushes as to fetter its steps. Church laws and Church canons cannot fetter it. This is an age of learning and literature, and, therefore, an age of freedom of thought and expression. You may obstruct for a while the stream of investigation, but it will only be to have it break loose and deluge the country in the form of a revolution, bearing down everything before it like a Johnstown flood.

Dr. Jackson honestly believes that a portion of the Church is wrong on the question of probation, and he has felt it to be his duty to lead that portion into the light on this question. He could not do otherwise and be innocent, and he should not be dealt with harshly for obeying the dictates of an enlightened conscience.

But should he not have withdrawn from the Church before publishing his book? No. His object is to better his Church, not to leave it. His object is to heal it from within, not to fight it from without. He wants to fight in the union under the old flag.

By what law is Dr. Jackson to be tried? The twenty-five articles of religion in the Book of Discipline were intended to contain all the essentials of Christian doctrine, and they are silent on the subject of endless punishment. Why the silence? If the doctrine of endless punishment is true, it is tremendously true. Its importance is infinite. Why, then, is it unmentioned in the Articles of Religion? There can be no explanation of this silence, except that the framers of the articles, or rather the borrowers of them from the Episcopal creed, intended to allow latitude of opinion on this subject among Methodist people and preachers.

When a man enters the Church, he is not questioned on this subject. He is required to say that he believes in "everlasting life after death," but is not required to say that he believes in "everlasting death after life." When a man is received into the ministry, and when he is ordained, he is not required to say what he believes on this subject. Why these omissions, unless it is that the framers of the Methodist Discipline did not place the doctrine of endless punishment among the essentials of Christian belief?

If you try Jackson by the articles, he will be acquitted.

There is an intimation in your article that he will be tried by the standards. But the fifth article says:

"The Holy Scriptures contain all things necessary to salvation; so that whatsoever is not read therein, nor may be proved thereby, is not to be required of any man that it should be believed as an article of faith, or be thought requisite or necessary to salvation."

This throws us back at last on the Scriptures as the law of the Church. They are the only and sufficient rule of faith and practice. The Standards are only to be believed as far as they agree with the Scriptures; as far as they disagree with the Scriptures they are to be repudiated. According to this article, therefore, Jackson can only be tried by the Scriptures.

But it is not unlikely that the Standards will be trained on him. Now, I take the ground that the Church has no right to try any man by the Standards. First, because these Standards are human and fallible. Wesley, Watson, et al, may have been mistaken. "For we dare not make ourselves of the number, or compare ourselves with some that commend themselves; but they measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves, are not wise." We should compare ourselves not with Wesley and Watson, but with Christ and Paul.

But suppose Jackson is tried by the

His voice rose to a shriek. "Because when Billy 'ad money in 'is pocket hevery man in this bloomin' camp as meets an at hevery corner says, 'Ello, Billy, wat'll ye 'ave?' And there's wiskey at Slavin's, and there's wiskey in the shacks, and hevery 'oliday and hevery Sunday there's wiskey, and w'en ye feel bad it's wiskey, and w'en ye feel good it's wiskey, and heverywhere and halways it's wiskey, wiskey, wiskey! But," and he lifted his trembling hands above his head, "if ye stop the wiskey a-flowin' round this camp ye'll stop some o' these lads that's a-followin' me 'ard. Yes, you, and you, and you!" And his voice rose to a wild scream as he shook a trembling finger at one and another.

"Mon, it's fair grewsome tae hear him," said Geordie. "He's no' canny." And, reaching out for Billy as he went stumbling past, he pulled him down to a seat beside him, sayin': "Sit doon, lad; sit doon. We'll mak a mon o' ye yet." Then he rose and, using many r's, said, "Maister Chairmon, a' doot we'll juist hae to gie it up."

"Give it up?" called out Nixon. "Give up the league?"

"Na, na, lad, but juist the wee drap whusky. It's nae that guid anyway, and it's a terrible price. Mon, gin ye gang tae Henderson's in Buchanan street, in Gleska, ye ken, ye'll get mair for three an' saxpence than ye wull at Slavin's for $5, an' it'll no' nit ve mad like yon stuff, but it gangs doon smooth an' saft-like. But," regretfully, "ye'll no' can get it here, an' I'm thinkin' I'll juist sign yon teetotal thing." And up he strode to the table and put his name down in the book Craig had ready. Then to Billy he said: "Come awa, lad! Pit yer name doon, an' we'll stan' by ye."

Poor Billy looked around helplessly, his nerve all gone, and sat still. There was a swift rustle of garments, and Mrs. Mavor was beside him and, in a voice that only Billy and I could hear, said:

"You'll sign with me, Billy?"

Billy gazed at her with a hopeless look in his eyes and shook his little head. She leaned slightly toward him, smiling brightly, and, touching his arm gently, said:

"Come, Billy; there's no fear," and in a lower voice, "God will help you."

As Billy went up, following Mrs. Mavor close, a hush fell on the men until he had put his name to the pledge. Then they came up, man by man, and signed. But Craig sat with his head down till I touched his shoulder. He took my hand and held it fast, saying over and over, under his breath:

"Thank God! Thank God!"

And so the league was made.

CHAPTER VI.

BLACK ROCK RELIGION.

WHEN I grow weary with the conventions of religion and sick in my soul from feeding upon husks that the churches too often offer me in the shape of elaborate service and eloquent discourses, so that in my sickness I doubt and doubt, then I go back to the communion in Black Rock and the days preceding it, and the fever and the weariness leave me, and I grow humble and strong. The simplicity and rugged grandeur of the faith, the humble gratitude of the rough men I see about the table and the calm radiance of one saintly face rest and recall me.

Not its most enthusiastic apologist would call Black Rock a religious community, but it possessed in a marked degree that eminent Christian virtue of tolerance. All creeds, all shades of religious opinion, were allowed, and it was generally conceded that one was as good as another. It is fair to say, however, that Black Rock's catholicity was negative rather than positive. The only religion objectionable was that insisted upon as a necessity. It never occurred to any one to consider religion other than as a respectable if not ornamental addition to life in older lands.

During the weeks following the making of the league, however, this negative attitude toward things religious gave place to one of keen investigation and criticism. The indifference passed away and with it in a large measure the tolerance. Mr. Craig was responsible for the former of these changes, but hardly in fairness could he be held responsible for the latter. If any one more than another was to be blamed for the rise of intolerance in the village, that man was Geordie Crawford. He had his "lines" from the Established Kirk of Scotland, and when Mr. Craig announced his intention of having the sacrament of the Lord's supper observed Geordie produced his lines and handed them in. As no other man in the village was equipped with like spiritual credentials, Geordie constituted himself a kind of kirk session, charged with the double duty of guarding the entrance to the Lord's table and of keeping an eye upon the theological opinions of the community and more particularly upon such members of it as gave evidence of possessing any opinions definite enough for statement.

It came to be Mr. Craig's habit to drop into the leagueroom and toward the close of the evening to have a short Scripture lesson from the gospels. Geordie's opportunity came after the meeting was over and Mr. Craig had gone away. The men would hang about and talk the lesson over, expressing opinions favorable or unfavorable, as appeared to them good. Then it was that all sorts of views, religious and otherwise, were aired and examined. The originality of the ideas, the absolute disregard of the authority of church or creed, the frankness with which opinions were stated and the forcefulness of the language in which they were expressed combined to make the discussions altogether marvelous. The passage between Abe Baker, the stage driver, and Geordie was particularly rich. It followed upon a very telling lesson on the parable of the Pharisee and the publican.

The chief actors in that wonderful story were transferred to the Black Rock stage and were presented in miners' costume. Abe was particularly well pleased with the scoring of the "blanked old rooster who crowed so blanked high" and somewhat incensed at the quiet remark interjected by Geordie that "it was nae credit till a mon tae be a sinner," and when Geordie went on to urge the importance of right conduct and respectability Abe was led to pour forth vials of contemptuous wrath upon the Pharisees and hypocrites who thought themselves better than other people. But Geordie was quite unruffled and lamented the ignorance of men who, brought up in the "Epeescopawlyun or Methody" church, could hardly be expected to detect the Antinomian or Arminian heresies.

"Auntie Nomyun or Uncle Nomyun," replied Abe, boiling hot, "my mother was a Methodist, and I'll back any blanked Methodist against any blanked blank long faced, lantern jawed, skinfaint Presbyterian!" And this he was eager to maintain to any man's satisfaction if he would step aside.

Geordie was quite unmoved, but hastened to assure Abe that he meant no disrespect to his mother, who, he had "nae doot, was a clever enough bud-die, tae judge by her son." Abe was speedily appeased and offered to set up the drinks all round, but Geordie, with evident reluctance, had to decline, saying, "Na, na, lad; I'm a league man, ye ken." And I was sure that Geordie at that moment felt that membership in the league had its drawbacks.

Nor was Geordie too sure of Craig's orthodoxy, while, as to Mrs. Mavor, whose slave he was, he was in the habit of lamenting her doctrinal condition:

"She's a fine wumman, nae doot; but, puir cratur, she's fair carried awa' wi' the errors o' the Epeescopawlyuns."

It fell to Geordie, therefore, as a sacred duty, in view of the laxity of those who seemed to be the pillars of the church, to be all the more watchful and unyielding, but he was delightfully inconsistent when confronted with particulars. In conversation with him one night after one of the meetings, when he had been specially hard upon the ignorant and godless, I innocently changed the subject to Billy Breen, whom Geordie had taken to his shack since the night of the league. He was very proud of Billy's success in the fight against whisky, the credit of which he divided evenly between Mrs. Mavor and himself.

"He's fair daft about her," he explained to me, "an' I'll no deny but she's a great help—aye, a verra considerable assestance—but, mon, she doesna ken the whusky an' the inside o' a mon that's wantin' it. Aye, puir buddie, she diz her pairt, an' when ye're a bit restless an' thrawn after yer day's work it's like a walk in a bonny glen on a simmer eve, with the birds liltin' about, tae sit in yon roomie an' hear her sing. But when the night is on an' ye canna sleep, but wauken wi' an' awfu' thirst an' wi' dreams o' cozy firesides an' the bonny sparklin' glosses, as it is wi' puir Billy—aye, it's then ye need a mon wi' a guid grip beside ye."

"What do you do then, Geordie?" I asked.

"Oo, aye, I juist gang for a bit walk wi' the lad an' then pits the kettle on an' makes a cup o' tea or coffee, an' aff he gangs the sleep like a bairn."

"Poor Billy!" I said pityingly. "There is no hope for him in the future, I fear."

"Hoot awa, mon!" said Geordie quickly. "Ye wadna keep oot a puir crater frae creepin' in that's daein' his best?"

"But, Geordie," I remonstrated, "he doesn't know anything of the doctrines. I don't believe he could give us 'the chief end of man.'"

"An' wha's tae blame for that?" said Geordie, with fine indignation. "An' maybe ye remember the prood Pharisee an' the puir wumman that cam' creepin' in abint the Maister."

The mingled tenderness and indignation in Geordie's face were beautiful to see, so I meekly answered:

"Well, I hope Mr. Craig won't be too strict with the boys."

Geordie shot a suspicious glance at me, but I kept my face like a summer morn, and he replied cautiously:

"Aye, he's no' that street, but he maun exerceese discreemination."

Geordie was none the less determined, however, that Billy should "come forrit," but as to the manager, who was a member of the English church, and some others who had been confirmed years ago and had forgotten much and denied more, he was extremely doubtful and expressed himself in very decided words to the minister:

"Ye'll no be askin' forrit the Epeescopawlyun buddies. They juist ken naethin' ava."

But Mr. Craig looked at him for a moment and said, "Him that cometh unto me I will in nowise cast out," and Geordie was silent, though he continued doubtful.

With all these somewhat fantastic features, however, there was no mistaking the earnest spirit of the men. The meetings grew larger every night, and the interest became more intense. The singing became different. The men no longer simply shouted, but as Mr. Craig would call attention to the sentiment of the hymn the voices would attune themselves to the words. Instead of encouraging anything like emotional excitement Mr. Craig seemed to fear it.

PERTINENT FACTS.

BUILDING AND GROUNDS.

The Grounds comprise twenty-five acres, well located, elevated, with fine natural drainage.

The Building is a handsome brick building, erected specially for school work from plans, the outcome of practical experience. There are three stories and basement—main building 260x40 feet, with wing 60x40 feet; wide verandas; large and airy study hall, class-rooms, music hall, gymnasium, and bed-rooms (only two girls in a room); electric lights; water on every floor, with fire-plugs every fifty feet; Peck-Hammond system of heating (fresh air taken from outside, driven by fan over hot furnaces to the various parts of the building); Peck-Hammond system of sanitation (fire and evaporation, instead of drainage and sewers); all parts of building so connected that no exposure of pupils to weather necessary at any time.

CHARACTER.

I. CHRISTIAN.—It was built by the Methodist Church with one single purpose—namely, to furnish thorough instruction under positive Christian influences.

II. THOROUGH.—There are ten Randolph-Macon graduates in the Faculty. The Principal, Vice-Principal, and the heads of all departments are Randolph-Macon graduates, and have been specially commended by the Randolph-Macon faculty for the work. There is no vain pretence or show. "THOROUGH" is the first word and the last word in the work of the school.

III. SUCCESSFUL.—The purpose and work of the school have commended it to parents. GROWTH—Number of boarding pupils year by year for seven years—29, 58, 88, 136, 147, 153, 176. Number of officers and teachers in 1894, SIX; at present, TWENTY. Value of grounds and building in 1894, $25,000; at present, $65,000.

THREE COURSES.

REGULAR COURSE leads to Diploma of Graduation at the Institute.

TEACHER'S COURSE gives special preparation for those desiring to teach; Theoretical and Practical Pedagogy Courses. Pupils are taught to teach by actual teaching in Model School and criticism by teachers.

A PREACHER'S WIFE.

Mrs. J. W. Nicholson, wife of our preacher in charge of York circuit, died last week. She had been ill for several months. She had been at the hospital for some time, but had been removed home before her death. She was born and reared in Mecklenburg county, Virginia; her maiden name was Miss Bertie Scott Jeffress. For thirty-two years she had been a member of the church, and for many years a Methodist preacher's wife. She was rather quiet and retiring, except with those who knew her, but she had an unusually sweet and unselfish spirit, and her home was a pleasant and attractive place for her own or her husband's friends. She was a faithful wife and mother, and reared her children well. There is no loss in any home like that of the mother, but the loss seems to be greater even than usual in the home of a preacher, especially an itinerant preacher. Much as a man may love his people, the close friendships of life are not found in a few short years, and the pastor's family are more dependent upon each other than other families are. The hearts of his brethren will be very sympathetic with Bro. Nicholson in his great loss, and they will remember him and his as they kneel around their own family altars and think of the vacant chair at his hearthstone.

AT REST.

Dear Bro. Cannon.—Bro. J. E. Clarke's wife died October 2, 1902, at 10 o'clock A. M., and a large company of sympathizing and affectionate friends and neighbors "took up her body and buried it," and many of them doubtless went and told Jesus when the grave was filled. Each one of the large family of children, led by the sad father, laid a handful of flowers on mother's grave. Her last words on earth were: "My soul will soon go sweeping through the air washed in the blood of the Lamb." The neighborhood, church and pastor have lost a great deal, but God has been glorified. May God richest blessing rest upon sorrowing husband and children.

[The editor has spent some pleasant hours in the home of Bro. Clarke, and had learned to respect very highly the wife and mother, who has just been called home. She was frail in body, but strong in spirit. She had reared a large family of children in the fear of God, and they rise up to-day to call her blessed. Those who knew her are not surprised at her triumphant passage to the life beyond. The family have the sympathy and prayers of a large circle of friends.—Ed. Recorder.]

GENESIS OF PROTESTANTISM.

REV. R. H. BENNETT.

How history repeats itself! As far back as our authentic records reach, we find mankind prone to fall from a pure state of life and to abuse the power which he has gained in whatever way over his fellows. Injustice is often endured for long periods. Evil goes long unpunished. Abuses remain long uncorrected; but equally true is it that there is a limit to sufferance and the great law of compensation exists in all ages and under all systems. Great convulsions of society ensue in which man's baser passions are given full sway, the very foundations of faith seen dissolving into speculative chaos, and the whole fabric of society about to perish. The course of events is never sudden or causeless. And although these great upheavals are beheld with wonder by the generation among whom they occur, to the student of history it is always manifest, that just in proportion to the violence and magnitude of the catastrophe are the length of time, the variety of agencies, and the aggravation of the offences occupied in their preparation. Society emerges from these convulsions cleansed and purified, and continues to exist in a healthy state, until man's innate depravity, the accumulation of wealth or the centralization of power, renders him unmindful of the rights of his fellows, creed and conduct are corrupted and another lesson becomes necessary. These revolutions take place sometimes in the field of statecraft, their instrument being the sword; at other times the battle is one of creed, and tongue and pen are the weapons. More frequently the spheres of reform interlap and are even sometimes concentric. It is also to be said that civilization emerges from each such cataclysm with fresh power and improved conditions, and from each encounter carries fresh trophies into the future.

In no great movement have all these facts been more evident than in the great religious movement of the sixteenth century. It has been beheld with astonishment on account of its suddenness and rapid growth. Men continue to read with wonder of its ready reception and its tremendous influence. Yet was a great reform never more fully prepared, or a crisis in history more fully produced and foreshadowed by a longer list of causes and omens. Never was any revolution more sorely needed or presaged by a more dreadful catalogue of abuses in Church and State. And it is equally true that no reform was ever more complete in its value or more radical in its change. It has been said that the seeds of the French Revolution were sowing for ten or twelve generations, but we must call these generations centuries, and go back even to the time of Constantine's conversion in the fourth century, if we would seek the germs which resulted in the peace of Augsburg.

It is not so much the purpose of this paper to trace the melancholy steps by which the Church descended from her high estate of purity into well-nigh unfathomable depths of wickedness as to outline the conditions that preceded the great Reformation and rendered that Reformation imperative, if pure religion was to survive in the earth.

The first ordeal through which the Christian Church was called to pass was poverty, contempt, persecution and death. Confronted with these, it conquered and marched on with amazing strides through death and blood "unto the uttermost part of the earth." Failing here, the master strategist of evil changed his plans and played for permission the shrewdest trump card he has ever used against the Church of God, in the conversion of Constantine the Emperor of the world. Instead of burning the Church, the world now blessed, and that Church, which had remained so pure amid the flames of Nero's fires, had now to face the far more dangerous snares of prosperity and by the foul marriage of Church and State she soiled her robes of snow with a stain that became ever blacker as the growth of the power of the Church in secular matters increased and the see of Rome rose from a mere Bishop co-equal, with many others, to the sovereignty of the world in all matters both secular and divine.

The rise of the papacy is peculiarly interesting. In the post apostolic days we find that the Christians of a community chose certain elders or bishops to look after the finances of the church to assist the poor, to provide for the time and place of religious meetings and to conduct or supervise the worship. These elders did not at first give up their secular employments, and thus had little power above the rest of the congregation. But at the end of the second century we find one of the bishops in each community taking the lead, by general custom assuming the government of the Church, and gradually extending his authority over the isolated congregations. This was the beginning of the externalizing of the Church, and thus did the spirit of the supremacy of the priestly order above the laity first make its appearance. In time, probably from historical influence, there arose four great bishoprics or patriarchal sees, to whom all the Church, by mutual consent, seemed to look for guidance: viz: Alexandria, Antioch, Constantinople, and Rome. As disputes between the different localities, to whom would it be more natural to appeal than to the see of Rome. Rome, the capital of the empire, mistress of the world, the seat of the principal Church, the scene of the martyrdom of both St. Peter and St. Paul inspired men in ancient times with reverence and awe, which no modern city has been able to call forth. First some, and afterwards a great part of this reverence for "The Eternal City" was easily transferred to the Church in that place. Men came to consider the capital of the empire predestined metropolis of Christianity. And every time that the Bishop of Rome was called in as an arbitrator assumed more and more the air of an ex-officio judge. And while the clergy in each nation were accumulating riches and secular power, even to dethroning of kings, there was going apace this other dread power, destined to rise above prelates and cardinals and the highest dignitaries

Church and State. Nor must we forget the condition of society and government in all these ages. With every council split into factions, with every court filled with dissensions, with treachery on every battlefield, there was little resistance to be offered to the encroachments of the only power which knew its aims and followed them continually and with unswerving fidelity.

The claims of the Popedom to superiority are largely based on what are known as the False Decretals. These were said to be decrees of the early Bishops of Rome. And although they were proven after a time to be vile forgeries, yet the power gained through them by the Popes was too firmly established to be overthrown by their exposure. The first of these writings contains the fact, until then unknown by the Church, that St. Peter, shortly before his death, in an address to the brethren, appointed Clement, mentioned by Paul in his Epistle to the Philippians, as his successor and Bishop of Rome, giving him "the power of binding and loosing, which was given me by the Lord." Others of these letters give to the Roman see appellant jurisdiction in all causes, and forbid national councils to be held without his consent. Every Bishop, every prelate was made subservient and responsible to the Pope. Every accused person on appeal was made amenable to his court alone, and his decision was final. No new bishoprics were to be made, or any prelate changed from one district to another, without his approval. Upon these spurious productions was built the papal supremacy over the national churches—a fabric which, like many other errors, has remained standing long after its foundations have crumbled into dust.

With Gregory I. (chosen Pope A. D. 590) the power of the Roman pontiff may be said, in its true sense, to have begun. "Claims hitherto disputed," says Hallam in his Middle Ages, "or half preferred, assumed under his hand in more definite form, and nations too ignorant to compare precedents or discriminate principles, yielded to assertions confidently made by the authority which they most respected." By his very audacity and indomitable will Gregory compelled submission to his exactments. From this time on the Popes seemed to have thrown down the scaffold by which they had mounted, and to retain their power by the presence of divine authority. Continually increasing in its power, the Papacy asked in noon-day splendor from Gregory VII. (A. D. 1073) and Innocent III. (A. D. 1198), to Boniface VIII. (A. D. 1294). Did a monarch show himself unwilling to submit to the power of Rome, he was speedily excommunicated, his kingdom laid under an interdict, his throne declared vacant, his subjects absolved from their allegiance to him, and his dominions given to a prince who was willing to acknowledge the supremacy of the pope. We in this day can scarcely form any adequate idea of the dread power of the curse of Rome. An excommunicated person was by law incapable of bringing an action or of acting as a witness. His property might be seized and he himself detained in prison until he obtained absolution. All religious privileges were denied him. He was to be shunned by all his servants, kindred and acquaintance as if infested with the leprosy. At death his body was to be devoured by birds of prey or left to rot as carrion. This curse was equally effective in palace and in cottage. With Robert of France, excommunicated by Gregory V., but two servants remained, and those dared not touch the food which had been set before the king, but threw it into the fire. For the sin of a prince his whole dominions were laid under an interdict. Religious observances were entirely suspended. All churches were closed. Merely the rites of baptism and of extreme unction were permitted. No dead were buried. Ghastly corpses met the eye at every turn. Pestilence and death, of course, followed, until total and abject submission to the Pope gained for the suffering country a reluctant and costly pardon; and all this, merely because perchance the pride of a Bishop or cardinal had been wounded. In short, the power of the Pope was absolute. The record reads like a dream. Not a monarch was to be warred against, not a Bishop appointed or deposed, not an act of any importance to be performed by any nation without his approval.

During these years untold wealth flowed into the coffers of the cathedrals. It was forced upon the mind of the wealthy sinner, that heaven could not be more satisfactorily appeased than by liberal presents to its earthly representatives. To die without leaving anything to the Church was considered the grossest error, little short of spiritual suicide. To many a poor wretch in the last agony, the hope of salvation was held out on condition of his disinheriting his legal heirs and bestowing his possessions (often vast ones) upon the Church. Many a bishopric was purchased from Rome, and the money for the payment wrung amid the tears of the orphan from the scanty pittance of the widow. And as if these means were not sufficient to gratify the avarice of the priests, they prostituted their knowledge of writing to forge testaments and deeds which readily imposed upon an ignorant people. It is given upon authority that the Church drew from England alone during the thirteenth century from sixty to seventy thousand marks every year—a sum far exceeding the royal revenue. What must have been the untold wealth in the coffers of Rome, if this much was received from a single country!

As the Church became more and more debased the greed and licentiousness of the clergy became everywhere evident, and the phrase "viler than a priest" was upon every tongue. Not an act was to be performed in the privacy of one's home which was not subject to their supervision, and yet these very supervisors of conduct, these representatives of God on earth, these presumably pure and holy ones, became monsters of vice and crime. There is no foul deed of which they were not accused and convicted. But no power could harm them save that of Rome, and this they took good care to propitiate by abject obedience and costly gifts. To see how far they had departed from their pristine severity, note these extracts from the code of the Franciscan friars:

(1) "They (the brethren) are to keep the holy gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, living in obedience, without anything that they can call their own, and in chastity.

(6) "All the brethren are to be clad in mean habits, and may blessedly mend them with sacks and other pieces.

(8) "The brethren are to be meek, modest, mild, peaceable and humble.

(9) "They are not to ride unless some manifest necessity or infirmity oblige them.

(11) "I firmly enjoin upon all the brothers that they upon no account receive any money by themselves or by a third person.

(21) "The brothers are strictly commanded to keep no suspicious company, or to be familiar with women. Nor that they do not become gossips of nuns or women, lest upon this account there arise any scandal among the brethren or upon the brothers."

Let any one read these rules and then turn to Chaucer's vivid description of the friar in the Canterbury Tales, who loved eating and drinking, had many a dainty horse in his stable, the fleetest greyhounds in his kennels. Instead of sackcloth, he wore the finest silks, trimmed with the costliest furs. Familiar with the best gentry in the country, he let the old things pass, and clung closely to the new manners. Where was there in Europe a friar to be found clad in coarse haircloth or walking barefoot (unless on some state occasion to be seen of men) rather than riding the finest horses, or frugal in his manners of life, or modest, or receiving no money, or shunning evil company of either sex?

Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 11, 1902.

To the Bishop and Members of the Virginia Annual Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Dear Fathers and Brethren,—As you are aware the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at its recent session in Dallas, Texas, enacted a law providing for the raising of a fund for the more adequate support of our superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans of our deceased preachers, and showed their appreciation of the importance of the measure by raising more than $20,000 as the beginning of a fund of $5,000,000 to be raised and set apart for this sacred purpose.

This amount in cash and notes the Conference ordered put into the hands of the Trustees of the Church, and instructed that Board to undertake the raising of the fund.

In accordance with this action the Board of Trustees, on the 27th of August, 1902, elected the Rev. A. F. Watkins, D. D., of the Mississippi Conference, General Agent for the Superannuated Endowment Fund, and instructed him to represent them throughout the Church in the work of raising this amount. We hope Dr. Watkins will be able to visit your Conference during the present session, and we bespeak for him your cordial co-operation in the work committed to him.

In order that you may aid us in carrying out the instructions of the General Conference, we respectfully solicit your favorable consideration of the following requests:

1. That you will by formal action give this enterprise of the Church the endorsement of your body.

2. That you will, if possible, provide for a mass-meeting to be held during the session of the Conference, at which addresses shall be delivered in the interest of this cause and a collection taken for this fund.

3. That you will by resolution instruct your presiding elders and pastors to promote the success of the campaign in every possible way, making it the duty of the former to make special mention of this cause in their District and Quarterly Conferences, and of the latter to present the cause and take a public collection for its benefit in every congregation of their pastoral charges, this collection to be taken at an early date (say within sixty days) after the adjournment of the Conference session.

Realizing that this is your work, and we your servants for Christ's sake, and feeling our helplessness without your active and prayerful co-operation, we are,

Yours fraternally,

EVANGELIST STUART'S TRIBUTE TO THE LATE J. E. SCHOOLFIELD.

I have just returned to Virginia on evangelistic work. I hear on all sides the deepest regret at the death of the much-beloved James Schoolfield. Few men have lived in Virginia who have left so sweet a memory in the minds of all the people. His pure, humble, faithful life still is with us. I have met few men in my years of ministry who have more deeply impressed me than Bro. Schoolfield. His honesty of purpose, his genuineness of character won for him love and admiration wherever he went. He was one of the evangelists against whom nothing could be said; conservative, sure, pure, sound. He did a great work, which will live long after him. I mentioned his name publicly in Richmond in one of my sermons, and one of the leading pastors cried out, "God bless the memory of Bro. Schoolfield," and the amens and tears that followed showed how deeply he was held in the respect and love of the people here. I thank God I have known him; I expect to know him in that better country. May God comfort and lead his loved ones.—Geo. R. Stuart, in Danville Methodist.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

LESSON III, FOURTH QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, OCT. 19.

Text of the Lesson. Josh. vi. 8-20.
Memory Verse. 20—Golden Text, Heb. xi. 30—Commentary Prepared
by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1902, by American Press Association.]

The title of this lesson is the fall of Jericho, and the verses assigned are as above or only verses 12 to 20, but I suggest nothing less than the whole chapter, with a glance at the preceding chapter and its connection with the previous lesson, in which we saw the hand of the Lord dividing the Jordan for Israel to cross over, that all people might know and fear Him for their good. In chapter v we see the rite of circumcision and the ordinance of the Passover, the one suggestive of death to the flesh, no good thing in us, and the other of redemption by the blood of the Lamb. Only thus can the reproach of sin and of this evil world be taken from us (v, 9). In v, 12, we read that the manna ceased not until they had eaten the corn of the land, and the Lord changes not, yet some cannot trust Him for their daily bread. In v, 13-15, we see the real Captain taking command and Joshua submissively taking his right place, instructed by the unshod foot that the whole affair was the Lord's and not his. Compare Ex. iii, 5, and contrast Josh. i, 3. Now, in chapter vi we have the victory at Jericho by the same mighty hand that divided the Red sea and the Jordan, and it was manifest to all that the Lord was with Joshua (vi, 27).

1-5. And the Lord said unto Joshua, See, I have given into thine hand Jericho.

Thus He assured him, and then instructed him just what to do and told him what would happen, and, however unlikely or improbable it seemed, faith accepted the assurance and expected the result.

6, 7. And Joshua, the son of Nun, called the priests and said unto them, Take up the ark of the covenant.

The Lord wants a willing and obedient people on whose behalf and through whom He can show His power (Isa. i, 19; II Chron. xvi, 9). If we were only willing to be counted foolish by the wisdom of this world, then the wisdom and the power of God would be seen in us.

8-11. So the ark of the Lord compassed the city, going about it once, and they came into the camp and lodged in the camp.

Both Joshua and all the priests and the people perfectly obedient to the Great Captain of the Lord's host! Implicit faith and unquestioning obedience are what God desires and delights in. No voice of man was heard, but just the sound of the trumpets as they marched this first time around the city, probably gazed upon in wonder by those in the city, who may have assembled on the walls to see this strange sight. What was accomplished? Seemingly nothing. But they obeyed God, and that is everything.

12-14. And the second day they compassed the city once and returned into the camp. So they did six days.

Seven priests with seven trumpets, a perfect testimony to the power of the atonement which shall yet lead to the complete overthrow of all enemies, and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father (Rev. xvii, 14; Phil. ii, 11). The ark proclaims the righteousness which God demands and provides, and Isa. xxxiii, 17, proclaims that a King shall reign in righteousness and the work of righteousness shall be peace. It may seem to some that as little is now being accomplished as was accomplished by those six days seemingly foolish and useless processions, but wait.

15, 16. Joshua said unto the people, Shout, for the Lord hath given you the city.

Six times more around the city with no sound but that of the trumpets; twelve times in all, and seemingly nothing accomplished, but God's time has now come. It is the thirteenth round when at Joshua's command the more than 600,000 voices break forth with a shout of victory because they believed God and obeyed His servant.

17-19. All the silver and gold and vessels of brass and iron are holiness unto the Lord (margin).

Therefore they were instructed not to take any for themselves, but to put all into the treasury of the Lord, while they utterly destroyed all the inhabitants except Rahab and her household.

20. The wall fell down flat, so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him, and they took the city.

Just as the Lord had said so it came to pass, and it always will be so, for see Isa. xiv, 24; Ps. xxxiii, 10, 11, and it therefore becomes us ever to say, "I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me" (Acts xxvii, 25), and act accordingly. The verses following tell us that all the living in the city, both man and beast, were utterly destroyed except Rahab and her household. The New Testament record of the overthrow of Jericho and the salvation of Rahab is summed up in the few lines of Heb. xi, 30, 31, and faith in God is the heart of it. The evidence of her faith and the assurance of her safety were the scarlet line in her window (chapter ii, 18, 21), and it is to me very interesting and suggestive that the Hebrew word translated "line" is the identical word which in Ps. lxii, 5; lxxi, 5; Jer. xxix, 11, and elsewhere is translated "expectation" and "hope." Her expectation or hope was a scarlet one, and it was a sure one, and so the believer's expectation is as sure as the blood of Christ can make it. As all in Rahab's household were saved by her faith, let your faith take hold of God for all your household.

EPWORTH LEAGUE.

Topic for the Week Beginning Oct. 19, "Self Mastery"—Text, I Cor. ix, 25; Gal. v, 16-26.

"I keep my body under lest * * * I should be a castaway." "Better is he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

It is one of the clearest of facts that we are spirit in a physical body. Each of these depends on and influences the other. Both grow and ought to grow harmoniously, the body ever more fully meeting the needs of the spirit and the spirit securing greater perfection and grace for the body.

This can be done only as the spirit rules itself and the body according to reason. The powers of both are so various and their interworking so complex that unless reason maintains its mastery and direction of all parts some faculty is overdeveloped, others underdeveloped and the whole nature and character distorted and unbalanced. Every appetite of both body and spirit expresses some need of the nature and should be satisfied at proper times in right manner and degree, having due regard to all other cravings and hungers of the different faculties. The craving for food and drink should not go unheeded, but should be met in such a manner as to aid and not to injure all powers of mind as well as body. This needs care and control of reason as to kind of food, quantities to be taken and times when used. Exercise and sleep are similar in their need of rational control and direction. So of powers of mind and spirit; imagination, affection, hope, determination and every other activity of the inner self should be cultivated, fed and made to do its share as part of a unity in proper place and proportion.

The failures of life are most largely due to lack of self control. Men and women of middle age are common who have some one or two faculties developed out of all proportion to the rest. The result is in many cases most disastrous. In every community tragedies are enacted and lives wrecked because in childhood self control was not acquired. No position of wealth or advantage of any kind can make good the lack of this personal mastery of self. If one has never conquered control of appetite for drink, money but makes more easy the wreck in which all prospects end. At one of our largest eastern colleges a few years since a young man from one of the most aristocratic families in the land, who had an allowance of $2,000 per month, at the age of seventeen years was arrested in his rooms for disorderly conduct which had become unendurable, and he was expelled. The greater the opportunity and advantage the worse the disaster when the master hand no longer controls. The laws of God cannot be defied and disobeyed without disaster.

Every child has the right to be taught self mastery. If parents neglect the discipline and training, the young man and woman should take it up and persist until victory is secured by the help of God's Spirit.

Better Than All the Lecturing.

There are many men wonderfully able in telling other people that they ought not to have come into trouble. They point out where the man got wrong. They tell him with a tongue sharper than a two edged sword that he ought not to have got wrong at that point. They lacerate him, scalp him, vivisection him and turn him out in the cold. One little loaf of bread would have been better than all the lecturing. It would have prepared the way for the right sort of exhortation. This is Christ's representation of Himself to the world, and this is His representation of God. He says that if we will go back with a prayer of confession on our lips the Lord will not allow us to get through it. He will allow us to begin it, but before we have ended it He will smother us in His arms.—Dr. Joseph Parker.

Stormy Days.

Does it rain today? Is it dark and gloomy? That is all right; there must be some stormy days. Tomorrow the clouds will have a silvery lining or disappear entirely. Does the sun shine? Enjoy the sunshine. Tomorrow may be bright also. Are you well? Enjoy your health and use it to the best advantage. Are you ill? Then it is a day in which to be patient and endure cheerfully. Are you free from trouble? Then it is a thanksgiving day. Are you carrying heavy burdens for yourself or others? Then it is a day for rolling off your burdens at the foot of the cross.—Louise Heywood.

Room for the Gospel.

There will always be room for the gospel of Christ. While the human heart remains as it is the atonement can never lose its interest. Life is made up of two questions—where do we come from and where are we going. If Jesus failed to solve it, then we can never know. His solution may be foolishness to some, but to those who believe it becomes the power of God to salvation. Faith in the unseen is essential to him who would know.—Presbyterian Journal.

Good Things to Learn.

Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine.

Learn how to tell a story. A well told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sickroom.

Learn to stop croaking. If you cannot see any good in the world, keep it bad to yourself.—Lutheran Observer.

In the Great Needs of Life.

Every good book is a blessing to him who reads it, but in the great needs of life and in the hour of death there is but one book, and that book is the Bible.—Reformed Church Messenger.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHT.

Gems Gleaned From the Teaching of All Denominations.

The most endearing institution of earth is the church.—The Late Rev. Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage.

The Soul's Great Need.

Never did individual souls need the knowledge of Christ more than today.—Rev. Dr. Cadman, Congregationalist, Brooklyn.
